THE CENTURY DICTIONARY

PREPARED UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCE OF WILLIAM DWIGHT WHITNEY, PH. D., LL. D.

PROFESSOR OF COMPARATIVE PHILOLOGY AND SANSKRIT IN YALE UNIVERSITY

THE plan of "The Century Dictionary" includes three things: the construction of a general dictionary of the English language which shall be serviceable for every literary and practical use; a more complete collection of the technical terms of the various sciences, arts, trades, and professions than has yet been attempted; and the addition to the definitions proper of such related encyclopedic matter, with pictorial illustrations, as shall constitute a convenient book of general reference.

About 200,000 words will be defined. The Dictionary will be a practically complete record of all the noteworthy words which have been in use since English literature has existed, especially of all that wealth of new words and of applications of old words which has sprung from the development of the thought and life of the nineteenth century. It will record not merely the written language, but the spoken language as well (that is, all important provincial and colloquial words), and it will include (in the one alphabetical order of the Dictionary) abbreviations and such foreign words and phrases as have become a familiar part of English speech.

THE ETYMOLOGIES.

The etymologies have been written anew on a uniform plan, and in accordance with the established principles of comparative philology. It has been possible in many cases, by means of the fresh material at the disposal of the etymologist, to clear up doubts or difficulties hitherto resting upon the history of particular words, to decide definitely in favor of one of several suggested etymologies, to discard numerous current errors, and to give for the first time the history of many words of which the etymologies were previously unknown or erroneously stated. Beginning with the current accepted form of spelling, each important word has been traced back through earlier forms to its remotest known origin. The various prefixes and suffixes useful in the formation of English words are treated very fully in separate articles.

HOMONYMS.

Words of various origin and meaning but of the same spelling, have been distinguished by small superior figures (1, 2, 3, etc.). In numbering these homonyms the rule has been to give precedence to the oldest or the most familiar, or to that one which is most nearly English in origin. The superior numbers apply not so much to the individual word as to the group or root to which it belongs, hence the different grammatical uses of the same homonym are numbered alike when they are separately entered in the Dictionary. Thus a verb and a noun of the same origin and the same present spelling receive the same superior number. But when two words of the same form and of the same radical origin now differ considerably in meaning, so as to be used as different words, they are separately numbered.

THE ORTHOGRAPHY.

Of the great body of words constituting the familiar language the spelling is determined by well-established usage, and, however accidental and unacceptable, in many cases, it may be, it is not the office of a dictionary like this to propose improvements, or to adopt those which have been proposed and have not yet won some degree of acceptance and use. But there are also considerable classes as to which usage is wavering, more than one form being sanctioned by excellent authorities, either in this country or Great Britain, or in both. Familiar examples are words ending in or or our (as labor, labour), in er or re (as center, centre), in ize or ise (as civilize, civilise); those having a single or double consonant after an unaccented vowel (as traveler, traveller), or spelled with e or with a or æ (as hemorrhage, hæmorrhage); and so on. In such cases both forms are given, with an expressed preference for the briefer one or the one more accordant with native analogies.

THE PRONUNCIATION.

No attempt has been made to record all the varieties of popular or even educated utterance, or to report the determinations made by different recognized authorities. It has been necessary rather to make a selection of words to which alternative pronunciations should be accorded, and to give preference among these according to the circumstances of each particular case, in view of the general analogies and tendencies of English utterance. The scheme by which the pronunciation is indicated is quite simple, avoiding over-refinement in the discrimination of sounds, and being designed to be readily understood and used. (See Key to Pronunciation on back cover.)

DEFINITIONS OF COMMON WORDS.

In the preparation of the definitions of common words, there has been at hand, besides the material generally accessible to students of the language, a special collection of quotations selected for this work from English books of all kinds and of all periods of the language, which is probably much larger than any which has hitherto been made for the use of an English dictionary, except that accumulated for the Philological Society of London. Thousands of non-technical words, many of them occurring in the classics of the language, and thousands of meanings, many of them familiar, which have not hitherto been noticed by the dictionaries, have in this way been obtained. The arrangement of the definitions historically, in the order in which the senses defined have entered the language, has been adopted wherever possible.

THE QUOTATIONS.

These form a very large collection (about 200,000), representing all periods and branches of English literature. The classics of the language have been drawn upon, and valuable citations have been made from less famous authors in all departments of literature. American writers especially are represented in greater fullness than in any similar work. A list of authors and works (and editions) cited will be published with the concluding part of the Dictionary.

DEFINITIONS OF TECHNICAL TERMS.

Much space has been devoted to the special terms of the various sciences, fine arts, mechanical arts, professions, and trades, and much care has been bestowed upon their treatment. They have been collected by an extended search through all branches of literature, with the design of providing a very complete and many-sided technical dictionary. Many thousands of words have thus been gathered which have never before been recorded in a general dictionary, or even in special glossaries. To the biological sciences a degree of prominence has been given corresponding to the remarkable recent increase in their vocabulary. The now material in the departments of biology and zoölogy includes not less than five thousand words and senses not recorded even in special dictionaries. In the treatment of physical and mathematical sciences, of the mechanical arts and trades, and of the philological sciences, an equally broad method has been adopted. In the definition of theological and ecclesiastical terms, the aim of the Dictionary has been to present all the special doctrines of the different divisions of the Church in such a manner as to convey to the reader the actual intent of those who accept them. In defining legal terms the design has been to offer all the information that is needed by the general reader, and also to aid the professional reader by giving in a concise form all the important technical words and meanings. Special attention has also been paid to the definitions of the principal terms of painting, etching, engraving, and various other art-processes; of architecture, sculpture, archæology, decorative art, ceramics, etc.; of musical terms, nautical and military terms, etc.

ENCYCLOPÉDIC FEATURES.

The inclusion of so extensive and varied a vocabulary, the introduction of special phrases, and the full description of things often found essential to an intelligible definition of their names, would alone have given to this Dictionary a distinctly encyclopedic character. It has, however, been deemed desirable to go somewhat further in this direction than these conditions render strictly necessary.

Accordingly, not only have many technical matters been treated with unusual fullness, but much practical information of a kind which dictionaries have hitherto excluded has been added. The result is that "The Century Dictionary" covers to a great extent the field of the ordinary encyclopedia, with this principal difference—that the information given is for the most part distributed under the individual words and phrases with which it is connected, instead of being collected under a few general topics. Proper names, both biographical and geographical, are of course omitted, except as they appear in derivative adjectives, as Darwinian from Darwin, or Indian from India. The alphabetical distribution of the encyclopedic matter under a large number of words will, it is believed, be found to be particularly helpful in the search for those details which are generally looked for in works of reference.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

The pictorial illustrations have been so selected and executed as to be subordinate to the text, while possessing a considerable degree of independent suggestiveness and artistic value. To secure technical accuracy, the illustrations have, as a rule, been selected by the specialists in charge of the various departments, and have in all cases been examined by them in proofs. The cuts number about six thousand.

MODE OF ISSUE, PRICE, ETC.

"The Century Dictionary" will be comprised in about 6,500 quarto pages. It is published by subscription and in twenty-four parts or sections, to be finally bound into six quarto volumes, if desired by the subscriber. These sections will be issued about once a month. The price of the sections is $2.50 each, and no subscriptions are taken except for the entire work.

The plan for the Dictionary is more fully described in the preface (of which the above is in part a condensation), which accompanies the first section, and to which reference is made.

A list of the abbreviations used in the etymologies and definitions, and keys to pronunciations and to signs used in the etymologies, will be found on the back cover-lining.

You wrong her, sir; if I were she I'd have

The law on you for that.

Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One, v. 2.

junta (jun'tā), n. [= F. junta, < Sp. junta (orig. fem. of junto, used as pp. of juntar, convoke, congregate) = Pg. junta, f., a council, meeting, < L. junctus, fem. of junctus, joined, pp. of jungere, join; see join. Cf. junto.] 1. A meeting; a council. See junto. Specifically—2. In Spain, a consultative or legislative assembly, either for the whole country or for one of its separate parts. The most celebrated juntas in history were that convened by Napoleon in 1808 and the later revolutionary juntas.

I had also Audience of the King [of Spain], to whom I delivered two Memorials since, in his Majesty's Name of Great Britain, that a particular Junta of some of the Council of State and War might be appointed to determine the Business. Howell, Letters, l. iii. 10.

junto (jun'tō), n. [An erroneous form of junta, < Sp. junta, a council; see junta. The E. form junto came into use at a time when Sp. words in -a were commonly taken with the term, -o, appar. as seeming more Spanish. Cf. bastinado, < Sp. bastonada.] A private council or assembly; a combination of persons openly or secretly engaged for a common purpose, especially of a political character; a club of partisans or intriguers; a faction; a cabal; specifically, in Eng. hist., a group of leading Whig politicians in the reigns of William III. and Anne, of whom the most important were Somers, Wharton, Russell, and Montague.

How venerable were this junto! How admirable this assembly! Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), l. 382.

The puzzling sons of party next appeared, In dark cabals and mighty juntos met. Thomson, Castle of Indolence, l.

That the republic might be governed by lawful magistrates, and not by a junto of particular persons. J. Adams, Works, v. 98.

Essex Junto, in U. S. hist., a name, first used about 1781, which was chiefly applied to a group of extreme Federalist leaders, mostly connected with Essex county, Massachusetts, about the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century. During the presidency of John Adams they were adherents of Hamilton rather than of the President. Later the name was applied to the Federalists in general.—Syn. Faction, Camarilla, etc. See cabal.

jupardiet, n. A Middle English form of jeopardy.

jupartiet, n. An early form of jeopardy.

jupati-palm (jō'pa-tō-pām), n. [< jupati, a S. Amer. name, + E. palm.] Raphia tadi-gera, a palm which grows on the rich alluvial soil on the banks of the Lower Amazon and Pará rivers in Brazil. It has cylindrical leaf-stalks, which measure from 12 to 15 feet in length, and are used by the natives for a variety of purposes, as for the walls of houses and for baskets and boxes.

jupe (jōp), n. [Also jupe, jub (Florio); < ME. jupe, gipe (= MHG. jupe, jupe, jopp, jope, gippe, gippe), < OF. jupe, jupe, jupe, jubbe, gipe, gippe, a silk stuff, a garment made of it, F. jupe = Pr. jupa = It. giuppa, giubba (ML. jupa). < Sp. juba (al-juba), < Ar. jubbah, al-jubbah, a garment so called; see jubbah. MHG. schübe, (G. schaupe, is prob. from the same source. The name was applied to various forms of garments. Hence jupon.] Same as jupon.

This play of ours, just like some vest or jup Worn twice or thrice, was carefully laid up. Flecknoe, Epigrams (1670).

jupel, n. [OF., also jupet, jupiel, dim. of jupe, a jupe; see jupe.] Same as jupon.

jupette (jō'pēt'), n. [Dim. of jupe.] A jupon having a very short skirt.

Jupiter (jō'pi-tēr), n. [In older English frequently Juppiter; = F. Sp. Pg. Jupiter, < L. Juppiter, more correctly Juppiter, OL. Jouppiter = (Gr. Ζεύς πατήρ, voc. Ζεῦ πάτερ = Skt. Dyauṣ pitar, lit. 'Jove (Zeus) father': see Jove, Zeus, deity, and father.] 1. In Rom. myth., the supreme deity, the parallel of the Greek Zeus, and the embodiment of the might and national dignity of the Romans. The central seat of his cult was the Capitoline Hill at Rome, where he had the title of Optumus Maximus (Best Greatest). He was primarily a divinity of the sky, and hence was considered to be the originator of all atmospheric changes. His weapon was the thunderbolt. He controlled and directed the future, and sacrifices were offered to secure his favor at the beginning of every undertaking. He was also the guardian of property, whether of the state or of individuals. White, the color of the light of day, was sacred to him; hence, white animals were offered to him in sacrifice, his priests wore white caps, his chariot was drawn by four white horses, and the consuls were dressed in white when they sacrificed to him upon assuming office. The eagle was especially consecrated to him. The surviving artistic representations of Jupiter are comparatively late, and betray Greek influence, imitating the type of the Greek Zeus. Also called Jove.

2. The brightest of the superior planets, and the largest body of the solar system except the sun itself. Its sidereal period of revolution is 11.86198 Julian years, and its synodical period 399 days. Its mean distance from the sun is about 483,000,000 miles. Its equatorial diameter at its mean distance subtends an angle of 38", so that its real diameter is about one tenth of that of the sun (which subtends 1,922"), and about 11 times that of the earth (the solar parallax being 8".9). Jupiter is flattened at the poles by no less than one seventeenth of its diameter. Its mass is about 317 1/2 of that of the sun, or 304 times that of the earth, making its mean density only 1.3, that of the earth being taken at 5.5. Gravity at its surface is 2 1/2 times that at the earth. The most remarkable feature of the appearance of this planet is the equatorial fascia or bands which cross its disk. These fasciae exist generally for months or even years, but sometimes form in a few hours. They sometimes have a breadth of one sixth of the apparent disk of the planet. There are also spots of much greater permanence. It is, however, probable that no solid matter can be seen, and quite doubtful whether any exists in the planet. The spots revolve about the axis in 9 hours, 55 minutes, and 35 seconds, but the white clouds in 5 1/2 minutes less time. From his photometric observations, Zollner calculates the albedo of Jupiter to be 0.6, so high a value as to suggest that the planet must be self-luminous. Jupiter has four satellites or moons. Their periods of revolution are as follows: I. 1d. 18h. 28m. 35.945s.; II. 3d. 13h. 17m. 53.735s.; III. 7d. 3h. 59m. 35.548s.; IV. 16d. 18h. 5m. 6.928s.

3. In alchemy, tin, which was supposed to be under the control of the planet Jupiter.—4. In her., the tincture azure or blue in blazoning by the planets. See blazon, n., 2.—5. In zoöl., a finback whale. Also called Jupiter-fish.

Rondelet . . . gives a figure of a "Balena ura" . . . which the whale fishers of Saintonge call Gibbar, or gibbero dorso. . . . From this provincial name came Gibbartas, tubartas, jubart, Jubartes, Jupiter, etc. J. H. Trumbull, in Fisheries of U. S. (1884), l. 29.

Jupiter's-beard (jō'pi-tēr-z-bērd), n. 1. The houseleek, Sempervivum tectorum.—2. A never-green leguminous plant, Anthyllis Barba-Jovis, also called silver-bush; also, less properly, Anthyllis Vulvararia, or lady's-fingers.—3. A large fungus with a white fibrous margin, Radulum quercinum (Hydnium Barba-Jovis).

Jupiter's-distaff (jō'pi-tēr-z-dis'tāf), n. A labiate plant, or wild sage, Salvia glutinosa, or perhaps Phlomis frutescens. [Prov. Eng.]

Jupiter's-eye (jō'pi-tēr-z-ī), n. The houseleek, Sempervivum tectorum. [Prov. Eng.]

Jupiter's-flower (jō'pi-tēr-z-flou'ēr), n. A translation of Dianthus, the name of the pink-genus, also of the specific name of Agrostemma (Lych-nis) Flos-Jovis.

Jupiter's-nut (jō'pi-tēr-z-nut), n. [Translation of Juglans.] The European walnut, Juglans regia.

Jupiter's-staff (jō'pi-tēr-z-stāf), n. The mullen, Verbascum Thapsus.

jupon (jō'pon or jō'pon'), n. [Also juppon; < ME. jopone, jopovene, gipoun, gypoun, gepoun, < OF. jupon, juppon, gippan, F. jupon = Pr. jupon, jupio (cf. Sp. jubon = Pg. gibão = It. giubbone, prob. after F.), a short cassock, etc., dim. (or aug.) of jupe, a jupe; see jupe.] A garment worn by men in the fourteenth and early part of the fifteenth century. Especially—(a) A jacket of heavy material, sometimes stuffed and quilted to serve as a coat of fenee, and often worn under the iron armor. (b) A surcoat worn over the armor, with skirts reaching about to mid-thigh, and with short sleeves or none. In heraldry it is represented without sleeves and daggged or jagged at the bottom. It was introduced about the middle of the fourteenth century.

The felleone with the fenne awerde freschely he strykes, . . . Therowe jopovne and jyssewawnde of gentille males? Morte Arthure (E. T. S.), l. 4238.

jur†, v. i. [A var. of jar†, r.] To clash; strike with a harsh noise.

By that time that the multitude ran thither in great numbers, and presented themselves ready to defend, the ramme was jurring also at the other part. Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 963.

jur†, n. [A var. of jar†, n.] A crashing collision; a harsh-sounding blow; a crash.

Jura (jō'rā), a. and n. In geol., same as Jurassic.—Jura limestone. See limestone.

jural (jō'ral), a. [< L. jus (jur-), right, law (see just), + -al.] Pertaining to natural or positive right.

By the adjective jural we shall denote that which has reference to the doctrine of rights and obligations; as by the adjective "moral" we denote that which has reference to the doctrine of duties. Whewell.

jurally (jō'ral-i), adv. As regards or in accordance with natural or positive right.

Sometimes there occurs a clear rupture of order in a society, and a triumph of Might over Right; and then a new order, springing out of and jurally rooted in disorder. H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 274.

juramentally† (jō-rā-men'tal-i), adv. [< "juramentum, pertaining to an oath (< L. juramentum (> It. giuramento = OF. jurement), an oath, < jurare, swear; see jury), + -ly.] With an oath. A promise juramentally confirmed. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, iii. 19.

jurant (jō'rant), a. and n. [< F. jurant, pp. of jurar, swear; see jury.] I. a. Taking an oath; swearing. [Rare.] II. n. One who takes an oath. [Rare.]

Jurant and Dissident with their shaved crowns argue frothing everywhere; or are ceasing to argue and stripping for battle. Carlyle, French Rev., II. iv. 2.

Jurassic (jō-ras'ik), a. and n. [< Jura (see def.) + -assic, as in Triassic.] I. a. Pertaining or relating to the Jura mountains, and specifically, in geol., to the Jurassic series.

II. n. In geol., that part of the geological series which includes all the groups and sub-groups older than the Cretaceous and newer than the Triassic; so called from the predominance of rocks of this age in the Jura mountains. The Triassic, Jurassic, and Cretaceous together form the Mesozoic series. The flora of the Jurassic is distinguished by a predominance of cycadaceous forms, ferns being also plentiful. Its fauna is rich and varied. The most highly developed animals in this geological position are certain small marsupials. The oldest known bird, possessing also some marked reptilian characters, is found in the Upper Jurassic. The Jurassic series covers a wide area in Europe, and is also of great interest and importance in the Cordilleran region of the United States. The name Oolite was originally applied to the rocks of Jurassic age in England by William Smith, by whom the order of succession of this part of the series was first worked out and published. The Jurassic of England includes the Lias as its lower member, and above this the Lower, Middle, and Upper Oolites. In northwestern Germany the Jurassic is divided into the Lower or Black Jura, the Middle or Brown, and the Upper or White. Of these divisions the lower corresponds to the English Lias. The fossil remains of the Jurassic series in the United States are of great interest. Among them is the Atlantosaurus, a dinosaur, supposed to have been a hundred feet in length and thirty or more in height. The auriferous rocks of the western edge of the North American continent are, at least in large part, of Jurassic age.

jurat† (jō'rat; F. pron. zhü-rä'), n. [Formerly also jurate; < F. jurat (vernacularly juré, a jurymen) = Sp. Pg. jurado = It. giurato, < ML. juratus, an alderman, a warden, juror, jurymen, lit. one sworn, < L. juratus, pp. of jurare, swear; see jury.] A sworn officer; a magistrate; a member of a permanent jury. The word is now chiefly used as a title of office in the Channel Islands, where the Jurats are judges and legislators chosen for life, Jersey and Guernsey having twelve each, and Alderney six.

Open your gates, we commaunde you in the name of the kyng. The watchmen sayde, Sirs, the keyes be withyn the towne with the jurats. Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., l. xciv.

jurat† (jō'rat), n. [< L. juratum, neut. of juratus, sworn; see jurat†.] In law, the official memorandum subscribed at the end of an affidavit, showing the time when and the person before whom it was sworn. Wharton.

juratet (jō'rät), n. An obsolete form of jurat†.

juratiōn (jō-rā'shon), n. [= It. giurazione, < LL. juratio(n-), a swearing as on oath, < L. jurare, swear; see jury.] In law, the act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

jurative (jō'rā-tiv), a. Pertaining to or having the purpose or the sanction and effect of an oath; juratory. [Rare.]

jurator†, n. [< L. jurator, a swearer, a sworn witness, a sworn magistrate, ML. a juror, < jurare, swear; see jury, juror.] A juror.

juratory (jō'rā-tō-ri), a. [= F. juratoire = It. giuratorio, < LL. juratorius, of an oath, < L. ju- ator, a sworn witness, < jurare, swear: see jurator, jury.] Of, pertaining to, or comprising an oath.

How often does St. Paul . . . repeat . . . his juratory caution before the Lord: as, God is my witness?

Donne, Sermons, vi.

Juratory caution, in Scots law, a form of caution sometimes offered in a suspension or advocacy, where the complainer is not in circumstances to offer any better. It consists of an inventory of his effects, given up upon oath, and assigned in security of the suma which may be found due in the suspension.

jurdictioun, n. A Middle English variant of jurisdiction.

jure divino (jō-rē di-vī-nō). [L.: jure, abl. of jus (jur-), right, law; divino, abl. of divinus, divine: see divine.] By divine right. See divine.

jural (jō-rel), n. [Sp.] A fish of the genus Caranx, as C. pisquetus, C. fallax, in Florida, etc.

jurema-bark (jō-rē mā-bārk), n. An astringent bark obtained from the Brazilian tree Acacia Jurema. The natives are said to prepare a narcotic decoction from it.

juribali, juriballi (jō-ri-bal'i), n. [Native name.] A West Indian tree, Trichilia moschata, of the natural order Meliaceae, the astringent bark of which is said to possess a high value in typhoid fevers. The name is also applied to two other meliaceae trees, Soymda febrifuga, of India and Ceylon, and Khaya Senegalensis, of tropical Africa, which possess similar properties.

juridic (jō-rid'ik), a. [= F. juridique = Sp. juridico = Pg. juridico = It. giuridico, < L. juridicus, relating to justice or law, as a noun a judge, < jus (jur-), law, + dicere, point out, dicere, say, declare. Cf. judge, ult. of same elements.] Same as juridical. [Rare.]

juridical (jō-rid'ik-əl), a. [< juridic + -al.] 1. Pertaining to the promulgation or dispensation of law; founded upon or according to the forms of law; relating to or concerned with administrative law: as, a juridical argument; juridical methods; juridical oppression.

The influence of Christianity on a much more famous system than the Brehon law has always seemed to me to be greatly overstated by M. Troplong and other well-known juridical writers. Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 61.

2. Subsisting in contemplation of law; of the nature of an abstract legal conception: as, a juridical person, or a juridical transaction (that is to say, a person or transaction legally supposed or conceived of to some extent irrespective of actual existence and of incidents and circumstances not recognized by the law).—Delivery of juridical possession. See delivery.—Juridical days, days in court on which law is administered; days on which the court can lawfully sit.

juridically (jō-rid'ik-əl-i), adv. In a juridical manner; according to forms of law; with legal authority.

juridicial, a. An obsolete variant of juridical.
jurinite (jō-ri-nit), n. [Named by Loret (1822) after Louis Jurine (1751-1819), a Genevan naturalist.] In mineral, same as brookite.

jurisconsult (jō-ris-kon'sult), n. [= F. jurisconsulte = Sp. jurisconsulto = It. giurisconsulto, < L. jurisconsultus, also jureconsultus, also separately juris consultus and consultus juris, one skilled in the law, < juris, gen. of jus, law, + consultus, pp. of consulere, consult: see consult.] One who gives his opinion in cases of law; one learned in jurisprudence; a jurist; specifically, a master of the civil law.

In divers particular sciences, as of the jurisconsults, . . . there are set down some small memorials of the schools, authors, and books.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 120.

jurisdiction (jō-ris-dik'shon), n. [< ME. jurisdiction, jurdictioun, < OF. jurisdiction, F. jurisdiction = Sp. jurisdicción = Pg. jurisdicção = It. giurisdizione, < L. jurisdiccion(n-), juris dictio(n-), administration of the law, jurisdiction, < juris, gen. of jus, law, + dictio(n-), a declaring: see diction.] 1. Judicial authority; the legal power of hearing and determining controversies or accusations; the right of exercising the functions of a judge or of a legal tribunal. It includes the power to compel a person to appear and answer a complaint, or to punish him for not doing so; the power to take property in dispute into the custody of the law; the power to compel production of evidence, and hear the contention of the parties; the power to determine questions of right between the parties, and to enforce the determination. Jurisdiction of the person depends usually on the giving of due notice to the person, or a voluntary appearance by him. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter usually depends on the statutory or common-law powers conferred on the court with reference to the nature of the controversy or property affected, and sometimes upon the seizure of the property into the custody of the law.

By the long uniform usage of many ages, our kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts, which are the grand depositaries of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the crown itself cannot now alter but by act of Parliament. Blackstone, Com., I. vii.

2. Controlling authority; the right of making and enforcing laws or regulations; the capacity of determining rules of action or use, and exacting penalties: as, the jurisdiction of a state over its subjects.

Milton, P. L., ii. 319.

The jurisdiction of the several States which constitute the Union is, within its appropriate sphere, perfectly independent of the federal government.

T. H. Benton, Thirty Years, II. 283.

3. The domain within which power is exercised; specifically, the territory over which the authority of a state, court, or judge extends.

The Mr. and Warden shall make serche onely within the jurisdiction of the cite and touching the said craft onely. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 307.

4. The function or capacity of judging or governing in general; the natural right to judge; inherent power of decision or control.

A new book astonishes for a few days, takes itself out of common jurisdiction. Emerson, Courage.

Man's language is higher than himself, more spiritual, more ethereal, and still less subject than he to the jurisdiction of the laws of material nature.

Appellate jurisdiction. See original jurisdiction, below.

—Concurrent jurisdiction. See concurrent.—Contentious jurisdiction, that jurisdiction exercised when one invokes the aid of the law against one that disputes his demands, as distinguished from voluntary jurisdiction, when the person having a right to resist the demand appears as a consenting applicant.—Delegated jurisdiction. See delegated.—Foreign Jurisdiction Act, an English statute of 1843 (6 and 7 Vict., c. 94, and amendments) relating to the exercise of powers in foreign countries under rights acquired by treaty or otherwise.—General jurisdiction, jurisdiction in respect to either persons or property generally, within the boundaries of the state.—Jurisdiction Acts. See Foreign Jurisdiction Act, above, and Summary Jurisdiction Act, below.—Limited jurisdiction, a jurisdiction extending only to a certain district, or to certain classes of subjects or persons, etc., or to certain amounts.—Original jurisdiction, the power to entertain an action from its commencement, as distinguished from appellate jurisdiction, or power to review the exercise of the jurisdiction of an inferior tribunal.—Plea to the jurisdiction, a plea denying the jurisdiction of the court to entertain an action.—Proper jurisdiction, in Scots law, that jurisdiction which belongs to the judge or magistrate himself, in virtue of his office.—Summary Jurisdiction Act, an English statute of 1848 (11 and 12 Vict., c. 43) for facilitating proceedings in criminal cases before justices of the peace. It was amended in 1849 (12 and 13 Vict., c. 45), 1879 (42 and 43 Vict., c. 49), and 1884 (47 and 48 Vict., c. 43), and extended to Ireland in 1871 (34 and 35 Vict., c. 76) and to Scotland in 1881 (44 and 45 Vict., c. 33).—Voluntary jurisdiction. See contentious jurisdiction, above.

jurisdictionive (jō-ris-dik'tiv), a. [As jurisdiction + -ive.] Of, pertaining to, or having jurisdiction.

To ecclesiastical censure no jurisdictionive power can be added without a childish and dangerous oversight in polity, and a pernicious contradiction in evangelic discipline. Milton, Church-Government, ii. 3.

jurisprudence (jō-ris-prō'dens), n. [= F. jurisprudence = Sp. jurisprudencia = It. giurisprudenza, < L. jurisprudentia, also juris prudentia, the science of the law, < juris, gen. of jus, law, + prudentia, knowledge, skill: see prudence.] 1. The science of law; the systematic knowledge of the laws, customs, and rights of men in a state or community necessary for the due administration of justice; the science which treats of compulsory laws, with special reference to their philosophy and history.—2. The body of laws existing in a given state or nation.—3. More specifically, the body of unwritten or judicial law considered in the light of its underlying principles and characteristic tendencies, and as distinguished from statute or legislative law.—Analytical jurisprudence. See analytic.—Comparative jurisprudence, the analysis and comparison of the bodies of law existing in different states. In modern times the right development of law, and the tendency to a convenient assimilation of the laws of different civilized states and nations, have been much favored by the study of comparative jurisprudence.—Equity jurisprudence. See equity, 2 (b).—General jurisprudence, the science or philosophy of law, as distinguished from particular jurisprudence, or the knowledge of the law of a particular nation.—Medical jurisprudence, forensic medicine. See forensic.—Mining jurisprudence, the law, particularly the unwritten or non-statutory law, developed from the usages of miners, in newly discovered gold-fields, etc., according to which the rights of finders of conflicting claims, of abandonment, and of the use of waters and the riddance of debris were regulated.—Particular jurisprudence, that which in the laws of a given state or nation is peculiar to that state or nation.

Bentham, Works, IV. 461.

jurist (jō-rist), n. [= F. juriste = Sp. jurista = It. giurista, < L. jus (jur-), law.] 1. One who professes the science of law; one versed in the law, or more particularly in the civil law; one who writes on the subject of law.

It has ever been the method of public jurists to draw a great part of the analogies on which they form the law of nations from the principles of law which prevail in civil community. Burke.

2. In universities, a student in the faculty of law.
juristic (jō-ris'tik), a. [< jurist + -ic.] Pertaining to a jurist or to jurisprudence; relating to law; juridical; legal.

juristical (jō-ris'ti-kəl), a. [< juristic + -al.] Same as juristic.

It is not rarely that we refuse respect or attention to diplomatic communications, as wide of the point and full of verbiage or conceits, when, in fact, they owe those imaginary imperfections simply to the juristical point of view from which they have been conceived and written.

jury (jō-ri), n.; pl. juries (-riz). [Early mod. E. jurie, < ME. jurie, < OF. juree, an oath, a judicial inquest, a jury (F. jury, jury, < E.), < ML. jurata, a jury, a sworn body of men, orig. fem. pp. of L. jurare (> F. jurere = Sp. jurar = It. giurare), swear, bind by an oath, < jus (jur-), law: see just.] 1. A certain number of men selected according to law, and sworn to inquire into or to determine facts concerning a cause or an accusation submitted to them, and to declare the truth according to the evidence adduced. Trial by jury signifies the determination of facts in the administration of civil or criminal justice by the arbitrament of such a body of men, subject to the superintendence of a judge, who directs the proceedings, decides what evidence is proper to be laid before the jury, and determines questions of law. The juries in the ordinary courts of justice are grand juries, petty or petit or common juries, special or struck juries, and sheriff's juries. Of these, the first and last are not trial juries in the proper sense. (See phrases below.) The principle of trial by jury existed in different forms among the ancient Greeks, Ro-maus, and Germans; but it early fell into general disuse. The existing system gradually grew up under the English common law, from which it passed into American use, but has been only partially adopted in modern times by the nations of continental Europe.

For in good faith I neuer saw the daye yet but that I durst as wel trust ye truth of one Iudge as of two juries.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 988.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shak., M. for M., II. 1, 19.

2. A body of men selected to adjudge prizes, etc., at a public exhibition or other competition. Often called jury of award.—Coroner's jury, a jury summoned by a coroner to investigate the cause of a death.—Grand jury [i. e. 'large' jury, with reference to the number of members, which is greater than that of a petty or 'small' jury] in law, a body of men designated from time to time from among the people of a community, by authority of law, to inquire what violations of law have been committed therein, and by whom, their function being not to establish guilt, but to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground of suspicion of any person to justify trial by a petty jury. At common law, and generally by statute, there must be not less than twelve and not more than twenty-three members in a grand jury, and the concurrence of twelve is necessary to find an indictment. (See indictment.) In some jurisdictions grand juries are intrusted with some other duties relating to public welfare in their county. There is no grand jury in Scotland.—Juries' (Ireland) Acts, English statutes of 1871 (34 and 35 Vict., c. 65), 1872 (35 and 36 Vict., c. 25), and 1875 (38 and 39 Vict., c. 37), which relate to the qualifications, selection, and summoning of jurors in Ireland.—Jury de medietate linguae (literally, of halfness of language), a jury composed of one half natives and one half aliens, allowed in cases where one of the parties is an alien. It has been generally abolished in the United States, but is still allowed in Kentucky.—Jury of annoyance. See annoyance.—Jury of matrons, a jury of "discreet and lawful women" impaneled to try a question of pregnancy: as where a widow alleges herself to be with child by her late husband, or a woman sentenced to death pleads, in stay of execution, that she is with child.—Mixed jury, a jury of mixed races, particularly a jury including both white men and colored men.—Petty or petit jury [i. e. 'small' jury; cf. grand jury]. Same as trial jury.—Sheriff's jury, a jury selected by a sheriff from the list of persons qualified to serve as jurors, and summoned by him to hold inquests, as for assessing damages in an action in which the defendant makes no defense, or for ascertaining the mental condition of an alleged lunatic.—Special jury, a jury selected from among men of special qualifications, as merchants or freeholders.—Struck jury, a jury selected by allowing each party alternately to strike off from a list a name not acceptable to him, until the number is reduced to twelve.—To hang a jury. See hang.—Trial jury, petty or petit jury, traverse jury, or common jury, a jury formed for the trial of an issue of fact in a civil or criminal action. At common law, both in England and in the United States, a trial jury must consist of twelve, and unanimity is necessary to render a verdict. The constitutional right of trial by jury in the United States implies these conditions. By statute, in cases where the Constitution does not secure this right, juries of six are sometimes allowed, as in justices' courts. By the Constitutions of several States (Texas, California, Nevada, and North and South Dakota), three-fourths of a jury may render a verdict in civil actions. According to the law of Scotland, the number of the jury in criminal cases is fifteen; and the decision of a majority determines the verdict. Instead of an absolute verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty," they may return one of "not proven," which frees the accused, but leaves him under a suspicion of guilt. In civil cases the number of the jury is twelve, and the jurors are not required to be unanimously agreed in their verdict. In cases of high treason the jury consists of twelve, and their verdict must be unanimous, as in England.

jury-box (jō'ri-boks), n. In a court of justice, an inclosed space in which the jury sits.

jury-leg (jō'ri-leg), n. [See jury-mast.] A wooden leg. [Slang.]

jury-list (jō'ri-list), n. In law, a list of persons who may be summoned to act as jurymen.

jurymen (jō'ri-men), n.; pl. jurymen (-men). 1. One who is impaneled on a jury, or who serves as a juror.

Here therefore a competent number of sensible and upright jurymen, chosen by lot from among those of the middle rank, will be found the best investigators of truth, and the surest guardians of public justice.
Blackstone, Com., III. xxiii.

2. A member of any body of persons chosen to try a case at law or to inquire into the merits of a cause presented to them, as one of the dicasts of ancient Athens, or of the judices of ancient Rome, or of a modern jury of award.

All cases of importance, civil or criminal, came before courts of sixty or seventy jurymen. Froude, Cesar, p. 30.

jury-mast (jō'ri-mäst), n. [The element jury, found first in jury-mast and later in similar naut. compounds, jury-rudder, jury-rig, jury-rigged, and the slang term jury-leg, is usually supposed to be an abbreviation of injury; but this presupposes a form injury-mast*, a highly improbable name for a new mast substituted for one which has been lost. The accent also makes an abbr. to jury improbable. More improbable still are the etymologies which refer the word to Dan. kiöra, a driving, < kiöra (= Sw. köra = Norw. keyra = Icel. keyra), drive (Skeat), or to journey ("a journeire mast, i. e. a mast for the day or occasion") (Grose). It suits the conditions best to take the word as simply < jury + mast, it being prob. orig. a piece of nautical humor, designating a more or less awkward mast hastily devised by the captain and carpenter consulting as a 'jury.'] Naut., a temporary mast erected on a ship, to supply the place of one that has been broken or carried away, as in a tempest or an engagement.

jury-process (jō'ri-pros'es), n. The writ for the summoning of a jury.

jury-rig (jō'ri-rig), n. [jury- (see jury-mast) + rig.] Naut., a temporary rig when the permanent rig has been disabled.

jury-rigged (jō'ri-rigd), a. Naut., rigged in a temporary manner on account of accident.

jury-rudder (jō'ri-rud'er), n. [jury- (see jury-mast) + rudder.] Naut., a temporary rudder rigged on a ship in case of accident.

jurywoman (jō'ri-wūm'an), n.; pl. jurywomen (-wim'an). One of a jury of matrons (which see, under jury).

just, n. A Middle English form of juice.

just (jus), n. [L., law, right: see just, justice, etc., jural, jurist, etc.] Law; right; particularly, what is declared to be law or right by a judge; matter of rule administered by a magistrate.—Jus civile, the interpretation of the law of the Twelve Tables, and now of the whole system of the Roman law. Rapalje and Lawrence.—Jus duplicatum, in old law. See droit.—Jus feodale, in Rom. law, international law, or the law of negotiation and diplomacy.—Jus gentium, the law of all nations; the law which natural reason establishes among all races of men; also, international law.—Jus honorarium, the body of rules established by magistrates by a course of adjudication upon matters within their jurisdiction.—Jus in rem, a right conceived of with reference to the thing which is subject to its dominion (that is, a right to the thing itself as against all the world), as distinguished from jus in personam, a right considered with respect to some particular person against whom it may be asserted, such as a debt.—Jus italicum, the right, law, or liberties of a Roman colony, including quiritarian ownership and exemption from land-tax to the republic.—Jus nature, jus naturale, the law of nature; natural law; the principles of justice conceived to be common to all just minds, and necessary to human welfare.—Jus pretorium, the body of law resulting from the adjudications of the Roman pretors.—Jus publicum, the public law of the status of persons, officers, the priesthood, and crimes.—Jus scriptum, written law; that which is committed to writing by the act of its creation, as a statute, as distinguished from unwritten law, which may result from custom or decisions of the courts irrespective of written form.

jusselt (jus'el), n. [ME. jusselt, < OF. jussel, juseel*, < LL. juseclum, dim. of L. jusculum, broth, soup, dim. of jus, broth: see juice.] A medieval dish. See the extract.

Jusselt. Recipe brede gratyd, & eggis; & awyng tham to-gydere, & do therto sawge, & saferon, & salt; than take gode brothe, & cast it ther-to, & bole it enforeayd, & do ther-to as to charlet &c. Harleian MS., 5401, p. 198.

Jussiea (jus-i-ē'a), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after Bernard de Jussieu, founder of the natural system of botany developed later by his nephew. See Jussieuan.] A genus of plants of the natural order Onagraceae, containing about 40 species, mainly herbs, inhabiting swamps and ponds, mostly in tropical and subtropical regions. The adherent calyx-tube is elongated, but not produced beyond the 4-celled ovary. There are from 4 to 6 entire or 2-lobed petals, with twice as many stamens. The leaves are alternate, and the yellow or white flowers are axillary and solitary. Several species are grown in collections, but none is conspicuous for its flowers or medicinal properties. J. decurrens and J. repens are natives of the United States; the latter also grows in the West Indies. The genus is sometimes very properly called primrose-willow. The name has also been written Jussieua, Jussieia, Jussievia, Jussieva.

Jussieuan (jus-i-ū'an), a. [Jussieu (see def.) + -an.] Of or pertaining to one of the French botanists Jussieu, especially Antoine Laurent de Jussieu (1748-1836).—Jussieuan system, in bot., the natural (as contrasted with the artificial or Linnaean) system of classification, promulgated by A. L. de Jussieu in 1789 in his "Genera of Plants disposed according to Natural Orders." His uncle, Bernard de Jussieu (1699-1777), had proceeded in the same direction. To the nephew more than any one else is due the received classification of genera under orders based upon proper characters. Of these he founded one hundred, within which he included nearly all known genera. His primary division of the vegetable kingdom was into Acotyledones (the Cryptogamia of Linnaeus), Monocotyledones, and Dicotyledones. Subordinate divisions among flowering plants were based upon the position of the stamens. His system has been improved by A. P. de Candolle and many later workers.

jussive (jus'iv), a. and n. [L. jussus, pp. of jubere, command, + -ive.] 1. a. In gram., expressing command.

II. n. In gram., a form or construction expressing command.

just (just), a. [ME. juste, < OF. juste, F. juste = Sp. Pg. justo = It. giusto, < L. justus,

just², joust¹ (just or jöst), n. [Early mod. E. also giust (after It.); < ME. juste, < OF. joste, jouste (F. joute), also justice = It. giostra (for giosta*), a just; from the verb.] A military contest or spectacle in which two adversaries attacked each other with blunted lances, rarely with sharp weapons as in war; a knightly tilt. The just was sometimes held at the barrier; that is, the charging knights were separated by a solid structure of wood, which each kept on his left hand, the lance being held diagonally across the neck of the horse. The shield was hung from the neck, leaving the left hand free to manage the horse and the right to direct the lance. The shock of the lance was sometimes received on the helmet, and on this account the tilting-helmet had commonly the openings for air on the right side. From the beginning of the fourteenth century the armor for the just differed from the armor for war, and became more and more heavy and unwieldy, the tilter being almost immovable in his saddle, in which he was secured by high pommel and cantele, and often by a garde-cuisse completely covering the left thigh and leg. The sport was usually declared to be in honor of one or more ladies who presided as judges and awarded the prizes.

Lyft up thy selfe out of the lowly dust,
And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., October.

Some one might show it at a joust of arms,
Saying, "King Arthur's sword, Excalibur."
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

just³, joust² (just or jöst), n. [OF. juste, juiste, juyste, juiste, a sort of pot or pitcher of tin, silver, or gold, with handles and a lid.] A pot or jug, made of earthenware or metal, with large body and straight neck, for holding liquids.

justacorpst, n. See juste-au-corps.

just-borne (just'born), a. Justly borne; borne in a just cause.

By this hand I swear, . . .
Before we will lay down these just-borne arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear.
Shak., K. John, II. 2, 345.

juste-au-corps (zhüst'ó-kòr'), n. [F., < juste, close, + au, to the (< à, to, + le, the), + corps, body. In E. (Sc.) justacorpse, corrupted to justicoat, jesticoat, etc.] 1. A close body-coat with long skirts, worn at the close of the seventeenth century and early in the eighteenth by men of different classes, as by noblemen on journeys or when hunting, and by the coachmen in Paris. — 2. An outer garment worn by women about 1650, resembling the hungerlin, which it succeeded.

Give her out the flower'd Justacorpse, with the Petticoat belonging to it.
Dryden, Limberham, IV. 1.

justement, n. An obsolete aphetic form of agistment.

juste milieu (zhüst mē-lyé'). [F.: juste, just; milieu, the medium.] The true mean; a just medium or balance between extremes; specifically, judicious moderation, as between extremes of opinion or conduct: defined as a political term by Montesquieu, but first brought into common use by Louis Philippe in 1831 in characterizing his own system of government.

For me, the juste milieu I seek;
I fain would leave alone
The girl who rudely slaps my cheek,
Or volunteers her own.
J. G. Saxe, tr. of Martial's Epigrams.

juster, jouter (jus'tér or jós'tér), n. 1. One who justs or takes part in a just. — 2. A horse for tilting. Halliwell.

justice (jus'tis), n. [ME. justice, < OF. justice, justice, joustice, F. justice = Pr. Sp. justicia = Pg. justiça = It. giustizia, < L. justitia, justice, < justus, just: see just¹.] 1. Justness; the quality of being just; just conduct. (a) Practical conformity to the laws and principles of right dealing; the rendering to every one of that which is his due; honesty; rectitude; uprightness; also, the ethical idea of just conduct, either of individuals or of communities; the moral principle which determines such conduct.

This was the trouth that the kynge leodogan was a noble knyght, and kepte well Justice and right.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), III. 466.

Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been, and ever will be pursued, until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit.

A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. 51.

(b) Conformity to truth; right representation and sound conclusion; impartiality; fairness; trustworthiness.

When we approached Sicily, . . . I had a view of the cities and places on the shore. I could not but observe the justice and poetical beauties of the descriptions of the great master of the Latin Epic poetry.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. II. 184.

(c) Agreeableness to right; rightfulness; moral soundness: as, he proved the justice of his claim.

Ye sons of Mars! partake your leader's care, Heroes of Greece, and brothers of the war!
Of partial Jove with justice I complain,
And heav'nly oracles believ'd in vain.
Pope, Iliad, II. 141.

2. Vindication of right; requital of desert; the assignment of merited reward or punishment; specifically, execution or vindication of law.

Earthly power doth then show likeat God's When mercy seasons justice.
Shak., M. of V., IV. 1, 197.

This reasonable moderator, and equal piece of justice, Death.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, I. 38.

3. Rights of jurisdiction.—4†. Jurisdiction; authority.

The six kynge . . . comanded alle hem that were vnter their justice, that eche man sholde ener be rely and make goode wacche.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), III. 576.

5†. Precision; justness; exactness.

O lady,
Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess
To equal any single crown of the earth
I' the justice of compare! Shak., Pericles, IV. 3, 9.

6. A person commissioned to hold court for the purpose of hearing complaints, trying and deciding cases, and administering justice; a judge or magistrate: generally in specific uses; as, a justice of the peace; the justices of the Supreme Court.

Thurgh sentence of this justice Apia.
Chaucer, Doctor's Tale, I. 204.

Bed of justice. See bed¹. — Bureau of Military Justice. See bureau. — Chief justice, the highest in rank of the judges of a court; particularly, the presiding judge in the King's (or Queen's) Bench and Common Pleas divisions of the English High Court of Justice, in the United States Supreme Court, and in the supreme courts of the States. Often abbreviated C. J. — College of Justice. See college. — Department of Justice. See department. — Fugitive from justice. See fugitive. — Gate of Justice. See gate¹. — Jeddard or Jedwood justice, executing a prisoner and trying him afterward; an expression referring to Jedburgh, a Scotch border town, where many of the border raiders are said to have been hanged without the formality of a trial. [Scotch.]

We will have Jedwood justice — hang in haste, and try at leisure.
Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, xxxii.

Justice of the peace, an inferior or local judge chosen in each county or town or other district, to preserve the peace, to try minor causes, and to discharge other functions, as the legalizing of papers for record. Abbreviated J. P.

Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., IV. 7, 45.

Justice of the quorum, a distinction conferred upon some, and sometimes on all, the justices of the peace of a county in England, by directing, in the commission authorizing the holding of quarter sessions, that among those holding the court must be two or more of several specially named. — Justices in eyre. See eyre. — Justices' justice, the kind of justice administered by the unpaid magistracy: in satirical reference to the disproportionate sentences and extraordinary decisions of some of these officials. (Eng.) — Justice's warrant. See warrant. — Lord Chief Justice, the title given in England to the chief judge of the Court of King's (Queen's) Bench: in full, the Lord Chief Justice of England. The title of Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas lapsed with the abolition of that court. — Lord Justice Clerk, the Scottish judge who ranks next to the Lord Justice General. He presides over the Outer House or Second Division of the Court of Session, and is vice-president of the High Court of Justiciary. — Lord Justice General, the highest judge in Scotland, also called the Lord President of the Court of Session. — Lords justices, persons formerly appointed by the English sovereign to act for a time as his substitute in the supreme government either of the whole kingdom or of some part of it. — To do justice to, to appreciate; treat in a manner showing appreciation of: as, he never did justice to his son's ability. — Trial justice, a justice assigned to hold court for the trial of causes, usually before a jury. [U. S.] = Syn. 1. Right, Justice, Equity, Law; Justness, Justice. Right is the standard word for what ought to be. Justice and equity are essentially the same, expressing the working out of the principles of right under law, but law is often contrary to justice or equity: hence the occasional remark, "That may be law, but it is not justice." Law in such a case means the interpretation of written law by the courts. A court of equity deals with and corrects the injustice of the working of the law. Equity more expressively represents the idea of fairness, and justice that of sacred rights. (See just and honesty.) Justness has a field of meaning peculiar to itself, by which we speak of the justness of observations, criticisms, etc. — that is, their conformity to admitted principles. As to conformity to right, we use justice for the abstract quality, justice of the person, and justness of the thing. We speak of the justness of a cause, a claim, a plea, etc.

justice¹ (jus'tis), v. t. [justice, n.] To administer justice to; deal with judicially; judge.

Hit watz sen in that aythe that gedetbyas [Jededfah] rengned,
In Iuda, that justised the Inyne kyngeas.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), II. 1170.

The next inheritor to the crown . . . had no sooner his mistress in captivity but he had usurped her place, . . . but, which is worse, had sent to Artaxia, persuading the justicing her, because that unjustice might give his title the name of justice.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, II.

justiceable¹ (jus'tis-ə-bl), a. [OF. justiceable, justiciable, justiciabile, < justice, law: see justice and abl. Cf. justiciable.] Amenable to law; subject to judicial trial: as, a justiceable offender. Sir J. Hayward.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 209.

justiceship (jus'tis-ship), n. [justice + -ship.] The office or dignity of a justice. Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 51.

Justicia (jus-tish'i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), named after J. Justice, a noted Scotch horticulturist and botanist. The surname Justice is derived from justice, a judge: see justice.] A genus of plants of the natural order Acanthaceæ, the type of the tribe Justicieæ. Its corolla-tube is enlarged above and mostly shorter than the bilabiate limb; the upper lip is interior in cavitation, concave, and entire or slightly 2-lobed, the lower spreading and 3-cleft. The stamens are two, affixed in the throat. The two anther-cells are separated, the lower with a small white spur; there are two ovules in a cell. These plants are herbs or rarely shrubs, with the leaves entire, and the flowers middle-sized or small, colored white, violet, pink, or red, and variously disposed. There are about 110 species, belonging to the warmer parts of the globe, many being handsome in cultivation. J. Adhatoda, called Malabar nut, is reputed to have the properties of an anti-spasmodic and febrifuge.

justiciable (jus-tish'i-ə-bl), a. [OF. justiciable, F. justiciable, pertaining to justice or law, also just: see justiceable.] Proper to be brought before a court of justice, or to be judicially disposed of.

A person is said to be justiciable in a country when liable to be tried therein, or to be brought under the operation of its laws; a thing, when the rights and incidents of its ownership may be settled by the courts of that country.
J. N. Pomeroy.

justiciar (jus-tish'i-är), n. [Alo justitiar; < ML. justitiarius, justicer: see justicer, justiciary.] Same as justiciary, 2.

justiciaryship (jus-tish'i-är-ship), n. [justiciar + -ship.] The office of justiciar.

The unpopularity of Longchamp enabled John, aided by the archbishop of Rouen, to lead a revolutionary movement by which Longchamp was deprived of the justiciaryship, and John recognized as summus rector of the kingdom.
Encyc. Brit., XIII. 713.

justiciary (jus-tish'i-ä-ri), a. and n. [ML. justiciarius, one who administers justice, < L. justitia, justice: see justice. Cf. justicer, justiciar, uit. < ML. justiciarius.] 1. a. Pertaining to the law; legal; relating to the administration of justice.

He was brought into the justiciary court, upon an indictment for the crime to which it was expected he should plead guilty.
Styrie, Memorials, K. Charles, an. 1678.

Justiciary power, the power of judging in matters of life and death. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

II. n.; pl. justiciarys (-riz). 1. An administrator of justice; a justice or judge. Burke. [Rare.] — 2. In early Eng. hist., the chief administrator of both government and justice. The justiciary or chief justiciary was the king's deputy from the time of William the Conqueror to that of Henry III., presiding in the king's court and the exchequer, supervising all departments of government, and acting as regent in the king's absence. His functions were afterward divided between the lord chancellor, the chief justice, the lord high treasurer, etc. Also justiciar.

His [Stephen's] brother had been made Bishop of Winchester, and by adding to it the place of his chief justici- ary, the king [Henry I.] gave him an opportunity of becoming one of the richest subjects in Europe.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. History, iii. 5.

The officers whom, by a faint analogy, we may call the Prime Ministers of the Norman Kings, are spoken of by more names than one. On these great officers the title of Justiciar or Chief Justiciar definitely settled.

E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, V. 288.

3†. In theol., one who trusts in the justice or uprightness of his own conduct.

G Saviour, the glittering palaces of proud justiciaries are not for thee; thou lovest the lowly and ragged cottage of a contrito heart.

Bp. Hall, Zaccheus.

I believe it would be no hard matter to unravel and run through most of the pompous austerities and fastings of many religious operators and splendid justiciaries.

South, Sermons, IX. 146.

4. Administration of justice or of criminal law; judiciary. [Scotch.]—Clerk of Justiciary. See clerk.—Courts of Justiciary, the highest criminal tribunals of Scotland. The supreme tribunal, whose decisions are final is the High Court of Justiciary. Its judges, called Commissioners or Lords of Justiciary, are the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk, and five judges of the Court of Session, appointed by patent. Circuit Courts of Justiciary are held by judges of the High Court at ten different towns throughout the country, usually twice a year.

Justiciæ (jus-ti-si-ê-ê), n. pl. [NL. (Dumortier), < Justicia + -æ.] A large tribe of acanthaceous plants. Besides Justicia, the type, this includes 75 genera, agreeing with it most obviously in having the lower lip or upper lobes of the corolla interior, or at any rate the corolla not twisted in the bud.

Justicies (jus-tish-i-ôz), n. [ML., 2d pers. sing. pres. subj. (used as impv.) of justiciare, justiari, dispense justice, < L. justitia, justice: see justice.] In Eng. law, a writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, empowering him to hold plea of debt in his county court: so called from the significant word in the opening clause of the writ, in Latin, "we command you that you justice A. B.," etc.

justicing†, n. [ME. justising; verbal n. of justice, v.] The act of judging or ruling.

The amirel haunth to his justisinge
Other half hondert of riche kinge
The aire richeste king.

King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 107.

justicing-room (jus'tis-ing-rôm), n. A room in which causes are heard judicially and justice is administered; especially, such a room in the house of a justice of the peace. [Eng.]

justicot, justicoat†, n. Corruptions of juste-aucorps.

justifiability (jus-ti-fi-a-bil'i-ti), n. Justifiableness. The Lancet. [Rare.]

justifiable (jus'ti-fi-a-bl), a. [F. justifiable, < LL. as if justificabilis*, < justificare, justify: see justify.] Capable of being justified or proved to be just or true; defensible; warrantable: as, justifiable resentment.

The stile of a Souldier is not eloquent, but honest and justifiable.

Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 60.

It is justifiable by Cæsar that they used to shave all except their head and upper lip, and wore very long hair; but in their old coins I see no such thing warranted.

Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, viii.

His [Bacon's] conduct was not justifiable according to any professional rules that now exist, or that ever existed in England.

Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

Justifiable homicide. See homicide 2. = Syn. Vindicable. See excusable.

justifiableness (jus'ti-fi-a-bl-nes), n. The quality of being justifiable; possibility of being defended or excused.

You bring the confessions of the French and Dutch churches, averring the truth and justifiableness of their own government.

Bp. Hall, Def. of Humb. Remonst.

justifiably (jus'ti-fi-a-bli), adv. In a justifiable manner; so as to admit of justification or excuse.

justification (jus'ti-fi-kā'shon), n. [= F. justification = Sp. justificación = Pg. justificação = It. giustificazione, < LL. justificatio(n-), < justificare, justify: see justify.] 1. The act of justifying, or of showing something to be just or right; proof of fairness, propriety, or right intention; vindication; exculpation; upholding.

I pray, proceed to the justification or commendations of Angling.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 38.

The love of books is a love which requires no justification, apology, or defense.

Langford, Praise of Books, Prelim. Essay.

Specifically—2. In law: (a) The showing of a sufficient reason in court why a defendant did what he is called to answer: as, a plea in justification.

For liberty of frank speech, being a part of justification and defence in law, is allowed to use great words for plea.

Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 250.

(b) Proof by a surety offered for a party of whom security is required in legal proceedings that he is of adequate pecuniary ability.

Mr. M— said that Recorder S— had fixed bail at $25,000, and justification in $50,000 would be enough.

Philadelphia Times, April 10, 1886.

3. In theol., the act by which the soul is reconciled to God. According to Roman Catholic authority, justification is an act by which God imparts his own character to the believer, making him truly just or righteous. According to the common Protestant doctrine, it is a forensic act by which, on certain conditions, God treats as just or righteous one who is not personally worthy of such treatment. In this sense it is nearly equivalent to the forgiveness of sins.

Justification . . . is not remission of sins merely, but also the sanctification and renewal of the inner man, through the voluntary reception of the grace, and of the gifts, whereby man of unjust becomes just, and of an enemy a friend, that so he may be an heir according to hope of life everlasting.

Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent, quoted in [Schaff's "Creeds of Christendom," II. 95.

Justification is thus a forensic term; it is equivalent to the remission of sins. To justify signifies not to make the offender righteous, but to treat him as if he were righteous, to deliver him from the accusation of the law by the bestowal of a pardon.

G. P. Fisher, Hist. Reformation, p. 461.

4. The act of adjusting or making exact; the act of fitting together, as the parts of anything; as, the justification of lines or types, in printing.

Are we to seek here for the justification of the frontier which struck us as artificial and needless?

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 44.

When he [the printer] comes to the end of his line, and finds that he has a syllable or word which will not fill out the measure, he has to perform a task which requires considerable care and taste. This is called justification.

Ure, Dict., III. 644.

= Syn. 1 and 2. Exculpation, exoneration.

justificative (jus'ti-fi-kā-tiv), a. [= F. justificatif = Sp. Pg. justificativo = It. giustificativo, < LL. as if justificativus*, < justificare, justify: see justify.] Justifying; having power to justify; justificatory.

Those same justificative points you urge Might benefit.

Count Guido Franceschini.

Broening, Ring and Book, II. 313.

justificator (jus'ti-fi-kā-tôr), n. [= F. justificateur = Sp. Pg. justificador = It. giustificatore, < LL. justificator* (in fem. justificatrix), < justificare, justify: see justify.] One who justifies; in law, a compurgator who in former times justified accused persons by oath; also, a jurymen (because the jurymen justify that party for whom they deliver their verdict).

justificatory (jus'ti-fi-kā-tôr-ri), a. [ML. justificatorius, < LL. justificare, justify: see justify.] Tending to justify; vindicatory; defensory.

justifier (jus'ti-fi-êr), n. 1. One who justifies; one who vindicates, supports, defends, or upholds; also, one who pardons and absolves from guilt and punishment.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

Rom. iii. 26.

2. In printing: (a) The workman who makes of just length, and with just spaces between the words, the lines of type set by a type-setting machine. (b) An attachment to a type-setting machine which does automatically some or all of the work of justification.—3. In type-founding, the workman who fits up a suite of strikes or unjustified matrices for use on one mold, making each and all just or uniform in height as to body, of even line as to face, and of proper nearness to mated letters.

justify (jus'ti-fi), v.; pret. and pp. justified, ppr. justifying. [ME. justifier, < OF. (and F.) justifier = Sp. Pg. justificar = It. giustificare, < LL. justificare, act justly toward, do justice to, justify, < justificus, that acts justly, < L. justus, just, + facere, do.] 1. trans. 1. To prove or show to be just or conformable to reason, justice, duty, law, or propriety; vindicate; warrant; uphold.

He boldly answered him. He there did stand

That would his doings justify with his own hand.

Spenser, F. Q. V. xi. 4.

We are, therefore, unable to discover on what principle it can be maintained that a cause which justifies a civil war will not justify an act of attainer.

Macaulay, Nugent's Hampden.

2. To declare innocent or blameless; absolve; acquit; specifically, to free from the guilt or penalty of sin; reconcile to God.

I cannot justify whom the law condemns.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., II. 3. 16.

And by him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Acts xiii. 39.

Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Rom. v. 1.

By works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

Jaas. ii. 24.

3. To prove (any one) to be. [Rare.]

I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you,
And justify you traitors.

Shak., Tempest, v. 1, 131.

4. To make exact; cause to fit or be adapted, as the parts of a complex object; adjust, as lines or columns in printing.

When so many words and parts of words as will nearly fit the line have been composed, it is made the exact length required by inserting or diminishing the space between the several words. This is called justifying the line, and is effected by means of the spaces already mentioned.

Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 700.

5. To judge; pass judgment upon; hence, to punish with death; execute. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

Bathe jureez, and juggez, and justicez of landes,
Luke thow justifyte theme welle that injure wyrkes.

Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 663.

Their conspirators desired, at all times, to have this Duke [of Albany] put to death. . . . It was concluded by the king and counsel that he should be justified on a certain day.

Pitcottie, Chron. of Scotland, p. 33. (Jamieson.)

Justified matrix, in type-founding. See drive, 1 (c).—To justify bail, in law. See bail 2. = Syn. 1. To defend, maintain, exonerate, excuse, exculpate.

II. intrans. To agree; match; conform exactly; form an even surface or true line with something else: as, in printing, two lines of nonpareil and one of pica justify.

justifying-stick (jus'ti-fi-ing-stik), n. An attachment to some forms of type-setting machine, in which lines of type are made of even length, and with uniform spaces between the words; practically, a composing-stick.

justing, jousting (jus'ting or jô's'ting), n. [ME. justing; verbal n. of just 2, v.] The act of tilting; a tilt, just, or tournament.

Ne stede for thi justing wel to goon.

Chaucer, Good Women, I. 1115.

At the metynge of this tournament was acin many justinges, that gladly were be-holden.

Mertin (E. E. T. S.), II. 134.

justing-helmet (jus'ting-hel'tet), n. The helmet used in the just. See just 2 and tilting-helmet.

justing-target (jus'ting-târj), n. A shield especially made for the just. See tilting-target.

Justinian code. See code.

Justinianist (jus-tin'i-an-ist), n. [Justinian, Emperor of the East from 527 to 565, + -ist.] One who is instructed in the Institutes of Justinian; one acquainted with civil law.

justle, v. and n. An occasional form of jostle.
justly (jus'tli), adv. 1. In a just manner; in conformity to reason, law, or justice; by right; honestly; fairly; equitably: as, to deal justly; an opinion justly formed.—2. In conformity to fact or rule; accurately: as, his character is justly described.

justment† (jus'tment), n. [just + -ment.] That which is due. Darvies.

That for seven lusters I did never come
To doe the rites to thy religious tombe;
That neither haire was cut or true teares shed
By me o'r thee as justments to the dead,
Forgive, forgive me.

Herrick, To the Shade of his Religious Father.

justness (jus'tnes), n. 1. The quality or state of being just, equitable, or right; conformity to truth or justice; lawfulness; rightfulness; honorableness.

The Esquire Katrington was a Man of a mighty Stature, the Knight, Annesey, a little Man; yet through the justness of his Cause, after a long Fight, the Knight prevailed.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 133.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shak., T. and C., II. 2, 119.

2. Conformity to fact or rule; correctness; exactness; accuracy: as, justness of description or of proportions.

Their justness in keeping time by practice much before any that we have, unless it be a good band of practised fiddlers.

Pepys, Diary, III. 66.

Every Circumstance in their Speeches and Actions is with great justness and delicacy adapted to the Persons who speak and act.

Addison, Spectator, No. 309.

= Syn. Propriety, fitness, fairness. See justice.

jut (jut), v. i.; pret. and pp. juttel, ppr. jutting. [Early mod. E. jutt, jutte; a var. of jet 1, v.] 1†. To strike; shove; butt.

And all thy bodie shall have the fruition of this lighte,
In suche wise as it shal no wher stumble nor jutte against any thing.

J. Udall, On Luke xl.

Insulting Tyranny begins to jutt

Vpon the innocent and awlesse Throne.

Shak., Rich. III., II. 4, 51 (fol., 1623).

2. To project forward; extend beyond the main body or line: as, the jutting part of a building: often with out.

A very pleasant little tarrasse . . . jutleth or buttleth out from the maine building.

Coryat, Cruities, I. 206.

jut (jut), n. [A var. of *jet*¹, n.] 1. That which juts; a projection.

He, stepping down
By zig-zag paths and juts of pointed rock,
Came on the shining levels of the lake.
Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

2t. A jostle; a shove; a thrust.
I will not see him, but gine him a jutte indeed.
Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 3.

The fiend, with a jut of his foot, may keep off the old,
from dread of the future.
Miss Burney, Cecilia, ii. 3.

Jute¹ (jöt), n. [= Dan. Jyde = Sw. Jute, < AS. Jūtas, Eōtas, Geōtas, Jōtas, Ytas, pl., the Jutes.] One of a Low German tribe originally inhabiting Jutland, Denmark, which, with the Saxons and Angles, invaded Great Britain in the fifth century. See Anglo-Saxon.

jute² (jöt), n. [< Beng. jūt, the fibers of the plant Corchorus, also the plant itself, Malayalam jat, < Skt. jatā (also jūta), matted hair (as worn by Shiva or Hindu ascetics), also the fibrous roots of a tree (as of the banyan).] 1. A plant of the fiber-producing genus Corchorus, natural order Tiliaceae; chiefly, one of the two species C. capsularis and C. olitorius, which alone furnish the jute-fiber of commerce. The latter is called Jews'-mallow, a name also occasionally given to the former. C. capsularis is the larger, and has a, flower; b, seed; c, fruit of C. siliquosus.

short globular pods, while those of C. olitorius are elongated and cylindrical; but there is no clear difference in the quality of their product. The two species are native and cultivated in Bengal, whence comes the great mass of the jute of commerce, 60,000 tons being exported per year. Jute likes a warm, moist climate. It has been introduced into Egypt, and into the southern United States, where its success appears to be hindered only by the want of a sufficiently cheap means of separating the fiber.

2. The fiber of this plant. It is obtained by maceration from the inner bark. It is of fair tenacity, glossy, and susceptible of so fine division as to mix well with silk, and can take on a bright and permanent coloring. Hitherto, however, its commercial use has been in the manufacture of coarse fabrics, such as gunny-bags, for which it is consumed in vast quantities. It is of inferior value for ropes, not enduring moisture well. The refuse makes good paper. Dundee, in Scotland, is the great seat of jute-manufacture.—American jute (improperly so called), the velvetleaf, Abutilon Arizonicum, belonging to the Malvaceae; introduced from India, and now too common as a cornfield weed. Its fiber is pronounced equal to jute, and its economical importance seems to depend on the adaptation of suitable machinery.—Bastard jute, Hibiscus cannabinus, the fiber of which is inferior both to jute and sunn-hemp, and, with the better H. esculentus, is used to adulterate jute.—Jute-butta or -cuttings, the woody stump of the jute-plant, the fiber of which is used for interior purposes.

jutes, n. pl. See joutes.

Jutish (jöt'tish), a. [< *Jute*¹ + *-ish*¹.] Pertaining to the Jutes.

The advance-guard of these tribes [Saxon] was called Jutes, and their point of attack was Kent, the southeastern county of England. This they soon subdued, and erected it into a Jutish kingdom, with Canterbury as its capital.

Stille, Stud. Med. Hist., p. 199.

Jutland (jut'lan-dër), n. [< Jutland (< *Jute*¹ + land + *-er*¹.] A native or an inhabitant of Jutland, a peninsula of Europe comprising the mainland of Denmark and the adjoining part of Germany.

Jutlandish (jut'lan-dish), a. [< Jutland + *-ish*¹.] Of or pertaining to Jutland, or to the people of Jutland.

juttingly (jut'ing-li), adv. In a jutting manner; projectingly.

jutty (jut'i), n. [A var. of *jetty*¹.] A projection, as in a building; also, a pier or mole; a jetty. [In the quotation below, also interpreted as an adjective, jutting.]

No jutty, frieze,
Butress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed and procreant cradle.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 6, 7.

jutty (jut'i), v. [A var. of *jetty*¹, v.] I. trans. To project beyond.

As doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1, 13.

II. intrans. To jut; to project.

For he took away all those jutting galleries of pleasure which even by ancient laws also were forbidden to be built in Rome.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 318.

jut-window (jut'win'dō), n. A projecting window; a bow-window or bay-window; a window that projects from the line of a building. Congreve.

juvenal (jöv've-näl), n. [< L. juvenalis, youthful, < juvenis, youthful, a youth: see juvenile.] A youth; a young man; a juvenile.

I will . . . send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 2, 22.

Juvenalian (jöv've-nä'li-an), a. [< L. Juvenalis, youthful (see def.), < juvenalis, youthful: see juvenal.] Of or pertaining to Juvenal, a celebrated Roman satirist (about A. D. 100); characteristic of Juvenal or of his style.

juvenate (jöv've-nät), n. [< NL. juvenatus, < L. juvenis, a youth: see juvenile and *-ate*³.] In the Rom. Cath. Ch., the two years devoted by a novice preparing for the priesthood to the study of Latin, Greek, and rhetoric. Also called juniorship. Worcester (Supp.).

juvenescence (jöv've-nes'ens), n. [< juvenescen(t) + -ce.] The state of being juvenescent or of growing young.

juvenescent (jöv've-nes'ent), a. [< L. juvenescen(t)-s, ppr. of juvenescere, grow to the age of youth, grow young again, < juvenis, young: see juvenile.] 1. Becoming young; growing young in appearance. [Rare.]—2. Immature; undeveloped. [An inaccurate use.]

juvenile (jöv've-nil), a. and n. [= F. juvenile = Pr. juvenil, juvenil = Sp. Pg. juvenil = It. giovenile, giovanile, < L. juvenilis, youthful, juvenile, < juvenis, young, akin to juvencus, young, = AS. jung, geong, E. young: see *young*¹.] I. a. 1. Young; youthful: as, a juvenile manner; a juvenile part in a play.

Cousin Fenix . . . is still so juvenile in figure and manner, and so well got up, that strangers are amazed when they discern latent wrinkles in his lordship's face.
Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxxi.

2. Pertaining or suited to youth: as, juvenile sports or books.

Here [in "Romeo and Juliet"] is one of the few attempts of Shakespeare to exhibit the conversation of gentlemen, to represent the airy sprightliness of juvenile elegance.
Johnson, On Shakespeare's Plays.

=Syn. Boyish, Puerile, etc. See youthful.

II. n. 1. A young person; a youth.

"Yes, yes, yes," cried the juveniles, both ladies and gentlemen; "let her come, it will be excellent sport."
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xviii.

2. A book written for young persons or children. [Trade use.]

Juveniles, classified in series according to price.
Publishers' Trade List, 1880.

3. Theat., an actor who plays youthful parts: as, a first juvenile.

juvenileness (jöv've nil-nes), n. Juvenility. Bailey, 1727. [Rare.]

juvenility (jöv've-nil'i-ti), n. [= F. juvénilité = Sp. juvenilidad, < L. juvenilita(t)-s, youthfulness, < juvenilis, youthful: see juvenile.] 1. The state of being young; youthfulness, or a youthful manner or appearance.

Cleopatra, who in her juvenility was always playfully disposed, . . . pushed Florence behind her couch.
Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxx.

2. Anything characteristic of youth; a juvenile act or idea; juvenile crudity or volatility; a youthful proceeding or performance.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.
Glenville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, Ep. Ded.

juventatet, n. [< L. juvenata(t)-s, the age of youth, youth, < juvenis, young: see juvenile.] Youth; the time of youth. Chaucer.

juventet, n. [ME., < OF. juvente, juvente, < L. juvenata, the age of youth, youth, < juvenis, young: see juvenile.] Same as juventatet.

In his Juvente this Iesus atte Iuwen feste Water in-to wyn tourned as holy writ telleth.
Piers Plowman (B), xix. 104.

juvia (jöv'vi-ä), n. [S. Amer.] The Brazil-nut, Bertholletia excelsa.

juwiset, n. See juise.

juxta- [L. juxta-, prefix, juxta, near, close: see *just*², v.] A prefix of Latin origin, signifying 'near, together, in close proximity.' See juxtaposition, juxtapose, etc.

juxtapose (juks-tä-pöz'), v. t.; pret. and pp. juxtaposed, ppr. juxtaposing. [< F. juxtaposer, < L. juxta, near (see *just*²), + ponere, place: see *pose*².] To place (two or more objects) close together; place side by side.

When red and green are juxtaposed, the red increases the saturation of the green and the green that of the red, so that both colours are heightened in brilliance.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 69.

juxtaposit (juks-tä-pöz'it), v. t. [< L. juxta, near, + positus, pp. of ponere, place: see posit. Cf. juxtapose.] To place near together or in close relation; juxtapose.

Manufactured articles, similar articles of home and foreign production, juxtaposited. Contemporary Rev., LI. 506.

juxtaposition (juks'tä-pöz'ish'on), n. [= Pg. juxtaposição, < F. juxtaposition, < L. juxta, near, + positio(n)-, a placing: see position. Cf. juxtapose.] The act of juxtaposing, or the state of being juxtaposed; the act of placing or the state of being placed in nearness or contiguity.

Putting the case of English style into close juxtaposition with the style of the French and Germans.

De Quincey, Style, i.

The juxtaposition in space of two objects greatly assists in the detection of likeness or unlikeness.
J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 333.

juxtapositional (juks'tä-pöz'ish'on-al), a. [< juxtaposition + -al.] 1. Pertaining to or consisting in juxtaposition.—2. Having its parts or elements juxtaposed, as a language the construction of which depends upon the connection of its words rather than their inflection.

Our own language, though classed as inflectional, . . . is in many respects as isolating and juxtapositional as any language of that class.

W. Smith, Bible Dict., Confusion of Tongues.

jymjamt, n. An obsolete form of jinjam.

Jysset. See Gis.

jyst, n. See *gist*¹.

1. The eleventh letter and eighth consonant of the English alphabet; the eleventh character also of the Phœnician alphabet, from which it has come to us through the Latin and Greek. The comparative scheme of forms, Phœnician with its descendants and its etymological originals (see A), is as follows:

K was little used in classical Latin, its office having been transferred to C (as is explained under C); hence it is not common in most alphabets derived from the Latin, as Italian and French. It was scarcely used in Anglo-Saxon, the k-sound being regularly represented by c, of which k was only an occasional variant; but it became common in early Middle English, from the thirteenth century, and gained rapidly in frequency, being needed to represent the k-sound where the c would be ambiguous, owing to the assimilation of c before certain vowels. (See C, ch.) It is now the regular symbol for the sound it denotes in all the Teutonic languages, except English. In the modern English spelling of words of Anglo-Saxon, Romance, or Latin origin it occurs for this sound before e and i, c being used before other vowels and before consonants. In foreign words not of Romance or Latin origin k is the usual initial symbol for the sound. Medially and finally, the sound is denoted in English by ck, as in back, bicker, etc. K has no variety of pronunciation in English, being everywhere the sord or breathed correspondent to the sonant or voiced g (hard). It is called a guttural, or, better, a back-palatal, being the audible result of a breach of contact between the upper surface of the back part of the tongue and the opposite surface of the palate; it is related to g (hard) and ng as t is related to d and n, and p to b and m. It is, however, now silent before n, in words like knife, knight; and, while itself no longer doubled in English words, it is used with c as a substitute for double c or double k, as in sick, suck. In words belonging to the Teutonic part of our language, the k-sound represents to a large extent a more original g-sound, as in kin, answering to Latin genus, Greek γένος (Sanskrit jana). Owing to the variable English transliteration of Oriental words (Arabic, Hebrew, Hindustani, Persian, Turkish, etc.), k (or c) may represent any one of several different kinds of k-sounds, more precisely represented (as in the etymologies of this dictionary) by k, kh, q, gh, h, etc. Such words are preferably entered under the form nearest the original; but usage is too arbitrary and various to be brought under any rule.

2. In chem., the symbol for potassium (NL. Kalium).—3. As an abbreviation: (a) [l. c.] In meteor., of cumulus (c being used for cirrus). (b) Of king, knight, etc.: as, K. G., Knight of the Garter. (c) Of carat.—4. In math., k is generally a constant coefficient. It is also a unit vector perpendicular to i and j.—5. As a numeral in medieval use, 250.

ka¹, kae (kâ, kâ), n. [An obs. or dial. var. of coe¹.] The jackdaw. [Scotch.]

In spite o' a' the thievish kaes

Kaa me, kaa thee, runs through court and country.
Marston, Jonson, and Chapman, Eastward Ho, ii. 1.

ka³t, v. t. A variant of ko, for woth (often for woth he).

Enamoured, quod you? have ye spied out that?
Ah, sir, mary now, I see you know what is what.
Enamoured, ka³ t mary, sir, say that againe.
Udall, Rolister Dolster, l. 2.

Kaaba, Caaba (kâ'ba or kâ'a-bâ), n. [Cf. Ar. kâ'bah, a square building, ka'ba, a cube.] A cube-shaped, flat-roofed building in the center of the Great Mosque at Mecca: the most sacred shrine of the Mohammedans. In its southeast corner it contains the sacred black stone called hajar al aswad, said to have been originally a ruby which came down from heaven, but now blackened by the tears shed for sin by pilgrims. This stone is an irregular oval about seven inches in diameter, and is composed of about a dozen smaller stones of different shapes and sizes. It is the point toward which all Mohammedans face during their devotions. The Kaaba is opened to worshippers twice or three times a year, but only the faithful are permitted to approach it.

The Kaabah stands in an oblong square (enclosed by a great wall) 250 paces long, and 200 broad, none of the sides of which run quite in a straight line, though at first sight the whole appears to be of a regular shape.

Burckhardt, quoted in Burton's El-Medina, p. 366.

kaama, n. See caama, 2.

kaareewan (kâ-ré'wâu), n. [Native name.] A tree of Queensland, Acacia glaucescens, 50 feet or more in height, with a wood of handsome appearance, hard, close, and tough.

kabala, kabalah (kab'a-lâ), n. See cabala.

kabok, n. and v. See cabob.

kabook, n. Another spelling of cabook.

Kabyle (ka-bil'), n. [F. Kabyle; Cf. Ar. Qabâil, prop. pl. of qabila, a tribe, horde, species.] 1. One of a Berber race dwelling in Algeria, particularly in the mountains of the coast. Allied tribes are found in the neighboring countries of North Africa. The Kabyles are believed to be of Hamitic origin, and are Sunnite Mohammedans.

2. A dialect of Berber, spoken by many of the Kabyles.

Kachuga (ka-kü'gâ), n. [NL.] The typical genus of Kachugina. J. E. Gray.

Kachuginae (kak-ü-jî'nê), n. pl. [Cf. Kachuga + -inae.] A subfamily of tortoises of the family Bataguridae, typified by the genus Kachuga. It was named by J. E. Gray for species having five claws on the fore and four on the hind feet, the snout slightly produced, the alveolar surface of the upper jaw with one straight angular ridge and a central longitudinal ridge. It includes a number of Asiatic species, referred to four genera.

kachugine (kak-ü-jîn), a. [Cf. Kachuga + -ine.] Having characteristics of the Kachuginae.

Kadarite (kad'a-rit), n. [Cf. Ar. (Q) qadar, predestination, divine fiat (Q qadara, be able), + -ite.] One of a Mohammedan school or sect which denies the doctrine of predestination and maintains that of free will.

kaddish (kad'ish), n. [Heb.] In Jewish ritual, a form of thanksgiving and prayer, containing special reference to the approach of the kingdom of God, used at funerals, annual commemorations, etc.

Is any harm come to him because the eleven years went by with no wretched Kaddish said for him? I can not tell. If you think Kaddish will help me, say it, say it.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, liii.

kades (kâdz), n. [Cf. ket¹.] Sheep's dung. Hallivell; Davies. [Prov. Eng.]

I rather think the kades and other filth that fall from sheep do so glut the fish that they will not take any artificial bait. W. Lawson (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 196).

kadi, cadî (kâ'di or kâ'di), n. [Formerly also cade, cadee; Turk. kadi, kazi, a judge, cf. Ar. qadi (qadhî), a judge, magistrate, cf. qaday, judge: cf. alcald.] A judge in Moslem countries.

kadi-kane (kâ-dê-kâ'nâ), n. The Indian name of a large grass, Panicum miliaceum, extensively cultivated in tropical Asia for its seed. Also called warree.

kadilesker, cadilesker (kad-i-les'kêr), n. [Cf. Turk. kadi (kaziyu)-asker, kazi, asker, judge of the army; kadi, kazi, judge; al, the; asker, army.] The chief judge in the Turkish empire: so called because originally he had jurisdiction over the soldiery, who now, however, can be tried only by their own officers.

kadle-dock (kâ'dl-dok), n. 1. The ragwort, Senecio Jacobaea.—2. The wild herbivul, Anthriscus sylvestris. [Prov. Eng. in both uses.]

Kadmee (kad'mê), n. [Pers.] A member of one of two sects of the Parsees of India, the other being the Shenshais. They do not differ in faith, but only in regard to the correct chronology of the era of Yezdegerd, the last king of the Sasanian dynasty, who was dethroned by the Calif Omar about A. D. 640, and consequently as to the correct dates for the celebration of their festivals.

kados (kâ'dos), n. [Gr. κάδος: see cadus.] Same as cadus.

Kadsura (kad-sû'rû), n. [NL. (Kämpfer, 1810), Cf. Jap. katsura.] A genus of climbing shrubs of the order Magnoliacea, tribe Schizandreae, distinguished from Schizandra, the only other genus of the tribe, by the berry-like and globose, instead of elongated, fruit. There are about 7 species, natives of tropical Asia.

kae, n. See ka¹.

Kämpferia (kemp-fê'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), named after one Kämpfer (1651-1716), a German who traveled many years in Asia.] A genus of plants of the order Scitamineae, natives of tropical Africa, eastern India, and the Malay archipelago, having flowers in spikes with imbricated scales at the apex of short, few-leaved, or leafless and sealy stems; a slender calyx-tube, bearing a curious, irregular, three-lobed corolla; and a single crested stamen whose filament is wrapped about the style. There are about 18 species, several of which are cultivated for ornament, and one, K. Galanga, furnishes one of the drugs known as galangal.

Kafir, Kafir, n. and a. See Kafir.

kaffiyeh (kaf'i-ye), n. [Syrian.] In Syria, a small shawl or scarf worn about the head, and bound with a colored cord.

As we ride on we see to the left a large herd of camels, and pass their driver, a fierce-looking dark-skinned man, with bare arms, legs, and feet, astride a skinny little horse, a coloured kaffiyeh on his head, a striped abaya or burnous over his shoulder.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 624.

kaffe, n. Same as coffee.

Kaffrarian (kaf-râ'ri-an), a. and n. [Cf. Kaffria, Caffria (see def.) (Cf. Kafir, Kaffir, 2), + -an.] 1. Pertaining to Kaffria or Caffria, the country of the Kafirs in South Africa.

—Kaffrarian region, in zoog. See region.

II. n. An inhabitant of Kaffria.

kafila (kaf'i-lî), n. [= Turk. Pers. qâfila, kâfila = Hind. qâflah, cf. Ar. qâfila, a caravan: see coffee.] A train of loaded camels; a caravan. Also cafila, cafilah, kafilah.

Kafir, Kaffir (kaf'êr), n. and a. [= Pers. kâfir = Turk. kâfir (kyâfir), cf. Ar. kâfir, an unbeliever, an infidel.] I. n. 1. An unbeliever; an infidel: applied malevolently by Mohammedans to Christians and pagan negroes.—2. One of a South African race, inhabiting parts of Cape Colony, Natal, and neighboring lands: so called originally by the Mohammedan inhabitants of eastern Africa, on account of their refusal to accept the faith of Mohammed. They are divided into several branches or tribes, of which the Zulus are the best-known, are of a bronze color, with woolly, tufted hair, tall, well-made, athletic, and acute in intellect.

3. The language of the Kafirs, a branch of the South African or Bantu family. It is also called Zulu-Kafir.—4. One of a race inhabiting Kafiristan, a mountainous region on the northeast of Afghanistan, who have always maintained their independence and resisted conversion to Mohammedanism. Little is known of them, but they appear to be of Aryan stock, and are divided into a number of tribes speaking different languages or dialects.—Kafir's smitar-tree. See Harpophyllum.

II. a. Of or belonging to the Kafirs: as, the Kafir tongue; Kafir customs.

Also written Caffer, Caffre, Kaffer, Kaffre.

Kafir-bread (kaf'êr-bred), n. The spongy, farinaceous pith of the stem of a South African eyecadeaceous plant, Enecephalartos Caffre. See Enecephalartos and breadfruit.

Kafir-corn (kaf'êr-körn), n. Indian millet, Sorghum vulgare, which is cultivated in parts of Africa as a cereal. See durra, sorghum.

Kafir's-tree (kaf'êr-trê), n. Same as Kafir-boom. See Erythrina.

Kafir-tea (kaf'êr-tê), n. The plant Helichrysum nudifolium.

kafiz (kaf'iz), n. An Arabian measure of capacity, nearly equal, according to Queipo, to 33 liters. According to Eliyah and the Sheikh Hasan el Jabarti, generally 90 rotl (which see), or 8 maskkoth, but sometimes less. Also spelled caiz.

kafsh (kafsh), n. [Pers. kafsh, kefsh.] In Persia, a slipper, one of several kinds having the heel folded down.

kafta (kaf'tā), n. [Ar.] The leaves of Catha edulis. Also cafta, khat.

kaftan, n. See caftan.

Kageneckia (kaj-e-nek'i-ä), n. [NL. (Ruiz and Pavon, 1794), named for Count F. von Kageneck, Austrian minister at Madrid.] A genus of South American rosaceous trees, of the tribe Quillaja, but differing from Quillaja, the type of the tribe, in having the calyx-lobes imbricated instead of valvate in the bud and the leaves serrate. They are evergreen trees with coarse leathery leaves and unisexual flowers, the male racemose or corymbose, the female solitary and terminal. The fruit is a large follicle. Three species only are known, growing in Chili and the mountains of Peru. K. oblonga yields wood valuable for building purposes, and very bitter leaves and seeds, which are used by the inhabitants as a remedy for fevers. It is cultivated as a greenhouse plant for its white flowers. K. cratægoides is a tall ornamental tree; it was introduced into England in 1831.

kago (kag'ō; Jap. pron. kang'go), n. [Jap.] A small basketwork palanquin slung from a pole carried on the shoulders of two men. The kago was formerly the commonest mode of conveyance in Japan, but is now confined almost entirely to mountainous regions, having been superseded on the plains by the jinrikisha. Also cango.

kagu (kä'gō), n. [Native name.] A remarkable gallatorial bird, Rhinocetus jubatus, the sole member of the family Rhinocetidae, peculiar to New Caledonia. It is an isolated form, without very near relatives, in some respects intermediate between herons and rails. It is gray, paler below, with dark cross-marks on the wings and tail; the bill and feet are red; kaladana-seed (kal-ā-dā'nā-sēd), n. The seed of Ipomœa Nil, used as a cathartic.

Kagu (Rhinocetus jubatus).

kalamdan (kal'am-dan), n. [Also kalemdan; Pers. (> Ar. Hind.) qalam-dān, a pen-case, < qalam, a pen, pencil, reed (see calamus), + dān, having, holding.] A Persian writing-case, consisting of a long and narrow box of wood or papier-maché painted in bright colors and varnished, having at one end the ink-pot, in a slightly projecting compartment, and including a receptacle for pens, a knife, etc.

kalamkari (kal'am-kar'i), n. [(< Pers. qalam-kāri, < qalam-kār, a painter, < qalam, a pen, pencil, + -kār, denoting an agent.)] Color-decoration of certain special kinds in Indian countries; specifically, a chintz of which the pattern is produced by many separate dyeings, the ground being covered in places by repellent preparations, and also by printing from small blocks.

kalan (kā'lan), n. The sea-otter. See cut under Enhydryis.

An adult kalan is an animal not much larger than a mature and well-conditioned beaver. . . . It will measure from the tip of its tail, which is short, to the extremity of the muzzle, 3½ to 4½ feet, the tail not being over 6 to 8 inches long, and it has a proportionate girth of a little over 2 feet.

Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 487.

Kalanchoe (kal-an-kō'ē), n. [NL. (Adanson, 1763), from the Chinese name of the plant.] 1. A genus of tropical herbs or shrubs belonging to the natural order Crassulaceae, or orpine family, differing from most other plants of the order by having the calyx 4-parted. The leaves are opposite and fleshy, and the flowers are large, white, yellow, or purplish, and disposed in many flowered paniculate cymes. There are about 20 species, one of which is a native of Brazil, all the rest occurring in tropical Africa and Australia. K. crenata of Sierra Leone is a succulent shrub cultivated in greenhouses, and is called scalloped kalanchoe. The name is sometimes written Calanchoe.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

Kalands (kal'andz), n. pl. [Probably from L. Kalenda, the first day of the month.] A religious brotherhood which originated in northern Germany in the thirteenth century, and extended to France and other countries. Its objects were the establishment of solemn burial rites, common religious exercises, and mutual support. The meetings occurred on the first of each month, and terminated with a feast; these feasts gradually degenerated into excesses, and the fraternity was abolished. Also called Calender brothers.

kalathos (kal'ā-thos), n. [(< Gr. κάλαθος.] Same as calathus, l.

kaldt, a. A Middle English form of cold.

kale, *kale*¹ (kāl), n. [Formerly also keal; a dial. var. of *cole*².] 1. In Scotland, loosely, cabbage in general, and by extension any kind of greens; specifically, both there and elsewhere, any variety of cabbage with curled or wrinkled leaves not forming compact heads like the common cabbage, nor yielding a fleshy edible inflorescence like the cauliflower and broccoli, and usually having a long stalk; borecole.

The first ceremony of Halloween is pulling each a stock or plant of kail.

Burns, Halloween, note.

2. A broth made in Scotland in which kale or cabbage is a principal ingredient; hence, any seup, no matter of what composed, and, by a further extension, dinner: as, will you come and tak' your kale wi' me? [Scotch.]

But there is neither bread nor kale,

To fend my men and me.

Battle of Otterbourne (Child's Ballads, VII. 21).

When he brings in the mess with Keale, Beef, and Brewesse, what stomach in England could forheare to call for flanks and briskseta?

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

But hear ye, neighbour, . . . I will be back here to my kail against ane o'clock. Scott, Black Dwarf, l.

Corn-kale, Brassica Sinapistrum, the charlock or wild mustard; so called from its growing in fields of grain. Also field-kale.—Indian kale, Caladium grandiflorum, a plant of the Aroidae. The rootstocks contain a large quantity of starch, which is used by the natives, after boiling to extract the noxious properties.—Kale through the reek, bitter language or treatment: in allusion to the unpalatableness of smoky broth. [Scotch slang.]—Sea-kale, a cruciferous plant, Crambe maritima, found wild on the western shores of Europe and on the Black Sea. It has broad, wavy-toothed leaves, which are gray-colored, and, like the stem, glaucous. For two centuries it has been cultivated for its young shoots, which make a pleasant and wholesome dish.—Wild kale. (a) Brassica Sinapistrum, or charlock. (b) Brassica oleracea, the cabbage-plant, in its wild state.

kale-bell (kāl'bel), n. The dinner-bell. [Scotch.]

But hark, the kail-bell rings, and I

Mann gae link aff the pot.

Watty and Madge (Herd's Collection, II. 109).

kale-blade (kāl'blād), n. A cabbage-leaf. [Scotch.]

Your hose sall be the brade kail-blade,

That is baith brade and lang.

The Gardener (Child's Ballads, IV. 93).

kale-brose (kāl'brōz), n. A pottage made of meal and the skimmings of broth.

Ane wadna hae thought that gude meal was sae scant among them, when the quean threw sae muckle gude kail-brose scalding hot about my lugs.

Scott, Old Mortality, xxvii.

kaleege (ka-lēj'), n. [E. Ind. kali.] A pheasant of the genus Euplocamus and that section of the genus called Gallopasis, closely related to the silver-pheasants and firebacks. There are several species, such as E. alboristatus, E. melanotus, and E. horreoides, inhabiting the upper parts of India from the foothills to an elevation of 8,000 feet. They are noted for their pugnacity, and for making a drumming noise, but in general habits resemble other pheasants of the same genus. Also spelled kali and calidge.

kaleidograph (ka-li'dō-gráf), n. [Irreg. < Gr. kalós, beautiful, + eidós, form, + γράφειν, write.] An apparatus for throwing on a screen or on a glass disk the colored patterns produced by a kaleidoscope.

kaleidophone, kaleidophon (ka-li'dō-fōn-fōn), n. [Irreg. < Gr. kalós, beautiful, + eidós, form, + φωνή, sound.] An instrument invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone for exhibiting the vibrations of an elastic plate or rod, in order to illustrate the phenomena of sound-waves. A polished knob, reflecting a point of light, is attached to the vibrating plate or rod, and in its vibrations produces (by virtue of the persistence of visual impressions) a variety of visible curves. Also written calcidophone.

kaleidoscope (ka-li'dō-skōp), n. [F. kaleidoscope (< E.); irreg. < Gr. kalós, beautiful, + eidós, form, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument creating and exhibiting, by reflection, a variety of beautiful colors and symmetrical forms. In its simplest form the instrument consists of a tube containing two reflecting surfaces inclined toward each other at any angle which is an aliquot part of 360°. A clear eye-glass is placed immediately against one end of the mirrors and a similar glass at their other end; the tube is continued a little beyond this second glass, and its termination is closed by a disk of ground glass. In the cell thus formed are placed beads, pieces of colored glass, or other small, bright-colored, diaphanous objects, and the changing of their positions by rotating the tube produces, by the repeated reflection in the mirrors, different symmetrical figures. The polygonal kaleidoscope multiplies the effect by having three or four mirrors; a larger number destroys the symmetry of combination. Besides the use of the kaleidoscope as a toy, it serves the practical purpose of furnishing an endless variety of patterns for decorative work. Sir David Brewster invented the instrument about 1815, although the idea of it had been vaguely suggested before. He also made it applicable to distant objects by replacing the object-box at the outer end with a double-convex lens, controlled by an adjusting-screw.—Jewel kaleidoscope, an enlarged and superior form of kaleidoscope mounted on a stand, with a wheel to regulate its adjustment: so called because furnished with very richly colored pieces of glass.

kaleidoscopic (ka-li'dō-skōp'ik), a. [< kaleidoscope + -ic.] Relating to the kaleidoscope; varying or variegated like the forms and colors in a kaleidoscope: as, kaleidoscopic views; kaleidoscopic combinations of color.

Her generation certainly would have lost one of its representative and original creations; representative in a versatile, kaleidoscopic presentment of modern life and issues. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 141.

kaleidoscopic (ka-li'dō-skōp'ik), a. [< kaleidoscope + -ic.] Same as kaleidoscopic.

Kallymenia (kal-i-mē'ni-ä), n. [NL. (J. G. Agardh, 1842), < Gr. κάλυμνος, beauty, + ἔμψιν, a membrane.] A genus of red-spored algae, the type of the family Kallymenia, characterized by a flat, fleshy frond without nerve, sometimes perforated, irregularly cut and lobed. The cystocarpa or kalidia which are formed in the middle of the frond are hemispherical, at first immersed, afterward swelling and protruding, and finally becoming free by the rupture of the adjacent tissue. The sphaerospores are formed by the superficial cells. The genus embraces about 20 species, found in the seas of both hemispheres.

Kallymenia (kal'i-mē-ni'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Harvey), < Kallymenia + -ea.] A tribe of red-spored algae of which Kallymenia is the type, characterized by the cells of the frond being rounded, the nuclei enveloped, and the sphaerospores (tetraspores) scattered in the cortical cells. The tribe belongs to the order Gigartinales of the class Floridae, and embraces the two genera Kallymenia and Callophyllis.

kallynteria (kal-in-tē'ri-ä), n. pl. [< Gr. καλλυντήρια, neut. pl. of καλλυντήριος, for beautifying, < καλλύνειν, beautify, < καλός, beautiful.] An ancient Attic festival occurring on the 19th of the month Thargelion (May-June), when the tutelary image of Athena Polias was adorned with fresh draperies and ornaments.

Kalmia (kal'mi-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), dedicated to Peter Kalm, a pupil of Linnæus who traveled in America.] A genus of American ericaceous shrubs belonging to the tribe Rhodoreae, distinguished by the open bell-shaped a, flower; b, same, cut longitudinally, showing the position of the stamens before fertilization, and the pistil; c, same, after fertilization; d, fruit.

corolla and ten hypogynous stamens with elongated filaments. The anthers have the peculiarity (though free in the early bud) of becoming embedded in specialized pits or pockets of the corolla as it expands, the filaments bending over and acquiring tension, and finally straightening elastically, withdrawing the anthers suddenly, and projecting the pollen to some distance over adjacent flowers. The plants are for the most part handsome evergreen shrubs with shining leaves and showy flowers in corymbs. There are 6 species, one of which grows in the West Indies, and one extends to the Rocky Mountains and California, the remainder being confined to eastern North America. K. latifolia, the American laurel, also called calico-bush from the color of its flowers, is one of the most wide-spread and beautiful of American shrubs, and was proposed by Darlington as the national emblem. It is a large shrub, often from 10 to 20 feet in height, with ample shining leaves and a profusion of very showy flowers varying from nearly white to deep pink. The stems are crooked and straggling, the bark brown and scaly, and the wood very hard and useful for various purposes. K. angustifolia, the sheeps-laurel, lambkill, or wicky, is a smaller shrub with bright crimson or rose-colored flowers, common in New England, and ranging from Hudson's Bay to Georgia. It is believed to poison sheep when the deep snows of winter drive them to the extremity of eating it. K. glauca, the pale laurel, prefers cold peat-bogs, and is the only species that ranges across the continent. It is a low straggling bush, with the leaves whitened underneath, and lilac-purple flowers.

Kalmuck, Calmuck (kal'muk), n. [Also Cal-muc; = F. Kalmouk = G. Kalmucke, < Russ. Kalmuk.] 1. A member of a branch of the Mongolian family of peoples, divided into four tribes, and dwelling in the Chinese empire, Western Siberia, and southeastern Russia. They are nomads, adherents of a form of Buddhism, and number over 200,000.—2. The language spoken by the Kalmucks.—3. [l. c.] A kind of rough cloth having a hairy nap.

kambala (kam-bā'lā), n. [E. Ind.] An East Indian tree, Sonneratia apetala, of the natural order Lythariceæ. Its hard red wood is used for making packing-boxes and for house-building.

kambodja (kam-bō'jā), n. [Malay.] The Plumeria acutifolia, an apocynaceous tree, with numerous large white flowers, very common in the villages of Burma.

kambou (kam'bō), n. [Kurile Islands.] A seaweed, Laminaria saccharina. It is a favorite dish among all classes in Japan, and is called by the Russians sea-cabbage. In England it is known as sea-beet and sweet-tangle.

Kamchadale (kam'cha-dāl), n. [= F. Kamtschadale = G. Kamtschadale, < Russ. Kamchadalu, an inhabitant of Kamchatka, < Kamchatka, Kamchatka.] A member of a native tribe of Kamchatka, a peninsula in Eastern Siberia. The tribe is sometimes classed among Mongolians. It numbers only from 2,000 to 3,000. Also Kamchadal, Kamchatkan.

Kamchatkan (kam-chat'kan), a. and n. [Gr. Kamchatka + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Kamchatka.

An Eskimo offshoot, though mixed with Tuzki or Kamchatkan blood. Athenæum, No. 3149, p. 270.

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of Kamchatka.—2. The language of Kamchatka.

kame, kaim (kām), n. 1. Dialectal (Scotch) forms of *comb*¹.

And lang, lang may the maldens sit,
Wi' their goud kaims in their hair,
A' waiting for their ain dear loves.
Sir Patrick Spens (Child's Ballads, III. 156).

2. A peculiar elongated ridge, made up of detrital material. See eskar, and horseback, 2. [Scotch, but frequently used by geologists writing in English.]

Go where one will in the Lowlands of Scotland, . . . the kames, gravel-mounds, knolls of boulder clay, etc., still retain in most cases their original form.

J. Croft, Climate and Time, p. 342.

3. A camp or fortress. [Scotch.]

His route . . . conducted him past the small ruined tower, or rather vestige of a tower, called by the country people the Kaim of Dernelengh. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlv.

kame (kām), v. t. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of *comb*¹.

Thy hands see thon wash,
Thy head likewise keame,
And in thine apparell
See torne be no seame.

Schools of Vertue. (Halliwell.)

O who will kame my yellow hair
With a new made silver kame?
Border Minstrelsy, II. 58.

kamechi, n. See kamichi.

kameela, kamela, n. See kamila.

kamees, n. See kamis.

It [a political prison at the mines of Kara, in Siberia] contains four kameras, exclusive of the hospital or lazaret, and in each of them there are three windows, a large table, a brick oven, and sleeping-platform accommodations for about twenty-five men.

G. Kennan, The Century, XXXIII. 535.

kami (kā'mī), n. [Jap., upper, superior, a lord.] 1. A lord; a title applied by the Japanese to daimios and governors.—2. A term used by the Japanese to designate (a) all the gods or celestial beings who formed and peopled Japan; (b) the descendants of these gods, the mikados and the imperial family, as terrestrial kami; and (c) such heroes and worthies as have been deified by the mikados.

In Japan it is interesting to observe that a national Kami—Ten-zio-dai-zin—is worshipped as a sort of Jehovah by the nation in general.

Huxley, Nineteenth Century, XIX. 494.

3. [cap.] [= Chin. shin, god, spirit.] The name used by the Protestant missionaries and the native Protestant Christians of Japan for the Supreme Being; God: the term used by Roman Catholics is Tenshu, or Lord of Heaven, whence Roman Catholics are known as the Tenshū-kiō, or 'Lord-of-Heaven sect.'—Way of the Kami, the way of the gods; Shinto, the so-called native religion of Japan. See Shinto.

kamichi (kam'i-chi), n. [F. kamichi; from a native name.] The horned screamer, Palamedea cornuta. Also written kamachi, kamechi.

kamila, kamela (ka-mē'lā), n. [Hind. kamila, kamelā.] 1. An East Indian dyestuff consisting of a powdery substance which invests the pods of the euphorbiaceous tree Mallotus Philippinensis (Rottleria tinctoria). It yields a rich orange color, which is imparted almost exclusively to silk. It is also an effective vermifuge.

2. The tree which yields this dyestuff. Also kameela, kaimaile, kamula, and kambū. Sometimes called spoonwood.

kamis, kamees (ka-mēs'), n. [Ar. qamis: see camis, chemise.] The loose shirt, having sleeves reaching to the wrist, worn by men of Moslem nations. It is made of linen or cotton, or sometimes of a fabric of cotton and silk, etc.

The body dress is simply a Kamis or cotton shirt; tight sleeved, opening in front, and adorned round the waist and collar and down the breast with embroidery like network, it extends from neck to foot.

R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 150.

kamp¹, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of *camp*¹.

kampung (kam'pong), n. [Malay, also kampung.] See *compound*².] An inclosure or compound.

It is impossible to doubt that, among the English in our Malay settlements, compound is used in this sense in speaking English, and Kampung in speaking Malay.

Yule and Burnell, Anglo-Ind. Gloss., p. 186.

kamptulicon (kam-pū'li-kon), n. [= F. kamptulicon; a trade-name, < Gr. καμπτός, flexible, + ούλος, thick.] A kind of floor-cloth composed of india-rubber, gutta-percha, and ground cork. It is warm, soft, and elastic. The material was introduced about 1855. It is usually of a uniform dark-gray color, but is sometimes varied with colored patterns. Also called cork carpet.

kampylite, n. See campylite.

Kampylorhynchus, n. See Campylorhynchus.

kamsin, n. See kamsin.

kan¹, v. An obsolete spelling of *can*¹.

kan², n. and v. An obsolete form of *can*².

kan³, n. An obsolete form of *khan*¹.

kana (kā'nā), n. [Jap., short for kari-na, borrowed names.] Japanese writing as distinguished from Chinese, which is also used in Japan. It is syllabic and consists of 47 letters, each representing a syllable ending with a vowel-sound, to which is added a final n, making 48 in all. Kana is so called because it is made up of Chinese characters whose form (somewhat modified) and name (but not their meaning) have been borrowed, and is of two kinds: hiragana or cursive hand, in common use, and katakana or 'side-borrowed letters,' used chiefly for proper names and foreign words. See hiragana and katakana.

Kanaka (ka-nak'ū), n. [Hawaiian, a man.] 1. A Hawaiian or Sandwich Islander. Also Kanacha, Kanaker, Kanak. [Pacific coast and islands.]

In the rough winter of Forty-nine and Fifty the poor Kanakas of San Francisco, quite childlike in their helplessness, . . . died under filthy sheds of hide, and in the bush. J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 89.

2. One of the brown laborers brought from the Pacific islands, on a three years' agreement, and largely employed in northern Queensland, especially on the sugar-plantations. [Australia.]

Wherupon she moved loftily away, and began to interrogate a Kanaka boy, who was digging a few paces off. Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head Station.

kanari (ka-nā'ri), n. [Javanese.] The oil-producing Java almond, Canarium commune. See Canarium.

kanari-oil (ka-nā'ri-oil), n. An oil derived by expression from Canarium commune, which yields it in large proportion. It is preferred to cocoa-nut-oil, both for culinary purposes and for burning.

kanchil, kantjil (kan'chil), n. [E. Ind.] A small deer of the genus Tragulus, found in Java; a pygmy deer, deerlet, or chevrotain, as Tragulus pygmaeus or T. kanchil. See Tragulus.

kand (kand), n. A variant spelling of cand.

kande (Dan. pron. kā'nē), n. [Dan., = Norw. kanna = E. can, a vessel: see *can*².] A measure of capacity used in Denmark and Norway, equal to 4.1 United States pints or 3.4 imperial pints.

kandel (kan'del), n. [The native name on the Malabar coast.] A tree, Kandelia Rheedii, related to the mangrove. See Kandelia.

kandele, n. See kantelet.

Kandelia (kan-dē'li-ā), n. [NL. (Wright and Arnott, 1834), < kandel, q. v.] A genus of tropical East Indian trees belonging to the order Rhizophoraceæ, or mangrove family, differing botanically from Rhizophora, the mangrove, in its 5- to 6-parted calyx, lacerated petals, and 1-celled, 6-ovuled ovary. The genus consists of a single species, which is a small tree with opposite, coriaceous, oblong, entire leaves, and large white flowers on axillary peduncles. The fruit is leathery, ovoid, 1-celled and 1-seeded, the seed, as in the mangrove, germinating within the fruit. The bark of K. Rheedii, the only species, is used in dyeing red, probably as a mordant. It is also used for tanning. Mixed with ginger or pepper and rose-water, it is said to be a remedy for diabetes. Like most plants of the family, this tree is found only on the coast.

kandy, n. See *candy*².

kane¹, n. See *can*².

kane², n. See *khan*¹.

kaneh, n. See caneh.

kaneite (kān'it), n. [Named after R. J. Kane of Dublin, who first observed it.] A doubtful manganese arsenide, supposed to have been found in Saxony.

kang¹, kong (kang, kong), n. [Chin.] A large glazed earthenware jar, containing from 60 to 100 gallons, used in China for storing water.

kang² (kang), n. [Chin.] A kind of oven-like erection built of bricks, used in the northern provinces of China and in Manchuria as a bed, fire being placed underneath it in winter. Kangs are about three feet high, and vary in size; some of those provided in inns and hostels afford sleeping-accommodation for many persons.

kangan, n. See cangan.

kangaroo (kang-ga-rō'), n. [Orig. kanguroo, > F. Kangaroo: a native Australian name.] 1. A large marsupial mammal of Australia, Macropus giganteus; by extension, any herbivorous and saltatorial marsupial of the family Macropodidae (which see for technical characters).

The great kangaroo, the first Australian species of this large family to become known to Europeans, was discovered by Cook in 1770. The male stands 6 or 7 feet high; the female is a third smaller. The hinder parts of the animal enormously preponderate over the fore parts; the thighs and tail are very muscular, the lower leg and the tail very long. The second and third digits are much reduced, the weight of the body falling chiefly on the fourth and fifth. The fore limbs are very small, used chiefly for prehension, and not in locomotion; during the flying leaps the animal makes, said to be from 10 to 20 and even 80 feet in extent, they are closely clasped to the breast. The head and neck are slender, the ears high. The general color is yellowish brown, darker above and paler below. The front teeth are fitted for nipping herbage; the stomach is long and sacculated; and there is a large cæcum. In their whole structure and economy the kangaroos represent ruminants in the Australian, Austro-Malayan, and Papuan regions. They are gregarious, inoffensive, and timid, but when brought to bay prove formidable antagonists, using the claws of the hind feet with great effect. They are killed by being closed in upon and knocked down with clubs, or driven into ambush and shot like deer. There are many species, 23 of the genus Macropus, 6 of Petrogale, and 3 of the genus Onychogalea, in which the tail ends in a kind of nail. They inhabit not only Australia and Tasmania, but New Guinea, New Ireland, the Aru Islands, and other islands. A large number of smaller species with naked muzzle, called brush-kangaroos, pademelons, whallabees, etc., constitute the subgenus Halmaturus. The rock-kangaroos form the genus Petrogale. Hare-kangaroos or kangaroo-hares belong to the genus Leporocetes. (See cut under hare-kangaroo.) A peculiar type of kangaroo, inhabiting New Guinea and Misol, is the genus Dorcopsis. (See cut under Dorcopsis.) Kangaroo-rats, potoroos, or bettongs, are small animals constituting the subfamily Hypsiprymninae.

Giant Kangaroo (Macropus major).

This animal is called by the natives kangaroo. Cook's Voyages, quoted in N. and Q., 6th ser., VI. 58.

She might have said that it was not convenient to come in and find a tame kangaroo, as big as a small donkey, lying on his side on the hearth-rug.

H. Kingsley, Hilliers and Burtons, xxi.

2†. A kind of chair. Darvies.

It was neither a lounge, nor a dormouse, nor a Cooper, nor a Nelson, nor a kangaroo: a chair without a name would never do; in all things fashionable the name is more than half. Such a happy name as kangaroo Lady Cecilia despaired of finding.

Miss Edgeworth, Helen (1834 ?), xvi.

kangaroo-apple (kang-ga-rō'ap'l), n. 1. The yellow, egg-shaped berry of Solanum aviculare (S. laciniatum), which is edible when fully ripe. It is a native of Australia and New Zealand.—2. The plant which yields this fruit. It is an herb with shrubby stems 6 or 8 feet high, long and narrow or pinnatifid leaves, and cyines in the axils or on the branches.

kangaroo-bear (kang-ga-rō'bār), n. The native Australian bear, Plascolaretos cinereus. See koala.

kangaroo-beetle (kang-ga-rō'bē'tl), n. A beetle of the genus Sagra, having enlarged hind legs.

kangaroo-dog (kang-ga-rō'dog or -dōg), n. Same as kangaroo-hound.

kangaroo-foot plant (kang-ga-rō'fūt plant), n. An Australian plant, Avigozanthos Manglessii, of the natural order Hamodoraceae. The perianth, 3 inches long, is 6-cleft and split nearly to the base on the under side. It is in the other members of the genus, the exterior of the perianth, as also the inflorescence, and to some extent the stem, is clothed with plumose wool, which in this plant is very dense and bright-green, except at the base of the flower, where it is crimson.

kangaroo-grape (kang-ga-rō'grāp), n. Same as kangaroo-vine.

kangaroo-grass (kang-ga-rō'grās), n. The Australasian grass Anthistria ciliata (A. Australis), also diffused through southern Asia and the whole of Africa. It is a leafy-stemmed grass, 2 or 3 feet high, with long, bent awns; it is highly esteemed for the nutritious fodder it yields.

kangaroo-hare (kang-ga-rō'hār), n. Same as hare-kangaroo.

kangaroo-hound (kang-ga-rō'hound), n. A kind of deer-hound or greyhound used in hunting kangaroos in Australia. Also kangaroo-dog.

kangaroo-mouse (kang-ga-rō'mous), n. An American rodent mammal of the family Saccomyidae and genus Perognathus; a pocket-mouse. The kangaroo-mice are closely related to the species of Dipodomys (see kangaroo-rat, 2), but are smaller. They inhabit the same parts of the United States.

kangaroo-rat (kang-ga-rō'rat), n. 1. An Australian marsupial of the family Macropodidae, subfamily Potoroinae or Hypsiprymninae, and genus Potorous (or Hypsiprymnus), Epiprym- nus, or Bettongia; a bettong; a potaroo.—2. An American rodent of the family Saccomyidae and subfamily Dipodomysinae, as Dipodomys philipsi or D. ordi. They resemble jerboas rather than kangaroos, and are common in the southwestern parts of the United States and Mexico. See Dipodomys.

Kangaroo-rat (Potorous tridactylus).

kangaroo-thorn (kang-ga-rō'thōrn), n. A spiny shrub, Acacia armata, of extratropical Australia. It is grown there for hedges, and is valuable for fixing coast-sands.

kangaroo-vine (kang-ga-rō'vin), n. An Australian climbing plant, Cissus Baudiniana (C. antarctica). Also kangaroo-grape.

kangy, a. Another spelling of cangy.
kankar (kang'kär), n. [Hind. kankar, limestone, stone, gravel, any small fragments of rock, whether rounded or not.] In India, an impure concretionary carbonate of lime, usually occurring in nodules, in alluvial deposits, and especially in the older of these formations. It is an important rock in India, especially in the valley of the Lower Ganges, where it is much used as a building-stone in the absence of anything better. Also written kankur.

The commonest and also the most useful stone of India is kankar, a nodular form of impure lime, which is found in almost every river valley, and is used from one end of the peninsula to the other for metalling the roads.

W. F. Hunter, Indian Empire, p. 493.

kankert, n. A Middle English spelling of canker.
kankerdort, n. A variant of canker-dort.

kanna (kan'nä), n. [Sw., = E. *can*².] The principal Swedish unit of capacity, equal to 100 cubic inches, Swedish measure, or 2,615 liters = 2.764 United States quarts = 2.302 imperial quarts. The Swedish system was to be abolished in 1889.

kans (kanz), n. [E. Ind.] A grass, Saccharum spontaneum, allied to the sugar-cane, very common in India. It grows from 3 to 15 feet high, and is rendered very showy by the large amount of silvery-white wool which surrounds the base of the flowers. It may be used for fodder, thatching, twine, etc., but is proving a noxious weed, extremely difficult to eradicate.

Kansas-Nebraska Bill. See *bill*².

kant, a. An obsolete form of *cant*⁵.

kantel, n. An obsolete form of cantle.

kantelet, n. [Finn.] A five-stringed harp or dulcimer used by the Finns. Also kandele.

kanten (kan'ten), n. [Jap.] A kind of gelose or gelatin, sometimes called Japanese isinglass, prepared in Japan from several species of seaweed, particularly from the cartilaginous Flori-dea, and used for soups, as well as in the trades, as, for example, in dressing woven goods. It is usually sold in irregular prismatic sticks, resembling glue.

kantharos (kan'thā-ros), n. [Gr. κάνθαρος: see cantharus.] Same as cantharus, 1.

Kantian (kan'ti-an), a. and n. [Kant (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. Of or belonging to Immanuel Kant, the great German philosopher (1724-1804), or to his system of philosophy.

The ultimate decision . . . as to the truth of the Kantian Criticism of Pure Reason must turn upon the opposition of perception and conception, as factors which reciprocally imply, and yet exclude, each other.

E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 666.

II. n. A follower of Kant; a Kantist.

Kantianism (kan'ti-an-izm), n. [G. Kantianismus; but Kantism is a product of a more recent fashion in word-formation.] The doctrine of the German philosopher Immanuel Kant (1724-1804), one of the most influential of metaphysicians. His leading work, published in 1781 (second edition in 1787), is the "Kritik der reinen Vernunft," or "Critique of the Pure Reason" (the word critic, borrowed from Locke, being the name of a science analogous to logic). His fundamental position is that just as blue and red are said to be "imputed" qualities, which do not exist in the outward things themselves, but are only the modes in which these things affect the eye, so every attribute is merely a mode in which the mind is affected, and has no application to a thing in itself. This is true even of such predicates as existence and possibility, and equally so of non-existence and impossibility. In short, a thing in itself is absolutely unthinkable. But just as it is quite true that one thing is blue and another red, in the sense of really so affecting the eye, so Kant does not attack the real externality of matters of fact, but only that of the forms under which alone they can be apprehended by us. The ideas which the mind thus imports into knowledge are of two kinds—those which are presented in sensation, and those which are introduced in the process of thinking. The first kind, that of the forms of intuition, consists of the ideas of space and time. Space is the form under which alone we can have external perceptions. Time is that in which all our inward experience must clothe itself, and thus our outward sensations, too, when they come to be reproduced in reflection. Thought, on the other hand, is obliged to assume the forms of propositions, and thus arise twelve general conceptions (categories). For as a proposition is either universal, particular, or singular, so the object of thought must have quantity; as propositions are either affirmative, negative, or infinitated, so the object of thought must have degree of reality; as propositions are either categorical, hypothetical, or disjunctive, so the object of thought must be either a substance with attributes inhering in it, or a cause with its effect, or mutually reacting elements; and, finally, as a proposition is either contingent, necessary, or problematical, so the object of thought must possess corresponding modes of being. In attributing an unchangeable character to these conceptions, Kant is profoundly hostile to the spirit of empiricism; but in limiting human knowledge strictly to objects of possible experience, he seemed to strike a severe blow to metaphysics. Religious ideas are, however, to be admitted as regulative principles. Kant is a severe moralist, his rule being "Act so that the maxim of thy will can likewise be valid as a principle of universal legislation."

kantikoy, canticoy (kan'ti-koi), n. [Also cantico, cantica, kantickic, and in the earliest form (as a verb) kintekacye; an Algonkin word.] 1. A dance, especially a religious dance, among American Indians.—2. An entertainment with dancing; a dancing-match. [U. S.]

Through every day of the season half the population of the entire village go and come to the summit of the bluff which overhangs it, where they peer down for hours at a time upon the methods and evolutions of the kantickic below, the seals themselves looking up with intelligent appreciation of the fact that, though they were in the hands of man, yet he is wise enough not to disturb them there as they rest.

Fisheries of U. S., V. II. 337.

kantikoy, canticoy (kan'ti-koi), v. i. [Also cantico, etc., in the earliest form kintekacye; from the noun.] To dance as an act of worship, or in festivity; said of American Indians.

The first of these Indians, having received a horrible wound, . . . wished them to let him kinte kacye—being a dance performed by them as a religious rite, etc.

Broad Advice (1649), 2 N. Y. Hist. Coll., II. 258.

These Indians had canticoyed (gekintekoyt) there to-day—that is, conjured the devil, and liberated a woman among them who was possessed by him, as they said.

Dankers, Voyage to N. Y. (1679), p. 275.

Kantism (kan'tizm), n. [Kant (see Kantianism) + -ism.] Same as Kantianism.

Kantist (kan'tist), n. [Kant (see Kantianism) + -ist.] A disciple or follower of Kant.

kantjil, n. See kanchil.

kantry (kan'tri), n. Same as cantred.

Kanuck, n. and a. See Canuck.

kanun (ka-nōn'), n. [Turk.] A kind of dulcimer or zither, used in Turkey. Also written canoon.

kaoliang (kon'li-ang), n. [Chin.; < kao, tall, + liang, millet.] Tall millet; the name in China of Sorghum vulgare or Indian millet.

kaolin (kā'ō-lin), n. [Chin. kaoling, 'high ridge,' the name of a hill in China where it is found.] A fine variety of clay, resulting from the decomposition of feldspar. It is a hydrated silicate of aluminum. When pure it is perfectly white, and forms compact, friable, or mealy masses, made up of scale-like crystals. It is soft and unctuous to the touch. Kaolin forms one of the two ingredients in Oriental porcelain; the other, called in China petunze, is a quartzose feldspathic rock. Kaolin occurs in China, Japan, Saxony, Cornwall, near Limoges in France, and at several localities in the United States; that from Limoges is used for the famous Sèvres porcelain. In mineralogy called kaolinite.—Kaolin porcelain, a name sometimes given to true or hard porcelain, such as that of the Oriental nations and of Sèvres and other factories of the continent of Europe.

kaolinic (kā'ō-lin'ik), a. [Kant + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of kaolin: as, kaolinic substances. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 624.

kaolinite (kā'ō-lin-it), n. [Kant + -ite.] Kaolin in its crystalline form.

kaolinization (kā'ō-lin-i-zā'shon), n. [Kant + -ization + -ation.] The process by which certain minerals, particularly common feldspar, have been altered into kaolin.

Though occasionally clear and fresh, the feldspar has often suffered from kaolinization. Geol. Jour., XLIV. 552.

kaolinize (kā'ō-lin-iz), v. t.: pret. and pp. kaolinized, ppr. kaolinizing. [Kant + -ize.] To convert into kaolin: as, kaolinized feldspar.

The original crystals . . . have been much cracked, and sometimes even partially kaolinized.

Philosophical Mag., XXVII. 279.

kapet, n. An obsolete form of capel.
kappelle (kā-pel'e), n. [G.; see chapel.] In Germany, a musical establishment consisting of a band or orchestra, with or without a choir, under the direction and training of a kapellmeister. In the eighteenth century such establishments were maintained at most of the German courts and by many of the nobility.

kapellmeister, capellmeister (kā-pel'mis'tēr), n. [G., < kappelle, capelle, chapel, chapel-choir, orchestra, + meister = E. master.] 1. The leader or conductor of a kapelle, or of any large musical establishment, involving, at least in central Europe, extensive duties of composition, training, accompaniment, and conducting.—2. The conductor of any band or orchestra.

Sometimes translated chapel-master.
kaph, n. See capel.
kaphar, n. See caphar.

kapitia (ka-pish'i-ä), n. [E. Ind.] A resin which exudes from a Ceylonese tree, Croton aromaticus (C. lacciferus).

kapnographic (kap-nō-graf'ik), a. [kapnography + -ic.] Of or pertaining to kapnography; executed by kapnography.

kapnography (kap-nog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. κάπνος, smoke, + -γραφία, κ γραφέν, write.] Drawing by means of smoke; especially, the art of producing decorative designs, pictures, etc., with a point more or less fine, in a coating of carbon deposited from a flame. Successive coats of the lampblack are allowed to form, and the drawing may in this way be made to give subtle gradations of tint, as well as white or light lines drawn on the dark background. The work is fixed finally by the use of some varnish or other fixative.

kapnomor, n. See capnomor.

kapok (ka-pok'), n. [E. Ind.] The silky wool which invests the seeds of Eriodendron anfractuosum, a species of silk-cotton tree botanically related to the cotton-plants, found in the East and the West Indies. Like the wool of some allied trees, it is used for stuffing pillows, cushions, etc. It has become a considerable article of export from Ceylon.

kappland (Sw. pron. káp'lánt), n. A Swedish land-measure, equal to 437½ Swedish square ells, or 6.1 English square rods.

Karaim (kā'rā-izm), n. [Kara(ite) + -ism.] The doctrines or tenets of the Karaites.

Karaites (kā'rā-it), n. [Heb. karaim, readers, scribes, karā, read, + -ite.] A member of a Jewish sect which adheres to Scripture as contrasted with oral tradition, and consequently denies the binding authority of the Talmud. The Karaites originated in Bagdad at least as early as the middle of the eighth century, and are now scattered in Turkey and elsewhere, their chief seat being in the Crimea. They are distinguished for morality and honesty, and have considerable literature. Also spelled Caraites.

The Karaites [of Russia] differ entirely from the Jews [there] both in worship and in mode of life. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 79.

karamani-resin (kar-a-man'i-rez'in), n. A resin obtained in British Guiana from a guttiferous tree, Symphonia globulifera. See hog-gum and resin.

karat, n. See carat.

karatas (kar-ā'tas), n. [S. Amer.] 1. Bromelia (Nidularium) Karatas, a plant allied to the pineapple, native in South America and the West Indies. It is one of the fiber-yielding species of Bromelia, and is sometimes called silk-grass.—2. [cap.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants of the natural order Bromeliaceae, closely related to Bromelia, from which it differs chiefly in having the flowers in dense, sessile, terminal heads among the upper leaves. The genus is now restricted to two or three West Indian species, the more numerous Brazilian species formerly referred to it being placed in the genus Nidularium. They are low terrestrial plants with the habit of the pineapple, the leaves spiny-margined, often very long, and collected in a rosette at the base, the flowers in heads subtended by the upper cauline leaves. The principal species, K. Plumieri (Bromelia Karatas), is the karatas or Jamaica silk-grass, and yields a valuable fiber.

karat-seed (kar'at-sēd), n. See karat-tree.

karatto, n. Same as keratto.

karat-tree (kar'at-trē), n. An Abyssinian leguminous tree, Erythrina Abyssinica, whose small equal seeds share with those of the carob the reputation of being the original of the carat-weight.

karchesion (kär-kē'si-on), n.; pl. karchesia (-jē). [Gr. κάρχησιον: see carchesium.] In Gr. archaeol., same as carchesium, 1.

karecti, n. Same as charact.

karcelinite (kar'e-lin-it), n. [After M. Karelin, the discoverer.] A rare oxysulphid of bismuth, occurring in crystalline masses of a lead-gray color. It is found in the Altai.

karengia (ka-ren'ji-ä), n. [African.] A grass of central Africa, Pennisetum distichum, closely allied to the millet, the seed of which is largely used as food by the natives of the southern borders of the Sahara.

kareynet, n. An obsolete form of carrion.

kargas (kär'gas), n. [E. Ind.] A dagger with a curved blade, used in northern India; a sacrificial knife.

karinghota (kar-ing-gō'tä), n. [Malay.] A small tree, Samandura (Samadera) Indica, of the Simarubaceae, found in Hindustan and Ceylon. Its bark yields a tonic and febrifuge, and its seed an oil used for rheumatism. Its wood is light, but durable.

karite (kar'i-te), n. [Native name.] A sapotaceous tree, Butyrospermum (Bassia) Parkii, abounding in central Africa. Its seeds, when treated, yield a butter-like substance, which is used by the natives as food, and is now, under the name of shea-butter, imported into Europe in considerable quantities for the manufacture of soap. Recent investigations indicate that the coagulated gum of this tree is nearly identical in its properties with gutta-percha.

karkanet, n. An obsolete form of carcanet.

karkei, n. An obsolete form of cark.

karl, n. See carl.

Karlovian (kär-lō-viu'ji-än), a. and n. Same as Carolingian.

karma (kär'mä), n. [Skt. karman (nom. karma), act, action, work, fate as the consequence of acts (see def.), √ kar, do, perform, cause, effect: cf. L. creare, create: see create.] 1. In Hindu religion, one's action or acts considered as determining his lot after death and in a following existence; the aggregate of merits and demerits of a sentient being in one of his successive existences.—2. In theos.: (a) The doctrine of fate, destiny, or necessity as an invariable sequence of cause and effect; the theory of inevitable consequence. (b) In the concrete, the result of one's actions; that which happens to one for better or worse, in matters over which one may exercise any choice or volition.

The Buddhist theory of karma or "action," which controls the destiny of all sentient beings, not by judicial reward and punishment, but by the inflexible result of cause into effect, wherein the present is ever determined by the past in an unbroken line of causation, is indeed one of the world's most remarkable developments of ethical speculation. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 11.

Karmathian (kär-mā'thi-an), n. [So named from Karmat, the principal apostle of the sect, a poor laborer, who professed to be a prophet.] One of a Mohammedan sect which arose in Turkey about the end of the ninth century. The Karmathians regarded the Koran as an allegorical book, rejected all revelation, fasting, and prayer, and were communistic, even in the matter of wives. They carried on wars against the califate particularly in the tenth century, but soon after disappeared. According to some accounts the Druses developed from them.

As to the special tenets professed by the Karmathians, they were, in their ultimate expression, pantheistic in theory and socialistic in practice. Encyc. Brit., II. 259.

karmic (kär'mik), a. [√ karma + -ic.] 1. Of or pertaining to the doctrine of karma: as, karmic laws or principles.—2. Affected or determined by karma: as, the karmic consequences of an action.

Thus, on a careful examination of the matter, the Karmic law . . . will be seen not only to reconcile itself to the sense of justice, but to constitute the only imaginable method of natural action that would do this. A. P. Sinnett, Esoteric Buddhism, xi.

karn (kärn), n. [Corn. kar: see cairn.] In Corn. mining, a pile or heap of rocks; sometimes, the solid rock.

karob (kar'ob), n. [Cf. carob.] Among goldsmiths, the twenty-fourth part of a grain. Compare carat.

karoo, karroo (ka-rō'), n. [Said to be from Hot-tentot karusa, hard, with ref. to the hardness of the soil under drought.] In phys. geog., the name given to immense barren tracts of clayey table-land in South Africa, which often rise terrace-like to the height of 2,000 feet above the sea-level. It is only the want of water which prevents them from being highly productive. In the wet season they are covered with grasses and flowers, but on the return of the dry season they become hard and steppe-like.—Karoo series, in geol., an important group of rocks in South Africa, consisting largely of sandstone, with much volcanic matter intercalated and overlying. The geological age of this group has been the object of much study, and it is generally believed to represent both the Permian and Triassic. The fossils of the upper division of the Karoo are peculiar and remarkable. Among them are labyrinthodonts, dinosaurs, theriodonts, etc. The formation is also of importance, because in this rock are found the diamonds for which South Africa is famous. These occur in a peculiar much-altered volcanic tuff which has come up from below through chimney-like orifices, an entirely unique mode of occurrence for this gem.

kaross (ka-ros'), n. [S. African.] A garment of fur worn by the natives of South Africa. Also spelled carosse.

karpt, v. An obsolete form of carp 1.

karpholite (kär'fō-lit), n. See carpholite.

karphosiderite (kär-fō-sid'ē-rit), n. See carphosiderite.

karrawant, n. An obsolete spelling of caravan. From thence by karrawans to Coptos. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, v. 12.

karroo, n. See karroo.

karrowt, n. See carrow 1.

karst, karset, n. Obsolete variants of crass.

karstenite (kär'sten-it), n. [Named from D. L. G. Karsten (1768-1810), a mineralogist.] Same as anhydrite.

karvet, v. An obsolete spelling of carvel.

karvelt, n. An obsolete form of caravel.

karynt, karynet, n. Same as carene 1.

karyokinesis (kar'i-ō-ki-nē'sis), n. [NL., Gr. κάρνον, a nut (nucleus), + κίνησις, movement, change: see kinesis.] In embryol., the series of active changes which take place in the nucleus of a living cell in the process of division. Also written carvokinesis.

karyokinetic (kar'i-ō-ki-net'ik), a. [√ karyokinesis, after kinetic.] Characterized by or exhibiting or resulting from karyokinesis. Also carvokinetic.

The latter [the endodermal nuclei] are characterized by their angular shape, and by never presenting the karyokinetic figures characteristic of the ectodermat nuclei. A. Sedgwick, Proc. Royal Soc., XXXIX. 243.

karyolysis (kar-i-ol'i-sis), n. [NL., Gr. κάρνον, a nut, + λύσις, dissolution, κ λύω, loose, dissolve.] Same as karyomitosi.

karyolytic (kar'i-ō-lit'ik), a. [√ karyolysis (-lyt-) + -ic.] Same as karyomitoic.

Radiating lines of granules making up the so-called karyolytic figure. Ziegler, Path. Anat. (trans.), i. § 75.

karyomitoic (kar'i-ō-mi-tō'ik), a. [√ karyomito(sis) + -ic.] Pertaining to karyomitosi; exhibiting or resulting from karyomitosi.

Abundant evidence of the occurrence of karyomitoic figures in [columnar epithelium-cells]. Proc. Royal Soc., XXXVIII. 91.

karyomitosi (kar'i-ō-mi-tō'sis), n.; pl. karyomitoses (-sēz). [NL., Gr. κάρνον, a nut, + NL. mitosis.] In biol., the splitting of the chromatin fibers of a nucleus; also, a figure resulting from such splitting.

The cells of lymphoid tissue multiply abundantly by karyomitosi. Proc. Royal Soc., XXXVIII. 91.

karyoplasm (kar'i-ō-plazm), n. [Gr. κάρνον, a nut, kernel, + πλάσμα, anything formed.] The substance of which the more definitely formed portions of the nucleus of a cell, including the nuclear wall, the nucleoli, and the intranucleolar network, are composed. The remaining substance of the cell is called the nuclear matrix or nuclear fluid. Also called nucleoplasm.

Kashmirian (kash-mir'i-än), a. See Cashmerian.

kasintu (ka-sin'tō), n. [E. Ind.] The common red jungle-fowl of India, Gallus bankivus. See Gallus 1.

kassu (kas'ō), n. [E. Ind.] A kind of catechu made from the fruit of the betelnut-palm, Arcea Catechu, serving in India the same purposes as the true catechu.

kassydoni, n. See cassidony, chalcedony.

kastrilt, n. An obsolete spelling of kestrel.

kat (kat), n. The principal ancient Egyptian unit of weight, equal almost to one fiftieth of a pound avoirdupois, according to several well-preserved standards. Also ket.

kata-. A form of cata-, in closer following of the Greek.

katabolic, a. See catabolic.

katabolism, n. See catabolism.

katakana (kat-g-kü'nä), n. [Jap., Gr. kata, side, + kana, q. v.] One of the two styles of writing the syllabary of 48 letters in use among the Japanese, the other being hiragana. The katakana letters are said to have been invented by Kibi Daishi, about the middle of the eighth century, are formed of a part—one side—of square Chinese characters used phonetically, and are confined almost exclusively to the writing of proper names and foreign words. In katakana there is but one form for each letter, whereas in hiragana many of the letters may be written in a variety of ways.

katalysis, n. See catalysis.

Kataphrygian, n. See Kataphrygian.

katastate, n. See catastate.

katatonia (kat-g-tō'ni-ä), n. [NL., Gr. κατά, down, + τόνος, tone, tension: see tone.] A form of insanity characterized by periods of acute mania and melancholia, and by cataleptoid and epileptoid states. Kahlbaum.

katatoniac (kat-g-tō'ni-ak), n. [√ katatonia + -ac.] One who is affected with katatonia.

Kiernan found four head injuries among 30 katatoniacs. Alien. and Neurol., IX. 458.

katchung-oil (ka-chung'oil), n. [E. Ind.] Arachis-oil (which see, under Arachis).

katchup, n. See catchup.

katelectrotonus, n. See catelectrotonus.

kathenotheism (ka-then'ō-thē-izm), n. [Gr. κατά, according to, + εἶς (ēv), one, + θεός, god, + -ism.] Same as henotheism.

kathetal, kathetometer, etc. See cathetal, etc.

kathodal, kathode, etc. See cathodal, etc.

kathodic (ka-thod'ik), a. [Gr. κατά, against, + ὄδος, way.] In bot., turned away from the direction in which the genetic spiral runs: said of that half of a leaf which has this characteristic. The opposite half is anodic. Göbel.

kation, n. See cation.

katipo (kat'i-pō), n. [Maori.] A venomous spider of the family Theridiidae, the Latrodectus katipo, of a black color with a marked red spot, found in New Zealand usually among the rushes and sedges near the sea-shore. The bite of this spider is dangerous and sometimes fatal.

katsup (kat'sup), n. Samo as catchup.

kattimundoo (kat-i-mun'dō), n. See cattimundoo.

katydid (kā'ti-did), n. [So called in imitation of its peculiar note.] An orthopterous insect of the family Locustidae, of large size, green color, and arboreal habits. Its note (which is imitated by its name) is produced by stridulation. The common katydid is Cyrtophyllum concavum. It is abundant in the central and eastern United States, where its shrilling call is one of the most familiar sounds of a summer night. The wing-covers are long, entirely covering the hind wings, and of a pretty pale-green color. By means of the long similar-shaped ovipositor, the eggs are pushed into crevices in the soft bark and stems of plants. The round-winged katydids are several species of Amblycorypha, as A. rotundifolia, abundant in the northern United States and Canada. Microcentrum retinervis is the angular-winged katydid. Another katydid, of slender form, is Phaneroptera curvicauda.

Broad-winged Katydid (Cyrtophyllum concavum).

I love to hear thine earnest voice,
Wherever thou art hid,
Thou testy little dogmatist, Thou pretty Katydid!
O. W. Holmes, To an Insect.

kaucei, n. A Middle English form of causey. See causeway.

kaula, kauwila (kou'i-lā), n. [Hawaiian.] One of two trees of the buckthorn family, Alphitonia ponderosa and Colubrina oppositifolia. The former is a tall tree useful to the inhabitants on account of its close-grained, hard, and heavy wood, which turns black in drying, and was formerly used for clubs, spears, the rafters of their sacred buildings, etc. The latter is a small branching tree of comparatively little importance.

kaunī, n. An obsolete form of *khan*².

kauri (kou'ri), n. [Maori.] Same as kauri-pine.

kauri-gum (kou'ri-gum), n. The resin which exudes from the thick bark of the kauri-pine. Masses weighing even 100 pounds are found in the soil where the trees have formerly grown. It is used in making varnish. Also kauri-resin, caudie-gum.

kauri-pine (kou'ri-pīn), n. The coniferous tree Agathis (Dammara) australis, the finest forest-tree of New Zealand. It sometimes attains the height of 180 feet, and affords a remarkably durable, straight-grained timber, easily worked, and susceptible of a high polish. It is used for masts, decking, and other ship-building purposes, for houses, bridges, and railway-ties, for furniture, and for numerous other objects. The name kauri is sometimes extended to the other species of the genus. It appears variously spelled as caudi, caudie, caurie, kaurie, kaury, kourie, etc. See kauri-gum, and also Dammara.

kauri-resin (kou'ri-rez'in), n. Same as kauri-gum.

kausia, n. See causia.

kauwila, n. See kaula.

kava (kā'vā), n. [Hawaiian.] 1. A Polynesian shrub, Macropiper latifolium (Piper methysticum), of the pepper family. It is an erect, knotted, soft-stemmed plant with dark-green heart-shaped leaves. Its root has aromatic and pungent qualities, and affords by fermentation an intoxicating drink.

2. A beverage derived from this plant. The native method of preparation was by chewing the root, adding water to the result, and straining, the last process being accompanied by ceremonial chanting. Also cava, ava, kava, and ava.

kavass, n. See carass.

kave, v. and n. See *cave*².

kavel, n. See *cavel*¹.

kaver, n. See *caver*².

kawī, v. and n. See *cawī*¹.

kawa, n. See kara.

kawa-kawa (kā'wā-kā'wā), n. An ornamental shrub of New Zealand, Macropiper (Piper) excelsum, sometimes cultivated.

kawass (ka-was'), n. See carass.

ka-wattie (kā'wat'i), n. Same as *ka*¹.

Kawi (kā'wī), n. [Javanese.] The ancient and sacred language of Java. Also written Kari.

Javanese as now spoken is far from being the same as the language of the old inscriptions and manuscripts. The latter (which is usually called Kawi, though some scholars insist on the name Old Javanese) was probably based on the Javanese of Mādjakerto, while the Krāmā of the present day finds its type in that of Surakarta. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 608.

kawn (kân), n. See khan.

kawrie, n. See kauri-pine.

kaxes, n. A form of ker.

kay¹ (kā), n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of *key*¹.

kay² (kā), n. Same as *key*².

kay³ (kā), n. Same as *key*³.

kay⁴ (kā), n. [ME. ka, < AS. ka* = D. G. Dan. Sw., etc. ka, < L. ka, the name of the letter K, k, called in Gr. κάππα.] The name of the letter K, k. It is rarely so written, the symbol K, k, being used instead.

kaya (kā'yā), n. [Chin.] A coniferous tree of China, Torreya grandis. It has a height of sixty feet, bears an umbrella-shaped crown, and affords a good timber.

kayagei, n. Same as keyage.

kayak (ka'yak), n. [Also kajak, kayack, kyack, kiak; a native Greenland (Eskimo) name.] In Greenland, a light fishing-boat, made of seal-skins stretched over a wooden frame, having in the middle of the upper side an opening to receive the fisherman, who wraps himself in a flap of sealskin, which is laced close around the hole to prevent the penetration of water.

kayaker (ka'yak-ēr), n. One who fishes in a kayak.

Almost in an instant the animal charged upon the kayaker. Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 416.

Kayea (kā'yē-ā), n. [NL. (Wallich, 1832), named in honor of Dr. R. Kaye Greville of Edinburgh.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous trees, belonging to the natural order Guttifera, tribe Calophyllea, characterized by the small sub-globose anthers, the 4-ovuled ovary, and the 4-parted apex of the style. The leaves are oblong and finely pinnately veined; the flowers are usually small and numerous, in terminal panicles; and the fruit is a rounded fleshy drupe. There are six species, all natives of tropical Asia. K. floribunda is a large and handsome evergreen tree with narrow, opposite, laurel-like leaves, and terminal panicles of tetramerous white flowers tinged with pink. It grows in Sylhet. K. stylosa of Ceylon is said to yield a useful timber and to have fragrant flowers.

kaylet, n. An obsolete form of *kail*².

kaynard, n. [ME., < OF. caignard, cagnard, idle, slothful.] See caynard.

A kaynard and a olde folte,
That thryfte hath loste and boghte a bolte.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 55. (Hallivell.)

Sire, olde kaynard, is this thy narray?
Why is my neyghbores wyf so gay?
She is honoured over al ther she goth;
I sitte at hoom, I have no thrifty cloth.
Chaucer, Prolog. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 227.

kayret, v. See cair.

kaza (ka-zā'), n. [Turk. qaza, a judging, decree, also a judicial district; cf. qāzī, a judge; see kadi, cađi.] A small administrative district in Turkey, being a subdivision of a sanjak.

kazardly, kazzardly (kaz'ard-li), a. [Also kasardly; < kasard*, kazard*, < OF. casard, tame, home-keeping, < case, < L. caesa, a house, cottage; see casa.] Liable to disease or accident; lean; not thriving: used in the north of England, especially of cattle.

kazit, n. Same as kadi.

kazoo (ka-zō'), n. [Appar. a made word.] A so-called musical instrument or toy, consisting of a wooden tube of peculiar shape, containing a vibrating strip of catgut. A sound is produced by singing into the tube, so as to set up a kind of rattling sympathetic vibration in the catgut.

kazzardly, a. See kazardly.

K. B. An abbreviation (a) of Knight of the Bath, and (b) of King's Bench.

K. C. B. An abbreviation of Knight Commander of the Bath.

kea (kō'ā), n. [Australian.] The sheep-killing parrot of Australia, Nestor notabilis.

A mob of hoggets were attacked by keas, and in one night no less than 200 sheep were killed. Canterbury Times, March 19, 1884.

keach (kēch), v. t. [Perhaps a dial. form and use of *keech*¹, catch.] To dip out (water). [Prov. Eng.]

keaki, v. i. [Var. of cack* for cackle.] To cackle like a goose. Nares.

The sober goose (not thinking ought amiss)
Amongst the rest did (harshly) keake and hisse.
John Taylor, Works (1630).

keamer (kē'mēr), n. [Origin obscure.] A kind of ferret. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]

kearn, n. An obsolete form of *ken*⁴.

keave¹, n. and v. See keere.

keave², v. Same as *cave*².

keb (keb), v. i.; pret. and pp. kebbed, ppr. kebbing. [Origin obscure.] To east a lamb immaturely; lose a lamb in any way: said of a ewe. [Scotch.]

keb (keb), n. [See keb, r.] 1. A ewe that has brought forth immaturely, or has lost her lamb. [Scotch.]—2. A tick or sheep-louse. [Scotch.]

kebbie (keb'ī), n. [Origin obscure.] A cudgel; a club; a rough walking-stick with a hooked head. [Scotch.]

Ane o' them was gaun to strike my mother w' the side o' his broadsword. So I gat up my kebbie at them, and said I wad gie them as guid. Scott, Old Mortality, xlv.

kebbock, kebbuck (keb'uk), n. [Gael. cabag, a cheese.] A cheese. [Scotch.]

Weel can she milk cow and ewe,
And mak a kebbuck weel,
Laird of Drum (Child's Ballads, IV. 119).

A huge kebbock (a cheese, that is, made with ewe milk mixed with cow's milk) and a far of salt butter were in common to the company. Scott, Old Mortality, viii.

keb-ewe (keb'ū), n. Same as keb, 1.

keblah, n. See kiblah.

keblock (keb'lok), n. Some kind of wild turnip, probably Brassica Rapa. [Prov. Eng.]

kebsh (kebsh), n. [Ar.] The wild sheep of Barbary: same as aoudad.

kechilt, n. See kichel.

keck¹ (kek), a. [A dial. var. of quick, prob. due to leel, kykr, var. of krekr = F. quick. (Cf. *kedje*², kidge.)] Quick; lively; pert. [Prov. Eng.]

keck² (kek), v. i. [A var. of *kink*², both (like G. köken, vomit) imitative of the sound of retching.] 1. To heave the stomach; retch, as in an effort to vomit. Also keckle.

If his conscience were come to that unnatural dyscrasie, as to digest poyson and to keck at wholesome food, it was not for the Parlement, or any of his Kingdoms, to feed with him any longer. Milton, Eikonoklastes, li.

Hence—2. To feel or manifest strong disgust.

The faction—is it not notorious?—
Keck at the memory of glorions. Swift.

3. To act as if retching; arch the neck and protrude the head, as in the act of vomiting.

The hawk now and again affords healthy excitement to a score of crows, who keck at him as he flaps unconcerned on his wide, ragged wings through the air. P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 31.

keck² (kek), n. [See *keck*², v.] A retching or heaving of the stomach.

keck³ (kek), n. [See ker, in the form kecks, taken as a plural; see ker.] 1. Same as ker, 1.—2. A plant having a hollow stem.—Broad-leaved keck, Heracleum Sphondylium.—Trumpet-keck, the hollow stem of Angelica sylvestris, or some allied plant, which boys make into trumpets.

Keckia (kek'i-ā), n. [NL. (E. F. Glocker, 1841), named in honor of General Michael Keck von Keck, a patron of geology.] A genus of fossil algae belonging, according to Schimper, to the group Caulerpitica, of uncertain affinities, consisting of a phyllome from a cylindrical, apparently solid, many times-branching stem, the branches arising at an acute angle, simple or again branched, gradually thickened upward, and covered with large thick, scale-like rings or annular swellings which leave crescent-shaped scars when removed, indicating that they were hollow or sack-like. The typical species is K. annulata, described by Glocker from the Quadersandstein (Cenomanian) of Moravia. Other species have been reported from strata of the same age in Saxony, Silesia, Switzerland, and Russia, while forms referred by Heer to Muensteria, from the Flysch (Lower Eocene) of Switzerland, are now regarded as belonging to Keckia. Some half-dozen species of this genus are known to science.

keekish (kek'ish), a. [See *keek*² + -ish.] Having a tendency to retch or vomit.

Inordinate passion of vomiting, called cholera, is nothing different from a keekish stomach and a desire to cast, but only according to augmentation.

Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 640.

keckle¹ (kek'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. keckled, ppr. keckling. [Perhaps a var. of kinkle for *kink*¹, as *keek*² for *kink*².] Naut., to cover or guard by winding with something. Thus, hemp cables are keckled to protect them from chafing by winding old rope around them.

keckle² (kek'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. keckled, ppr. keckling. [Freq. of *keek*².] Same as *keek*², 1.

keckle³ (kek'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. keckled, ppr. keckling. [A var. of cackle: see cackle, gaggle, giggle.] To cackle; chuckle. [Scotch.]

I kick the wea stools o'er the mickle,
As round the fire the gzieta keckle
To see me loup. Burns, To the Toothache.

The auld carles kecklet with faltness as they saw the young dancers. Galt, Annals of the Parish, xlviii.

keckle³ (kek'1), n. [< keckle³, v.] A chuckle.

"I gude faith," cried the ballie, with a keckle of exultation, "here's proof enough now." Galt, Provost, xii.

keckle-pin[†] (kek'1-pin), n. [Appar. connected with kecks, kek.] A kex.

It lighted on her cheek,
And syne upon her chin,
And sang the points o' her yellow hair,
And she humt like keckle-pin.
Young Hunting (Child's Ballads, III. 300).

keckling (kek'ling), n. [Verbal n. of keckle¹, v.] Naut., the material used to keckle a cable.

kecklish (kek'lish), a. [< keckle² + -ish¹. Cf. keekish.] Keekish.

The verie small tendrils of the vine, . . . being punned and taken in water, staleth and represseth vomiting in those whose stomachs use ordinarily to be kecklish and soon to overturne. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxiii., Proeme.

kecklock (kek'lok), n. Brassica Sinapistrum, or charlock. [Prov. Eng.]

keno (kē'nō), n. [Also spelled kino; origin obscure.] A game of chance depending on the drawing of numbers. Each player selects a card or cards bearing a series of numbers in lines of five each, paying a set price for each card. Each player puts a button on any number on his card which is announced as drawn from a wheel, and he who first has five buttons in a row wins all the money taken for that round, minus the bank's discount.

kenogenesis (ken-ō-jen'-e-sis), n. [< Gr. κενός, empty (see cenotaph, etc.), + γενεσις, genera- tion.] Vitiated evolution, as distinguished from hereditary evolution; ontogenesis modified by adaptation, and therefore not true to its type; that development of an individual germ which does not truly epitomize and repeat the phylogenetic evolution of its race or stock: the opposite of palingenesis. See biogeny. Also kenogeny.

The ontogenetic recapitulation of the phylogeny is the more perfect the more the palingenetic process is conserved by heredity, and the more imperfect in proportion as the later modified evolution (kenogenesis) is introduced by adaptation. Haeckel, quoted in Encyc. Brit., XX. 422.

kenogenetic (ken'ō-jē-net'ik), a. [< kenogenesis, after genetic.] Of or pertaining to kenogenesis. — Kenogenetic process. See the extract.

The term kenogenetic process (or vitiation of the history of the germ) is applied to all such processes in germ-history as are not to be explained by heredity from primeval parent-germs, but which have been acquired at a later time in consequence of the adaptation of the germ or embryo form to special conditions of evolution.
Haeckel, Evol. of Man (trans.), I. 10.

kenosis (ke-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. κένωσις, an emptying, depletion, in theological use with ref. to Phil. ii. 6, 7, "who, being in the form of God, . . . emptied himself (ἐκένωσεν), taking the form of a servant" (revised version); < κενόω, make empty, < κενός, empty.] In theol., the self-limitation and self-renunciation of the Son of God in the incarnation.

Some restrict the kenosis to the laying aside of the divine form of existence, or divine dignity and glory; others strain it in different degrees, even to a partial or entire emptying of the divine essence out of himself, so that the inner trinitarian process between Father and Son, and the government of the world through the Son, were partially or wholly suspended during his earthly life.
Schaff, Hist. Christ. Church, III. § 142, 8.

kenotic (ke-not'ik), a. [< Gr. κενωτικός, pertaining to emptying, < κένωσις, emptying: see kenosis.] Of or pertaining to the kenosis.

Instead of raising the finite to the infinite, the modern Kenotic theory lowers the infinite to the finite.
Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 110.

kenoticist (ke-not'is-sist), n. [< kenotic + -ist.] One who believes in the theory of the kenosis.

The Chalcedonian Christology has been subjected to a rigorous criticism in Germany by Schleiermacher, Baur, Dörner, Rothe, and the modern Kenoticists.
Schaff, Christ and Christianity, p. 67.

kensback (kenz'bak), a. [See Kenspeck.] 1. Conspicuous; evident; clear. — 2. Perverse. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.] kenspeck (ken'spek), a. [Also corruptly kensback; more commonly kenspeckle, q. v.; < Icel. kennispeki, the faculty of recognition, < kenni, a mark (cf. G. kennzeichnen), *< kenna, know, recognize, ken, + speki, wisdom, < spakr, wise, having prophetic vision or insight: see ken*¹.] Known by marks; strongly marked or conspicuous; readily recognizable. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

The Homeric text is . . . certainly kenspeck, to use a good old English word — that is to say, recognizable; you challenge it for Homer's whenever you see it.
De Quincey, Homer, iii.

kenspeckle (ken'spek-l), a. [E. dial. also kenspeckled; in pop. apprehension "speckled or marked so as to be conspicuous" (Halliwell); see kenspeck.] Same as kenspeck, and the more common form. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Eng. Man. What kind of a Woman is it you enquire after?

Gib. Gend troth, sha's no Kenspeckle, she'aaw in a Clowd [she had a Spanish veil over her].
Mrs. Centlivre, The Wonder, iii.

I grant ye his face is kenspeckle,
That the white o' his e'e is turnd out.
Nicol, Poems, II. 157.

It is a kenspeckle hoof-mark, for the shoe was made by old Eckle of Cannobie — I would award to the curve of the cawker.
Scott, Monastery, xxxiv.

Kersmas (kér'smas), n. A dialectal variant of Christmas. Middleton.

kerve (kérv), v. 1f. A Middle English form of carve.—2. In coal-mining. See kerve. [North. Eng.]

kesar, n. A variant of *kaiser*¹.

kesh (kesh), n. A dialectal form of kez.

keslop (kes'lop), n. [Var. of cheslip, ult. of cheeslip, q. v.] The stomach of a calf prepared for rennet. Also, in Scotland, called keslip. [Prov. Eng.]

kesset, v. A Middle English form of kiss.

kesti. A Middle English preterit of *cast*¹.

kestrel (kes'trel), n. [Early mod. E. also kestrel, castrel, kastril, kastril; with medial t developed between s and r, < OF. querecelle, also written cercecelle, erescecelle, F. créececelle, a kestrel: cf. It. tristarello (Florio) for cristarello, dim. of quercello, a kestrel; OF. cercelle, a teal,

F. sarcelle, a teal, F. dial. cristel, a kestrel; Sp. cerceca, a kestrel; all < L. querquedula, a kind of teal: see Querquedula. The forma show much variation, due in part to different manipulations of the dim. ending.] A common European falcon, Falco tinnunculus, Tinnunculus alaudarius, or Cerchneis tinnunculus, of small size and reddish color. The body is 12½ inches long, the wing 9. The bird is brick-red with black arrow-heads on the back, the under parts being some shade of buff, fawn, or rufous, much spotted with black, and the head, neck, and rump being mostly bluish-gray. It inhabits parts of Asia and Africa, as well as the whole of Europe. It builds in hollow trees and in cliffs, or in nests deserted by crows, magpies, etc., and feeds on mice, small birds, and insects. The kestrel may be recognized by its habit of hovering or sustaining itself in the same place in the air by a rapid motion of the wings, always with its head to the wind (hence the names stannal and windhoer). The male and female differ in color, ash-gray prevailing in the former and rusty brown in the latter. This hawk being regarded as of a mean or base kind, kestrel was formerly often used as an epithet of contempt. The term is extended to a number of species of the restricted genus Tinnunculus or Cerchneis. The American representatives are commonly known as sparrow-hawks. See cut under sparrow-hawk. Also called stannal and windhoer.

Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast, but in his kestrel kynd
A pleasing value of glory he did fynd.

Spenser, F. Q., II. iii. 4.

What a cast of kestrels are these, to hawk after ladies thus!

B. Jonson, Epicene, iv. 2.

The hobby is used for smaller game, for darning larks, and stooping at quails. The kestrel was trained for the same purposes.

Goldsmith, Nat. Hist., II. 5.

ket¹ (ket), n. [Icel. kjöt = Dan. kjøil = Sw. kött, flesh.] Carrion; filth. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

ket² (ket), n. [Perhaps other uses of ket¹.] 1. A matted hairy fleece of wool. [Scotch.]

She was nae get o' moorland tips,
Wi' tawted ket, and hairy hips.

Burns, Poor Maille's Elegy.

2. The couch- or quitch-grass, Triticum repens. [Scotch.]

ket³ (ket), n. Same as kat.

ketch¹ (kech), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal form of catch¹.

I can already riddle, and can sing Ketches.

Beaumont, To B. Jonson.

ketch² (kech), n. [Cf. D. kits, G. kits, kitz, F. caïche, quiche (< E.); ult. (like caïque), which is directly < F. caïque = It. caïcco < Turk. qaiq, qaiq, a boat, skiff.] A small, strongly built, two-masted vessel, usually of from 100 to 250 tons burden, but sometimes of less. Ketches were formerly much used as bomb-vessels, the peculiarity of the rig affording ample space forward of the mainmast and at the greatest beam. See bomb-ketch.

Joseph Graffon set sail from Salem, the 2nd day in the morning, in a ketch of about forty tons (three men and a boy in her).

Winthrop, Hist. New England, l. 400.

A small ketch perished; so that seven ships only arrived in Virginia.

Bancroft, Hist. U. S., l. 100.

ketch³ (kech), n. A variant of keech.

Thou knotty-pated fool; thou whoreson obscene, greasy tallow-ketch.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 4, 253.

ketchup, n. See catchup.

Present my compliments to young Mr. Thomas, and ask him if he would step up and partake of a lamb chop and walnut ketchup.

Dickens, Hard Times, x.

ket-crow (ket'krō), n. [< ket¹ + crow.] The carrion-crow. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

ketet, a. [ME., prob. < Icel. kättr, merry, cheerful, = Sw. kät = Dan. kaad, wanton.] Bold; eager; alert; lively; cheerful; wanton.

Thou komest to kourt among the ket lordes.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 330.

keterin (ket'er-in), n. A variant of cateran.

ketjee-oil (ket'jē-oil), n. [< Hind. ketjee + E. oil.] Same as keora-oil.

kether, n. A corrupt form of quotha, as used in contempt.

Hel, hel! handsom, kether! sure somebody has been rouling him in the rice; sirrah, you a spoil'd your clothes.

Unnatural Mother (1698).

ketling, n. and a. An obsolete variant of kitling.

ketly, adv. [ME., < kete + *-ly*².] Quickly; eagerly.

Than that comli quen ketli vp rises,
Biddande blisli hire bedes buskea to hire chapel.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3023.

ketmia (ket'mi-ä), n. [NL. (Adanson).] 1f. [cap.] A genus of plants, now Hibiscus.—2. A plant of this genus, as bladder-ketmia.

ketone (kē'tōn), n. [Appar. an arbitrary variation of acetone, to make a distinction.] A compound in which the carbonyl group CO unites two alcohol radicals: as, methyl-ethyl ketone, CH₃.CO.C₂H₅. The ketones are volatile ethereal liquids alified to the aldehydes, but differing from them in that they do not reduce ammoniacal silver solutions, are converted into secondary alcohols by nascent hydrogen, and by further oxidation are decarboxylated. The ketones are also called acetones, but this term should be reserved for dimethyl ketone.

ketonic (kē-ton'ik), a. [< ketone + -ic.] Related to or containing a ketone.—Ketonic acid, an acid containing the carbonyl or ketone group CO, and having the properties of a ketone as well as of an acid.

kett (ket), n. See ket², 2.

kettle¹ (ket'l), n. [ME. ketel, ketyl, kettyl, chotel, < AS. etel, eytel = OS. keil = OFries. ketel, szetel, tszetel, tsietel = D. ketel = OIlg. ehozil, MIlg. kezzel, G. kesse = Icel. ketill = Sw. kittel = Dan. kjedel = Norw. kjel, kil = Goth. katils, a kettle; cf. Lith. katilus = Lett. katts = Bulg. kotel, kott, a kettle; usually derived < L. catinus (Sicilian kárvov), dim. catillus, a deep bowl, a deep vessel for cooking or serving up food (cf. Gr. kórvos, a cup); but the word may be Teut. confused with the L.: cf. OIlg. ehuzzi, MIlg. kezzi, a kettle (= AS. ete, glossed cacubus); Icel. kati, also kella, a small ship.]

1. A vessel of iron, copper, tin, or other metal, of various shapes and dimensions, used for boiling or heating water and other liquids, or for cooking vegetables, etc., by boiling. Compare camp-kettle, tea-kettle.

A kettle, slung
Between two poles upon a stick transverse, Receives the morsel. Cowper, Task, l. 560.

A few weeks ago she had all the fruit gathered, all the sugar got out, all the brass kettles scoured and ready.

W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 288.

2. A tin pail. [Local, U. S.]-3f. A kettle-drum.

And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,
The trumpet to the cannoner without.

Shak., Hamlet, v. 2, 286.

4. Figuratively, a cavity or depression suggesting the interior of a kettle. Specifically—(a) A hole in the ground in deep water, in which carp huddle together during winter in a kind of hibernation. (b) In geol., any cavity, large or small, in solid rock or detrital material, which resembles a kettle in form. "The kettle" of the Sierra Nevada is about a mile across the top and 1,600 feet deep. Small cavities worn in rock by the revolutions of a stone in a swift current are of frequent occurrence, varying from a few inches to several feet in diameter and depth. Cavities of this kind are more commonly known as pot-holes, and sometimes as giants' kettles. (See also blocky-kettle.)

kettle² (ket'l), n. Same as kiddle¹.—A kettle of fish, or a pretty kettle of fish, a complicated and bungled affair; an awkward mess. [Kettle in this phrase is usually plausibly referred to kettle² = kiddle¹, but as used it has no individual significance.]

"You had better tell your uncle with my compliments," said Mr. Dingwell, "that he'll make a kettle of fish of the whole affair, in a way he doesn't expect, unless he makes matters square with me."

J. S. Le Fanu, Tenants of Mallory, xxxvii.

kettle³ (ket'l), r. i. A variant of kittle².

kettle-bail (ket'l-bāi), n. A dredge used in taking scallops, having the blade adjusted to swing in the eyes of the arms to prevent it from sinking in the mud. [Rhode Island.]

kettle-case (ket'l-kās), n. The Orehis muscula, an early orchis in England. [Prov. Eng.]

kettle-de-benders. See kittly-benders.

kettle-dock (ket'l-dok), n. One of various plants: (a) Ragwort, Senecio Jacobaea. (b) Wild chervil, Anthriscus sylvestris. (c) Butter-bur, Petasites vulgaris (Tussilago Petasites). (d) Butter dock, Rumex obtusifolius.

kettledrum (ket'l-drum), n. 1. A musical instrument used in military bands and in orchestras, consisting of a hollow brass hemisphere from 24 to 30 inches in diameter, over which is stretched a head of parchment. It is sounded by blows from a soft-headed, elastic mallet or stick. The pitch of the tone is determined by various devices for adjusting the tension of the head. In orchestral music two or more kettledrums (technically called timpani) are employed, tuned at different pitches, usually at the tonic and the dominant of the piece to be performed. As the pitch may be accurately fixed, kettledrums are much used, in conjunction with other instruments, for emphasizing the rhythm, and for increasing the sonority of the general effect. They are also much used in short solo passages; and various experiments have been made, with extended and elaborate effects, with a large number of drums.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse,
Keeps wassail, and the awagging up-spring reels;
And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus Bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shak., Hamlet, i. 4, 11.

A few notes on the trumpet mingled with the occasional boom of the kettle drum. Scott, Old Mortality, vi.

2. A fashionable afternoon entertainment given by a woman chiefly to women. It is less formal than an evening party, and the lady-guests generally wear bonnets. Also drum.

kettledrummer (ket'l-drum'ēr), n. One who beats the kettledrum.

kettle-hat, n. [< ME. ketille-hatte; < kettle + hat.] A kind of helmet used in the fourteenth century. It does not appear that the term was definitely limited to any one form. See pot.

Than the comliche kynge kaughte hym in armes,
Keate of his kettle-hatte, and kyssede hym fulle sone, Saide, "welcome, ayr Craddoke, so Criste mott me helpe!"
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), i. 3517.

kettle-hole (ket'l-hōl), n. In geol., a cavity in rock or detrital material, having more or less exactly the shape of the interior of a kettle. See kettle, 4, kettle-moraine, and pot-hole.

kettleman (ket'l-man), n.; pl. kettlemen (-men). A fish, Lophius piscatorius, commonly called the angler.

kettle-moraine (ket'l-mō-rān'), n. An accumulation of detrital material characterized by kettle-shaped depressions varying in depth from a few feet to a hundred, their outlines being rudely circular, and their sides as steep as is consistent with the stability of the soil. The district where they occur lies to the northwest of Lake Winnebago and Green Bay in Wisconsin, where it is locally known as the potash kettle country. The origin of these remarkable depressions is generally supposed to be connected in some way with the former glaciation of the region; but the manner of their formation has not yet been explained.

kettle-pin (ket'l-pin), n. Same as skittle-pin.

Billiards, kettle-pins, noddie-boards, tables, truncks, shov-el-boards, fox and geese, and the like.
Shelton, Pref. to Don Quixote. (Todd.)

kettler, n. [Early mod. E. ketler; < kettle + -er.] One who makes or repairs kettles; a tinker.

Drawing in amongst bunglers and kettlers under the plain frieze of simplicity, thou mayest finely couch the wrought velvet of knavery.
Middleton, Black Book.

kettle-smock (ket'l-smok), n. A smock-frock. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] kettle-stitch (ket'l-stich), n. In bookbinding, a chain-stitch that knots and fastens the last two leaves of a book at its head and tail; a corruption of chain-stitch or catch-up stitch. Zachusdorf, Bookbinding, p. 173.

kettrin (ket'rin), n. A variant of catetan.

ketupa (ke-tō'pā), n. [Javanese.] 1. An eared owl of Java, Sirix ketupa.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of owls, related to the foregoing, established by Lesson in 1831; the fish-owls. They have large ear-tufts, and mostly naked tarai; the feet are roughened, as in ospreys. There are three species, K. javanensis (the type), K. flavipes, and K. ceylonensis. The last is the common Indian fishing-owl.

Keuper (koi'pēr), n. [G.] In geol., the German name of the upper division of the Triassic series, a formation of importance in Europe, and especially in Germany. The upper part of the Keuper consists there of marl, and contains large deposits of gypsum and rock-salt. The lower part is made up chiefly of gray sandstones and dark marl and clay, and contains numerous remains of plants, and sometimes coal of rather poor quality. See Trias.

kevel², n. See *cavel*².

They kiest kevels them amang,
Wha wou'd to the greenwood gang.
Lord Dingwall (Child's Ballads, I. 288).

kevel³ (kev'el), n. [Prob. a native name (?).] A name of Antelope cavella of Pallas, a supposed species of gazel, later identified with the common gazel, A. dorcas.

kevel-head (kev'el-hed), n. Naut., the end of one of the top-timbers used as a cavel.

keverauncer, n. [ME., < *kever*² + -ance.] Recovery.

kevercheft, n. A Middle English form of kerchief. Chaucer.

kevil², n. See *cavel*².

Keweenaw (kē'wē-nā-an), n. [Also called Keweenawian and Keweenawian; < Keweenaw (see def.) + -an.] The name given to the series of trappean rocks and their interbedded sandstones and conglomerates in which the Lake Superior copper-mines are worked. Those who gave the name had the idea that the cupriferous series was distinct in geological age from the sandstone lying adjacent to it on the east and west, which is generally admitted to be the equivalent of the Potadam sandstone of the New York Survey, and of which the so-called Keweenaw appears to be a local modification, originated by intense volcanic action along a line stretching from the extremity of Keweenaw Point in Michigan southwest to beyond the borders of Minnesota.

kewkaw (kū'kâ), a. [Cf. askew (?).] Awry; askew.

The picture topsie-turvie stands kewkaw [read kewkaw]:
The world turn'd upside downe, as all men know.
Taylor, Works (1630), ii. 233.

kex (keks), n. [Also kecks, kir, also kecksy (prop. adj.), and kek; < ME. hex, kir, < W. cecsy, pl., hollow stalks, hemlock (cf. W. cegid, hemlock), = Corn. cegas, hemlock; cf. OFlem. kojcke, hemlock; L. ciuta, hemlock.] 1. A hollow stalk, especially when dry, of various large umbelliferous plants. [Obsolete or archaic.]

With her [Eve's] gentle blowing Stirs vp the heat, that from the dry leaves glowing Kindies the Reed, and then that hollow kiz
First fires the small, and then the greater sticks.
Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Week, ii, The Handy-Crafts.
[Sometimes applied as a term of contempt to a person.

I'll make these wither'd kexes bear my body
Two hours together above ground.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, v. 2.]

2. Hemlock. [Archaic.]

Tho' the rough kex break
The starr'd mosaic. Tennyson, Princess, iv.
kexent, a. [Early mod. E., in the var. form kixen, spelled irreg. kieson; < kex, kix, & -ent.] The form kekson is used as a noun.] Made of kexes or hollow stalks.

One daye agayne will, in his rage,
Crusheth it all as a kieson cage,
And spill it quite.
Puttenham, Partheniades, xi.

kexyt (kek'si), a. [< kex + -yt. Cf. kecksy, n., kecky, a.] Like a kex; hollow; dry; sapless.

The earth will grow more and more dry and sterile in succession of ages; whereby it will become more kexy, and lose of its solidity. Dr. H. More, Godliness, VI. x. § 3.

key¹ (kē), n. [Early mod. E. also keic, kay, etc.; < ME. kege, keie, keige, also cay, kay, < AS. cāg, cāge = OFries. kai, kei, North Fries. kay, a key; not found in other languages.] 1. An instrument for fastening or opening a lock, fitted to its wards, and adapted, on being inserted and turned or pushed in the keyhole, to push a bolt one way or the other, or to raise a catch or latch; in certain complicated locks, a portable appliance which on being inserted in the proper place in the lock lifts tumblers or in some other way allows the bolt to be shot without itself exercising force upon it.

The(y) loeked the dore and than went theyr way.
Cayphas and Anna of that kept the key.
Joseph of Arimathe (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.
She took the little ivory chest,
With half a sigh she turn'd the key.
Tennyson, The Letters.
Hence—2. Something regarded as analogous to a key, in being a means of opening or making clear what is closed or obscure; especially, that by means of which (often by means of which alone) some difficulty can be overcome, some obstacle removed, some end attained, something unintelligible explained, etc.: as, the key to knowledge; Gibraltar is the key to the Mediterranean; a key to the solution of an algebraic problem; a key to an algebra or arithmetic (a book giving the solution of mathematical problems proposed as exercises in such text-books); the key to a cipher.

Thou art Peter. . . . And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Matt. xvi. 18, 19.
Woe unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge. Luke xi. 52.

These counties were the keys of Normandy.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 1, 114.

To learn thy secrets, get into my power
The key of strength and safety.
Milton, S. A., i. 799.

"Stæfcraft is seō cāg the thāra bōca andgit unīfcth"
[AS.], grammar is the key that unlocks the sense of the books.
F. A. March, Anglo-Sax. Gram., p. 140.
The key to all the enigmas, all the imputed guilt, all the peculiar usefulness to his country of Peel's career, is to be sought in the original contrast between his character and his position. W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 2d ser., p. 206.

3. In mech.: (a) A hand-tool for controlling a valve, moving a nut, etc., which is independent of the part to be moved. In this sense a spanner, wrench, bedstead-wrench, etc., are keys.

She guides the finger o'er the dancing keys. . . .
And pours a torrent of sweet notes around.
Couper, Chantry, i. 109.

5. A part pressed by the finger to control the action of a typewriter or other similar machine, in the manner of a musical keyed instrument.

—6. Any one of the various forms of circuit-closer used in electrical experiments and in the practical applications of electricity. See telegraph.

—7. In music: (a) In musical theory, the sum of relations, melodic and harmonic, which exist between the tones of an ideal scale, major or minor, and in which its unity and individ-

(b) Any device for wedging up or locking together different parts, or for jamming or binding them to prevent vibration or slipping. Such are: (1) the wedge or cotter driven between the hub of a wheel and its shaft to bind the two together; (2) a wedge in a chain to prevent slipping; (3) a wedge put in a split tenon to cause it to spread when driven into a mortise.

(c) A bolt which secures the cap-square to the cheek of a gun-carriage. See cut under gun-carriage.

(d) In masonry, the central stone of an arch or vault, usually the uppermost stone; the keystone (although in a true arch no one of the voussoirs is more important to the stability of the structure than any other). See cut under arch.

(e) In carp.: (1) A piece inserted in the back of a board to prevent warping. (2) The last board in a series of floor-boards, tapering in shape, and serving when driven home to hold the others in place. (3) The roughing on the under side of a veneer, designed to assist it in holding the glue. (f) In bookbinding, one of a series of small tools used by the sewer of a book to keep the bands in place when the sections of the book are in a sewing-bench. They are made of metal or hard wood, shaped like a yoke, or the letter U, and of the size 1 by 3 inches. (g) A joint to assist in supporting a train of rods and the tools in a tube-well. (h) A wrench or lever for tuning stringed instruments of fixed intonation, like the pianoforte and the harp; a tuning-wrench or tuning-hammer. It consists of a metal head hollowed so as to fit closely over the tuning-pins, and a handle, usually long enough to give considerable leverage. (i) The surplus mortar or plaster that passes between the laths, and serves to hold the plastering in position. (j) A hollow cut in the back of a tile or terra-cotta ornament, or on a wall, to hold mortar or cement.—4. In musical instruments: (a) In instruments especially of the wood wind group, a lever and valve operated by the player's finger, and designed either to open or to close a hole or vent in the side of the tube, so as to alter the pitch of the tone by altering the length of the vibrating air-column within.

While in the simpler varieties of the flute, the oboe, the clarinet, etc., such holes are controlled by the fingers directly, in more complex varieties the number of holes is so great, and their position and size are so inconvenient, that this supplementary mechanism is a necessity. A complete system of keys was first elaborated for the flute by Theobald Boehm in 1832, and has since been applied to the oboe, the clarinet, and to some extent to the bassoon, with a decided gain in ease of manipulation, length and fullness of compass, and sonorosity of tone. Partial systems of keys are also found in the English horn, the basset-horn, etc. Notes and keys have been used in various brass wind-instruments, notably in the bugle and the saxophone, though as a rule they are less used than valves. (See valve.) See cuts under flute, clarinet, oboe, etc.

(b) In instruments with a keyboard, like the organ and the pianoforte, one of the levers which are depressed in the act of playing. When operated by the finger, it is more exactly termed a digital (or rarely) a manuai; when operated by the foot, a pedal. In the pianoforte each key or digital is connected with a series of levers, by which a hammer may be thrown against the string or strings belonging to that key, at the same time lifting from the strings the damper that prevents their vibration. When the key is released, the damper falls and stops the vibration. The duration, the force, and to some extent the quality of the tone depend upon the way in which the finger depresses the key. (See touch.) In the harpsichord each key, with its levers, slips a leather or quill plectrum past the string, so as to snap or twang it. In the clavichord each key presses a metal tangent against the string, so as to drive it into vibration. In chimes of bells rung from a keyboard, each key throws a hammer against one of the bells. In the pipe-organ each key, whether a digital or a pedal, is connected with a series of levers, by which a valve is opened to admit the compressed air from the bellows into a particular groove or channel, over which stand all the pipes belonging to that key. The number of pipes actually sounded depends upon the number of stops drawn. (See cut under organ.) In the harmonium and reed-organ each key, with its levers, opens a valve, by which either an outward or an inward current of air is set up through the groove or channel with which are connected all the reeds belonging to that key. The number of reeds sounded depends upon the number of stops drawn. (See cut under reed-organ.) Keys in this sense are also (unfortunately) called notes. They are arranged according to an arbitrary plan, some being colored white and some black, and they are named by letters, etc., for which see keyboard.

(c) In instruments with a keyboard, like the organ and the pianoforte, one of the levers which are depressed in the act of playing. When operated by the finger, it is more exactly termed a digital (or rarely) a manuai; when operated by the foot, a pedal. In the pianoforte each key or digital is connected with a series of levers, by which a hammer may be thrown against the string or strings belonging to that key, at the same time lifting from the strings the damper that prevents their vibration. They are arranged according to an arbitrary plan, some being colored white and some black, and they are named by letters, etc., for which see keyboard.

(d) In instruments with a keyboard, like the organ and the pianoforte, one of the levers which are depressed in the act of playing. When operated by the finger, it is more exactly termed a digital (or rarely) a manuai; when operated by the foot, a pedal. In the pianoforte each key or digital is connected with a series of levers, by which a hammer may be thrown against the string or strings belonging to that key, at the same time lifting from the strings the damper that prevents their vibration. When the key is released, the damper falls and stops the vibration. The duration, the force, and to some extent the quality of the tone depend upon the way in which the finger depresses the key. (See touch.) In the harpsichord each key, with its levers, slips a leather or quill plectrum past the string, so as to snap or twang it. In the clavichord each key presses a metal tangent against the string, so as to drive it into vibration. In chimes of bells rung from a keyboard, each key throws a hammer against one of the bells. In the pipe-organ each key, whether a digital or a pedal, is connected with a series of levers, by which a valve is opened to admit the compressed air from the bellows into a particular groove or channel, over which stand all the pipes belonging to that key. The number of pipes actually sounded depends upon the number of stops drawn. (See cut under organ.) In the harmonium and reed-organ each key, with its levers, opens a valve, by which either an outward or an inward current of air is set up through the groove or channel with which are connected all the reeds belonging to that key. The number of reeds sounded depends upon the number of stops drawn. (See cut under reed-organ.) Keys in this sense are also (unfortunately) called notes. They are arranged according to an arbitrary plan, some being colored white and some black, and they are named by letters, etc., for which see keyboard.

(i) The surplus mortar or plaster that passes between the laths, and serves to hold the plastering in position. (j) A hollow cut in the back of a tile or terra-cotta ornament, or on a wall, to hold mortar or cement.—4. In musical instruments: (a) In instruments especially of the wood wind group, a lever and valve operated by the player's finger, and designed either to open or to close a hole or vent in the side of the tube, so as to alter the pitch of the tone by altering the length of the vibrating air-column within.

While in the simpler varieties of the flute, the oboe, the clarinet, etc., such holes are controlled by the fingers directly, in more complex varieties the number of holes is so great, and their position and size are so inconvenient, that this supplementary mechanism is a necessity. A complete system of keys was first elaborated for the flute by Theobald Boehm in 1832, and has since been applied to the oboe, the clarinet, and to some extent to the bassoon, with a decided gain in ease of manipulation, length and fullness of compass, and sonorosity of tone. Partial systems of keys are also found in the English horn, the basset-horn, etc. Notes and keys have been used in various brass wind-instruments, notably in the bugle and the saxophone, though as a rule they are less used than valves. (See valve.) See cuts under flute, clarinet, oboe, etc.

(e) In instruments with a keyboard, like the organ and the pianoforte, one of the levers which are depressed in the act of playing. When operated by the finger, it is more exactly termed a digital (or rarely) a manuai; when operated by the foot, a pedal. In the pianoforte each key or digital is connected with a series of levers, by which uality are contained; tonality. Thus, a proper sense of these relations is called a proper sense of key, and a due observance of them puts a performance in key. For the difference between major and minor keys in this sense, see mode. (b) In musical theory and notation, the tonality centering in a given tone, or the several tones taken collectively, of a given scale, major or minor. The given tone, or the first tone of the given scale, is called the key-note, key-tone, or tonic; and the key is named by the name of this tone. A scale is simply an arrangement of the tones of a key in their melodic order. In modern music, and in vocal music generally, all major keys are intended to be precisely similar to one another, except in pitch, and all minor keys likewise similar to one another. But in the systems of tuning instruments of fixed intonation before the middle of the eighteenth century, certain keys were favored and others slighted; so that some keys were very useful, and some practically useless. It is said that this difference, which was originally incidental to the imperfect plan of the keyboard, and which was to have been obliterated by the introduction of the equal temperament, is to some extent unavoidable, certain keys having a peculiar quality per se; but these differences appear, on close analysis, to be relative or accidental rather than essential. (See temperament.) The keyboard of the organ and the pianoforte, however, is so planned as to make a decided mechanical difference between keys or scales based on different digitals. For example, the major key or scale of the digital called C requires the use of only white digitals, or naturals; hence it is called (unfortunately) the natural key. Other keys or scales require the use of one or more black digitals, which are called either sharps or flats; hence they are called the keys of one, two, three, or more sharps or flats, as the case may be. The keys of one or more sharps are called collectively the sharp keys; those of one or more flats, the flat keys. Practically, keys of more than six sharps or flats are rarely mentioned. (See circle of keys, under circle.) When these keys are represented by the staff-notation, the black digitals are indicated by marks \sharp or \flat prefixed to certain of the notes. But since the key in which a piece is to be performed is the same either throughout, or at least for extended passages, these sharps or flats are customarily grouped into a key-signature at the beginning of the piece or passage, and the effect of this signature is understood to continue until contradicted by further signs: thus—

(The crosses mark the degree belonging to the key-note.) The sharps and flats in such signatures are counted from left to right; in sharp signatures the position of the key-note is always one degree above the last sharp, while in flat signatures it is always on the same degree with the last flat but one. This provides a rule for finding the key-note from each signature except those of the keys of C and F. The key-notes of the sharp keys, taken in direct order, are distant from one another either by a fifth upward or a fourth downward, as are the key-notes of the flat keys, taken in inverse order. These signatures are also used for minor keys, the key-notes of such keys being in each case two degrees below the key-notes as given for major keys. The major and minor keys that use the same signature are termed relatives of each other. See relative. (See circle of keys, under circle.) The entire system of keys as described above is conditioned upon the keyboard of the organ and the pianoforte, and therefore is essentially arbitrary. It has no basis in the phenomena of sound or the necessities of music as an art. Its complexity is due historically to the inadequate medieval theory of music, and secondarily to the arbitrary instrumental mechanism and the notation that grew out of that theory. Of the many attempts to improve or replace the system, the tonic sol-fa notation has been the most successful. See notation, and tonic sol-fa (under tonic).

Both warbling of one song, both in one key.

"There," said Lowton, "it's too late now; you can't get in to-night; you've got the key of the street, my friend."
Dickens, Pickwick, xlvii.

Tuning-key. See above, def. 3 (h).
Key¹ (kē), v. t. [Key, n.]. 1. To fasten with a key, or with a wedge-shaped piece of wood or metal; fasten or secure firmly.

Heneue gate was keythed [read keized] clos
Til lambo of love now he deyede.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 205.

Thus the head may be keyed to the bar at any part of the length of the latter. J. Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 181.

2. To regulate the tone of by the use of a key, or to set to a key or pitch in any way, as a musical instrument: as, to key up a violin.

Whose speech and gesturo were clearly keyed to that profound respect which is woman's first foundation claim on man.
G. W. Cable, The Granddissimes, p. 173.

These speeches are always short, simple, plisn and unpretentious. They are keyed in the note of perfect good taste, and never fail to please the audience to which they are addressed.
T. C. Crayford, English Life, p. 81.

Keyed up, high-strung; excited.
Key² (kē), n. [Formerly also kay (and now quay, after mod. F. quai, the pronunciation, however, remaining that of the reg. E. form key); < ME. key, keye (= D. kaai = LG. kaije = G. kai = Sw. kaj = Dan. kai; ML. caium); < OF. caie, quai, quay, F. quai, a wharf, prob. < Bret. ca, an inclosure, = W. eac, an inclosure, hedge, field.] A wharf. See quay.

Lord! to see how he [Carteret] wondered to see the river so empty of boats, nobody working at the Custom-house keys.
Pepys, Diary, Nov. 7, 1665.

Key³ (kē), n. [Also cay, kay; < Sp. cayo, a low island, a sandbank, key; perhaps = OF. caye, F. quai, a wharf; see key².] A low island near the coast: used especially on the coasts of regions where Spanish is or formerly was spoken: as, the Florida keys.

Columbus discovered no isle or key so lonely as himself.
Emerson, Society and Solitude.

The Keys proper [of Florida] are all similar in structure, and form an extensive chain of low islands, rising nowhere more than twelve feet above the level of the sea. Starting from north of Capo Florida, they form an immense crescent extending as far west as the Tortugas.
A. Agassiz, Three Cruises of the Blake, I, 53.

Key⁴ (kē), n. See Keys.

Key-action (kē'ak'shən), n. In musical instruments like the organ or the pianoforte, the entire mechanism directly connected with the keyboard, including the keyboard itself, the jacks or stickers, the dampers, etc.

keyage (kē'āj), n. [ME. keyage, kayage (= ML. caigium), < OF. kayage, F. quayage; as key² + -age. Now quayage, with the pron. of the orig. keyage.] See quayage. E. Phillips, 1706.

keyaki (kē-yā'ki), n. [Jap.] A valuable timber-tree of Japan, the Zelkova acuminata. Its wood is prized, and is used extensively in cabinet-making, etc.

key-basket (kē'bās'ket), n. A basket to contain a housekeeper's keys.

A mob-cap covering her gray hair, and key-basket in hand, the wife of Washington must have offered a pleasant picture.
The Century, XXXVII, 841.

key-bed (kē'bed), n. In mach., a rectangular groove made to receive a key for the purpose of binding parts, as the wheel and shaft of a machine, firmly together, so as to prevent the one part from turning on the other; a key-seat.

keyboard (kē'bōrd), n. In the organ, pianoforte, and similar instruments, as the harpsichord, clavichord, etc., the series or horizontal row of finger-levers or digitals (usually called keys), by depressing which the performer causes the pipes, strings, or reeds to produce tones. The visible portions of part of the keys are white, while the others are black. The black keys are the shorter, and are raised above the level of the white keys; they are always separated from one another by one or two white keys, so as to form groups alternately of two and three. The depression of which the keys are capable is technically called the "dip." The keyboard contains altogether from fifty to ninety keys, the ratio of white to black being 7:5. The right-hand end of the keyboard is called the upper, because the keys there produce high tones, and the left-hand end is correspondingly called the lower. The white key next below (to the left of) the upper key of every group of three black keys is called A; the next white key to the right of this is called B; the next is called C; and so on, up to G, next to which another A is found. In Germany, by a curious difference of nomenclature, B is always called H, and B₂ is called B. (See B quadratum and B rotundum, under B.) In tuning, the tones produced by the various keys called by the same letter-name are made exact octaves of each other. The black keys are named by reference to the white keys on either side of them: thus, the black key between A and B is either A₂ or B₁, that between C and D is either C₂ or D₁, etc. When a white key is to be specially distinguished from a black one, it is called a natural: hence a scale or series of tones produced by using only white keys is called the natural scale, and its key (tonality) is called the natural key. (See key¹.) In general, a key next on the right to any given key is the sharp of the latter, and the second key to the right is its double sharp; while a key next on the left to any given key is the flat of the latter, and the second key to the left is its double flat. Thus, every key on the keyboard, except the black key called either C₂ or A₁, has three names: as A = G₂ = F₃, B = A₂ = C₃, C = B₂ = D₃, etc.; A₂ = B₁ = C₂, C₂ = D₁ = B₁, etc. (See flat and sharp.) The several keys and octaves are usually calculated from middle C—the C nearest the center of the keyboard, and historically the middle tone of the medieval hexachord system (see hexachord)—the vibration-number of whose tone is theoretically from 250 to 265. (See C.) The keyboard of the organ usually extends four to five octaves, from the second C below middle C to the third A or C above middle C; that of the pianoforte usually extends six to seven or seven and a third octaves, from the third A below middle C to the fourth A or C above middle C. The organ usually has keyboards both for the hands and for the feet, the former being distinguished as manual keyboards or manuals, the latter as pedal keyboards or pedals; and there are usually two or more manual keyboards, each with its own sets of pipes or stops, and capable of being used either independently or in conjunction with the others. The principal keyboard is that of the great organ; that above it is that of the swell organ; that below it (when there are three), that of the choir organ. (See organ.) In the old harpsichords and similar instruments two keyboards were sometimes provided, the one producing tones of different quality or force from the other. The keyboard has been developed gradually. Its first appearance was about the end of the eleventh century, when large levers that could be manipulated only by the whole hand or a blow of the fist, having a dip of several inches or even a foot, were introduced into the organ, and later into the clavichord and similar instruments. Only the levers corresponding to the modern white keys (diatonic) were used at first; those corresponding to the modern black keys (chromatic) were introduced in the twelfth to the fourteenth century, probably in this order: B₂, F₂, C₂, E₂, G₂. The chromatics were first placed in a distinct row from the diatonic; but in the fifteenth century all were combined into a single keyboard. The pedal keyboard was invented for the organ about the same time. Until the close of the eighteenth century the keys were colored white and black in exactly reverse order from the modern custom. (For a description of the mechanical details of the keyboard, see organ and pianoforte.) The gradual development of the keyboard kept pace with the gradual unfolding of the theory of the musical scale and of tonality. (See temperament.) To avoid the inaccuracy of many of the intervals in equal temperament, keyboards with more than twelve digitals and tones to the octave have been devised, but their use has been principally confined to acoustical investigations. The mechanical manipulation of the keyboard in musical performance involves a thorough muscular discipline of the hands. See touch, fingerings, technique.—Choir, great, pedal, solo, swell keyboards, in organ-building, the keyboards belonging respectively to the choir, great, pedal, solo, and swell organs. See organ.

key-bolt (kē'bōlt), n. Any bolt kept in position by a key or cotter, in distinction from one having a nut.

key-bone (kē'bōn), n. The collar-bone; the clavicle.

key-bugle (kē'bū'gl), n. A variety of bugle invented about 1815, having six keys and a complete chromatic compass of about two octaves. It is now superseded by valve-instruments. Also called Kent bugle.

Key-bugle.

The coach . . . spun along the open country road, blowing a lovely defiance out of its key-bugle.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xxxvi.

key-chain (kē'chān), n. A chain fastened at one end to the cheek of a gun-carriage and at the other to the key, to prevent its loss. See cut under gun-carriage.

key-chord (kē'kōrd), n. In music, the tonic triad of any key (tonality). See triad.

key-cold (kē'kōld), a. [Formerly also keacold, kaycold; < *key*¹ + col.] Cold as a key; icy; lifeless; inanimate.

And finally let vs consider by Chrises saying vnto them, that if we would not suffer the strength and honour of our faith to waxe luke-warme, or rather key-cold, and in manner leese his vigour by scattering our mindes abroad about so many trifling things, etc.
Sir T. More, Cumfort against Tribulation, fol. 8.

Either they marry their children in their infancy, when they are not able to know what love is, or else matche them with inequality, loynng burning sommer with key-cold winter, their daughters of twenty years olde or vnder to rich cormorants of three score or upwards.
J. Lane, Tell-Trothes New Yeares Gift (1593), p. 5 (Shak. Soc.).

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Shak., Rich. III., i. 2, 5.

Her apostolick vertu is departed from her, and hath left her Key-cold.
Milton, Church-Government, il. 3.

key-color (kē'kul'or), n. In painting, a leading color in a picture or composition.

key-desk (kē'desk), n. In organ-building, the desk-like case in which the keyboards and the stop-knobs are contained. The position of the key-desk with reference to the organ proper may be various, especially when the action is extended, or when pneumatic or electrical appliances are employed.

key-drop (kē'drop), n. A keyhole-guard of the modern form, usually attached to the escutcheon by a pivot and falling by its own weight to cover the keyhole.

keyed (kēd), a. [< *key*¹ + -ed.] 1. Having keys, as a musical instrument: as, a keyed flute or trombone; a keyed cithara or harmonica. See *key*¹, 4 (a) and (b).—2. Set or pitched in a particular key. See *key*¹, v. t., 2.—Keyed-stop violin. See key-stop.—Keyed violin, a musical instrument similar in shape to a pianoforte, having strings and a keyboard, but the tone being produced by the action of little horsehair bows pressed against the strings by the keys.

key-fastener (kē'fās'nēr), n. 1. Anything used to prevent the turning of a key, as a loop of wire hung over the door-knob and passed through the bow of the key.—2. A tapered or wedge-shaped piece of metal which holds the breech-block or breech-plug of a gun firmly closed when it is inserted in the seat; a modification of the grip-fastener.

key-file (kē'fil), n. A flat file of a uniform section throughout, used by locksmiths.

key-fruit (kē'frōt), n. Same as samara.

key-guard (kē'gārd), n. Same as keyhole-guard.

key-harp (kē'hārp), n. A musical instrument similar in shape and action to a pianoforte, but having tuning-forks in place of strings.

key-head (kē'hed), n. A head, as of a bolt, so shaped as to serve to bind or lock the object to which it is attached.—Key-head bolt. See *bolt*¹.

keyhole (kē'hōl), n. 1. A hole or aperture in a door or lock for receiving a key.

Make the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole.
Shak., As you Like It, iv. 1, 164.

But through the Key-holes and the Chinks of Doors, And thro' the narrow'st Walks of crooked Pores, He [Michael] past.
Cowley, Pindaric Odes, xiv. 15.

2. In carp., a hole or excavation passing through beams intended to be joined together, to receive the key which fastens them.—3. A small piece of water connected with a lake or other larger body; a little lake or bay. [New Brunswick.]

keyhole (kē'hōl), v. i.; pret. and pp. keyholed, pp. keyholing. [< keyhole, n.] To strike lengthwise, cutting in the target a hole which resembles a keyhole: said of a bullet in target-shooting. Reynolds.

keyhole-guard (kē'hōl-gārd), n. A sort of shield to cover a keyhole when the key is not inserted. Also key-guard.

keyhole-limpet (kē'hōl-lim'pet), n. A gastropod of the family Fissurellidae. There are several genera, as Fissurella, Emarginula, and others. These limpets derive their name from a perforation resembling a keyhole at the apex of the shell. See cut under Fissurellidae.

keyhole-saw (kē'hōl-sā), n. A narrow, slender saw used for cutting out sharp curves, such as those of a keyhole: same as compass-saw.

keynard, n. A variant of caynard.

key-note (kē'nōt), n. 1. In music, the tone on which a key (tonality) is founded; a tonic. See *key*¹, 7 (b). Hence—2. A central principle or idea; the pivotal point in a system, a composition, or a course of action; a controlling thought.

We have had, first of all, that remarkable discourse on Self-Limited Diseases, which has given the key-note to the prevailing medical tendency of this neighborhood.
O. W. Holmes, Med. Essays, p. 182.

key-pattern (kē'pat'ern), n. See meander and frēts, 2.

key-piece (kē'pēs), n. A log which, caught by a rock or other obstruction in a stream, causes a jam of logs. [U. S.]

key-pin (kē'pin), n. In an organ or pianoforte, a pin which passes through a key of the keyboard and on which the key plays as on a pivot or center, so that when the front of the key is depressed by the finger the part on the other side of the pin, called the key-tail, rises. In each key one such pin is inserted.

key-pipe (kē'pip), n. In a lock, a pipe or tube in which the key turns.

key-plate (kē'plāt), n. In carp., same as escutcheon, 2 (b).

key-point (kē'point), n. That point of a military position, entrenched or otherwise, in which its principal strength lies, and the loss of which would force the assailed to retire.

key-ring (kē'ring), n. 1. A finger-ring from which projects a tongue or blade which is either fixed or movable on a hinge, and serves as the key to a lock. Such key-rings were formerly common, and were often of rich design.—2. A ring used for keeping a number of keys together by being passed through their bows.

keyry, keiri (kē'ri), n. [Appar. an apothecaries' form of cheiri, the specific name.] The wallflower, Cheiranthus cheiri: more specifically called apothecaries' keyry.

Keys (kēz), n. pl. [From the first part of the Manx kiarc-as-feed, four-and-twenty, designating the number of representatives, < kiare, four (= Gael. ceithir = Ir. cethir, etc., = E. four), + as, and, + feed, twenty (= Gael. fichead = Ir. fiche, etc., = E. twenty).] A contraction of House of Keys, the name of the body of twenty-four representatives which constitutes the lower branch of the legislature (Court of Tynwald) of the Isle of Man.

A local parliament, called the House of Keys, an assembly far in advance of the other parliament belonging to the neighboring island, in this respect—that the members dispensed with the people, and solemnly elected each other.
Wylie Collins, Armsdale, il. 3.

The Keys were at one time self-elected, but in 1866 they consented to popular election. Encyc. Brit., xv. 452.

For the purposes of finance bills the [Manx] assembly (House of Keys) and the council sit together but vote separately. The Governor presides, as the English king did in his Great Council.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 216, note.

keysart, n. See *kaiser*¹.

key-seat (kē'sēt), n. A key-bed.

keyship (kē'ship), n. [< *key*¹ + -ship.] Same as tonality.

key-signature (kē'sig'nā-tūr), n. In musical notation, the sharps or flats placed at the head of the staff to indicate the tonality of the piece and the black digitals to be used in performing it upon the keyboard. See *key*¹, 7 (b), and signature.

keystone (kē'stōn), n. 1. The stone of an arch (typically the uppermost stone), which, being the last put in, is regarded as keying or locking the whole structure together; the stone at the apex of an arch. In Roman and Renaissance arches the keystone is very commonly sculptured as a decorative feature. In groined medieval vaults the keystone at the intersection of the ribs at the summit of the vault is usually ornamented with a sculptured boss or pendant. In a true or extradosed arch no one of the voussoirs is more important to the stability of the structure than any other. See *arch*¹, n., 2.

'Tis the last key-stone That makes the arch, the rest that there were put Are nothing till that comes to bind and shut.
B. Jonson, To Sir Edward Sackville.

That hour o' night's black arch the key-stane.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

Hence—2. A supporting principle; the chief element in a system; that upon which the remainder rests or depends.

The tenet of predestination was the keystone of his religion.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

In a very interesting letter of Gauss to W. Weber, he refers to the electrodynamic speculations with which he had been occupied long before, and which he would have published if he could then have established that which he considered the real keystone of electro-dynamics, namely the deduction of the force acting between electric particles in motion from the consideration of an action between them, not instantaneous, but propagated in time, in a similar manner to that of light.
Clerk Maxwell, Elect. and Mag., II. 435.

3. In chromolithography, the first stone on which the picture is drawn or photographed, to serve as an outline guide in preparing the other stones for the colors, a copy of the keystone being made on each stone for printing a single color. See lithography.

A drawing of the subject, in outline, on transfer tracing-paper, is made in the ordinary way; when transferred to a stone, this drawing is called the key-stone, and it serves as a guide to all the others.
Ure, Dict., III. 135.

4. In a Scotch lead-smelting furnace, a block of cast-iron used to close up the space at each end of the forestone, and to fill up the space between the forestone and the back part of the furnace.—Keystone State, the State of Pennsylvania: so called because, in the geographical order of the original thirteen States of the American Union, Pennsylvania occupies the middle (seventh) place. This order is represented by an arch of thirteen stones, with Pennsylvania as the keystone.

key-stop (kē'stop), n. A digital or key so fitted to a violin as to control the stopping of the strings. A violin provided with key-stops is called a key-stop or keyed-stop violin.

key-tail (kē'tāl), n. In an organ or pianoforte, that part of the keys of a manual which is beyond the key-pin, and which rises when the front of the key is depressed.

key-tone (kē'tōn), n. Same as key-note, 1.

key-trumpet (kē'trum'pet), n. A trumpet in which the length of the vibrating column of air, and thus the pitch of the tone, is controlled by holes in the side of the tube, which are opened and closed by means of levers or keys.

key-valve (kē'valv), n. In music, the pad or valve-plug which closes an aperture on the side of the tube of a wind-instrument. E. D.

keyway (kē'wā), n. A mortise made for the reception of a key; a slot in the round hole of a wheel for the reception of the key whereby the wheel is secured to the shaft. E. H. Knight.
keywood (kē'wūd), n. [ME., < key² + wood¹.] Wood landed at, and perhaps sold from, a quay.

That better governance and rule be had, and better oversight, vpon keywood, crates, and colez, and bagges to mete hem with. English Guilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 383.

key-word (kē'wərd), n. A word which serves as a key, guide, or explanation to the meaning, use, or pronunciation of other words, or to other matters.

These [books] are of poets, indicated by key-word P.: prose writers, key-word P. W. Science, XLIII, 168.

The key-word of life is "Thy will be done."
G. S. Merriam, S. Bowles, II, 66.

K. G. An abbreviation of Knight of the Garter. See garter.

K. G. F. An abbreviation of Knight of the Golden Fleece. See fleece.

kh. A digraph not occurring in native English words, or words of other Teutonic, Romance, Latin, or Greek origin, but common in the transliteration of Arabic, Persian, Hindustani, and other Oriental words, in which it usually represents an aspirated k equivalent to the Scotch and German ch (èh).

khafan, n. See caftan.

khair-gum (kīr'gum), n. A gum yielded by the bark of the khair-tree.

khair-tree (kār'trē), n. [< E. Ind. khair + E. tree.] An East Indian tree, Acacia catechu. From its heart-wood is extracted the true catechu, and a gum resembling gum arabic exudes from its bark. Its wood is hard and durable.

khakan (kū-kān'), n. [Pers. (> Turk.) khāqān, an emperor, a king, sovereign. Hence Russ. kaganū, ML. chacanus, cacanus, chaganus, cananus, MGr. χαρανος, emperor or khan (of Tatar). The word *khan*¹ is different.] An emperor; a king.

An embassy from Justin to the Khakin, or Emperor, mentions the Tartarian ceremony of purifying the Roman Ambassadors by conducting them between two fires. Sir H. Jones, Histories and Antiquities of Asia, p. 118.

khaki (kū'ki), a. and n. [Ind. khāki, dusty, earthy, < khāk, dust, earthy, ashes.] I. a. Dust-colored or clay-colored; adopted from Hindu use.

It is a fawn-colored glove, similar to those now being sold in London shops as khaki deerskin, but with handsome embroidery and fringe. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII, 369.

II. n. A kind of light drab or chocolate-colored cloth used for the uniforms of some East Indian regiments.

khaleb (kal'eb), n. [Turk.] A measure of length, the Turkish pik, or pik halebi. According to the Russian Commission, it is 26.89 English inches; but the khaleb of Moldavia is 26.43 English inches. That of Wallachia contains by law 2 feet 2½ inches, English measure.

khalfif, n. See calif.

khamsin (kam'sin), n. [Also kamsin; < Turk. Ar. khamsin, a simoom (see def.), the fifty days preceding the vernal equinox, < Ar. khamsin, fifty, fiftieth, < khams, khams, five.] A hot south-east wind that blows regularly in Egypt for about fifty days, commencing about the middle of March.

khan¹ (kān, kan, or kân), n. [Formerly also kawn, kawn, can, < ME. kan, canc, chan, chane, cham = F. kan, khan = G. chan, khan = Russ. khanū = MGr. χανος, χανος = Turk. khān, < Pers. khān, a prince; of Tatar origin.] The title of sovereign princes in Tatar countries, whose dominions are known as khanates, and of nomadic chiefs and various state officers in Persia; also, one of the titles of the sultan of Turkey. The title has degenerated in dignity. In Persia and Afghanistan it has now a vague value, about equivalent to esquire, and in India it has become a common affix to the names of respectable Hindus, especially of those who claim a Pathan descent.

But outward on the sea syde
 A pryce there is that rulyth wyde, Callyd the Cane of Catowes [Cathay].
Interlude of the Four Elements (ed. Halliwell, 1848).

Both of them serving the great Can in those warres.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 437.

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
 A stately pleasure-dome decree,
 Where Alph, the sacred river, ran.
Coleridge, Kubla Khan.

khan² (kan), n. [Formerly also kawn, kawn, kane, cane, hane; < Turk. khān = Hind. khāna, < Pers. khāna, a house, dwelling.] One of a class of unfurnished inns in Turkish and some other Oriental lauds, generally belonging to the government. Some are designed for the gratuitous use of travelers and pilgrims; others, of a better kind, for the accommodation of traders and their trains and wares, the traders paying charges.

The Cane lockt up by the Turks at noons and at nights, for feare that the Franks should suffer or offer any outrage. Sandys, Trauailes, p. 90.

The khan [in Syria] is usually built around a courtyard, with sheds or booths for the animals occupying the ground floor, while the travelers may take what chance there is for sleep on the more elevated platforms.

The Century, XXXV, 817.

khanate (kan'āt or kân'āt), n. [*< kham*¹ + *-ate*³.] The dominion or jurisdiction of a khan.

The khanate was annexed to Muscovy more than three centuries ago. D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 4.

khanjee (kan'jē), n. [Repr. Hind. khāngī, khānagi, Beng. khānki, belonging to the house, < Pers. khānagi, belonging to the house, < khāna, house; see *khan*².] The keeper of a khan or Oriental inn.

Everybody looks pleased [at a departure from a khao] except the khajee. J. Baker, Turkey, p. 220.

khansamah, khansuma (kān'sa-mā, -su-mā), n. [Hind. khānsāmān; see consummah.] An East Indian servant. See consummah.

khanum (ka-nōm'), n. [Also oanum; < Turk. khānim (Ar. khānam), a lady, < khān, a lord; see *khan*¹.] A lady of rank; the feminine of the title khan.

khass (kas), a. [Hind. khass, private, special.] Special; reserved; also, royal; as, khass revenues; khass lands.

khatzum-oil (kat'zum-oil), n. [< E. Ind. khatzum + E. oil.] An oil obtained in India from the composite plant Fernonia anthelmintica.

khawass (ka-was'), n. Same as cavass.

Khaya (kā'yā), n. [NL. (Adrien de Jussieu, 1830), from the Senegambian name of the tree.] A genus of polypetalous plants of the natural order Meliaceae, tribe Swieteniceae, distinguished from Swietenia, the true mahogany, in having 4 instead of 5 petals, an 8-lobed instead of a 10-toothed stamen-tube, and compressed instead of winged seeds. They are tall trees with wood resembling mahogany, abruptly pinnate leaves of few leaflets, and crowded panicles of flowers at the ends of the branchlets. Two species are now recognized, only one of which, however, has acquired any economic importance. This is the K. Senegalensis, a native of Senegambia, which is called Senegal mahogany, and also sometimes caïcedra.

Khayea (kā'yē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1837), < Khaya + -ea.] A subdivision ("section") of meliaceous plants of the tribe Swieteniceae, founded on the genus Khaya, not generally recognized by modern botanists.

khedival (ke-dē'val), a. [< khedive + -al.] Of or pertaining to the khedive of Egypt. Also Khedival.

khedive (ke-dēv'), n. [= F. khédive, < Turk. khidīr, < Pers. khidīc, khādīc, khudīc, a king, lord, great prince, sovereign, khidīcī, the viceroy of Egypt.] The title of the viceroy of Egypt, assumed by Ismail Pasha in 1867, under a convention with his suzerain the Sultan of Turkey; an agreement made between them in 1866 had established for the first time hereditary succession in his family.

khedivial (ke-dē'vi-əl), a. Same as khedival.

khenna (ken'ñ), n. Another form of henna.

khilat, n. See killut.

khirkah (kēr'kī), n. A robe used by dervishes, fakirs, or ascetics in Moslem countries; a religious habit made of shreds and patches. Hughes, Diet. Islam.

khitmutgar (kit'mut-gār), n. [Also kitmutgar, khidmutgar, and kitmudgar; < Hind. khidmatgār, a servant, butler, < khidmat, service, attendance, + -gār, denoting an agent.] In India, a servant, usually Mohammedan, whose duty it is to wait at table; an under-butler.

It [an English child] slaps the mouth of a gray-haired khansamah with its slipper, and dips its poodle's paws in a Mohammedan khitmutgar's rice. J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 342.

Khivan (kē'vān), a. [< Khiva (see def.) + -an.] Of or pertaining to Khiva, a city and khanate on the west bank of the Oxus in central Asia, temporarily occupied by the Russians in 1873, but now nominally independent.

The collection of the indemnity falls upon the Khivan authorities. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 63.

Khlistie, n. [Russ., < khlestati, khluistati, lash, switch, < khluistā, a whip, switch.] A powerful Russian sect, the members of which called themselves People of God. They were followers of one Daniel, who declared himself to be a manifestation of the Almighty, and inculcated twelve commandments, including celibacy and total abstinence from strong drinks. The members are called Lashers and Danielites.

kholah (kō'li), n. [E. Ind.] The East Indian jaeal, Cuvnis arculus.

khuskhus (kus'kus), n. [Hind.] Same as *cus-cus*².

khutbah (kut'bā), n. [Ar. khutba, khotba, an address.] A Mohammedan prayer and sermon or formal oration in Arabic delivered in the mosques on Fridays at the beginning of meridian prayer. It is regarded by Mussulmans as the most sacred part of their service, and the recital of his name in this oration is a high prerogative of the sultan or ameer. In India the expression "Ruler of the Age" is substituted. Also spelled khotbah.

ki (kē), n. [Hawaiian.] A liliaceous plant, Cordylone terminalis, which is distributed through the Pacific islands, the Malay archipelago, and in China. In the Hawaiian Islands its root is baked and eaten. It also affords an intoxicating drink by fermentation or distillation. The natives regard the plant as sacred, and place it around graves. Elsewhere in Polynesia the name is ti.

kiabooca-wood (kē-ā-bō'kū-wūd), n. [*< E. Ind. kiabocco + E. wood*¹.] An ornamental wood exported from Singapore and produced in many of the Malayan islands and New Guinea. It appears to be merely the burl-wood of the same tree which affords the lingo or lingo-wood, namely Pterocarpus indicus of the order Leguminosae. It is colored in shades of yellowish red beautifully mottled with curls or knots of a darker hue. It is much used in the East and to some extent in Europe for inlaying and the manufacture of small articles, such as snuff-boxes. Also Amboyna wood, kiabouca, kiabocca, kyabuca, etc. See Pterocarpus.

kiack (ki-ak'), n. [Burmese.] In Burma, a Buddhist temple.

The people [of Pegu] send rice and other things to that kiack or church of which they be. Hakluyt's Voyages, II, 261.

When they enter into their Kiack, at the door there is a great jar of water, with a Coeke or a Ladie in it, and there they wash their feet. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 469.

kiak, n. See kayak.

kiang (kyāng), n. [Chinese.] A river; a part of many place-names in China and neighboring countries; as, Yang-tse-kiang (that is, the river Yang-tse). Also spelled keang.

kiagh (kyāch), n. [Origin obscure.] Toil; trouble; anxiety. [Scotch.]

The hisping infant, prattling on his knee,
 Does a' his weary kiagh an' care beguile.
Burns, Cottar's Saturday Night.

Kibara (ki-bā'rī), n. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), from the Javanese name of K. coriacea.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants belonging to the natural order Monimiaceae, having unisexual, generally monœcious flowers, the male with a perianth of 4 connivent lobes, and from 5 to 8 stamens in two series, the 4 outer opposite the lobes. They are trees or shrubs with opposite leaves and small flowers in cymes or short panicles. The fruit consists of numerous ovoid drupes resting upon a broad disk-shaped receptacle. Some dozen species are known, inhabiting the East Indies, the Malay archipelago, and Australia. K. coriacea is a large tree of Malacca and Java, having large, opposite, ovate-oblong leaves. K. macrophylla of New South Wales and Queensland is an evergreen tree called the black, Australian, or Queensland ink-berry.

kibbal, n. See *kibble*².

kibble¹ (kib'l), v.; pret. and pp. kibbled, ppr. kibbling. [Perhaps an unassimilated and variant freq. of *chip*¹, v.] I. trans. 1. To bruise or grind coarsely, as malt, beans, etc. Salop.—2. To clip roughly, as a stone.

II. intrans. To walk lame. [Prov. Eng.] kibble², kibbal (kib'l, kib'al), n. [Origin uncertain.] 1. The bucket of a draw-well, or of the shaft of a mine. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A stiek with a curve or knob at the end, used in playing the game of nurspell.

kibble-chain (kib'l-chān), n. The chain that draws up the kibble or bucket from a mine.

One day at the shaft's month, reaching after the kibble-chain—maybe he was in liquor, maybe not, the Lord knows, but—I didn't know him agale, er, when we picked him up. Kingsley, Yeast, vii.

kibbler (kib'lēr), n. One who or that which kibbles or cuts; especially, a machine for grinding or cutting beans and peas for cattle. [Prov. Eng.]

kibbling (kib'ling), n. [Appar. verbal n. of *kibble*¹, v., as a small bit cut off.] A part of a small fish used as bait by fishermen on the banks of Newfoundland. Also spelled kibbling.

kibelophane (kib-del'ō-fān), n. [Gr. κίβδηλος, spurious, base, + -φάνης, appearing, < φαίνεσθαι, appear.] A variety of ilmenite or titanite iron ore.

kibe (kib), n. [Appar. < W. cibi (fem. y gibi), a chilblain; cf. cibwst, chilblains, prob. < cib, a cup, + gwst, a humor, malady.] A chap or crack in the flesh, caused by cold; an ulcerated chilblain, as on the heel.

My followers grow to my heels like kibes—I cannot stir out of doors for 'em. Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, v. 1.

Fal. I am almost out at heels.

Pist. Why, then, let kibes enaue.

Shak., M. W. of W., i. 3, 35.

kibed (kibd), a. [< kibe + -ed.] Chapped; cracked with cold; affected with chilblains: as, kibed heels.

Kibessia (ki-bes'i-ä), n. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1828), from the Javanese name of the plant.] A genus of polypetalous plants belonging to the natural order Lythraceæ, or, according to some authors, to the Melastomaceæ, tribe Astroniaceæ, type of the old suborder Kibessiacæ, characterized by having the irregular somewhat 4-lobed limb of the hood-shaped calyx warty and spinous (the spines sometimes barbed at the tip), 8 stamens, and a 4-celled ovary. They are smooth shrubs with angled or winged branches, coriaceous, oblong-ovate, 3-nerved leaves, obtuse at the attenuate apex, and large blue flowers on axillary, 1- to 3-flowered peduncles. Thirteen species have been described, inhabiting the Malay archipelago and Philippine Islands.

Kibessiacæ (kib-ē-si'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Naudin, 1859), < Kibessia + -acæ.] A suborder of melastomaceous plants, typified by the genus Kibessia: nearly the same as the tribe Astroniaceæ.

kibin (kib'in), n. [W. cibyn.] A Welsh corn-measure, equal to half a bushel.

kibitka (ki-bit'kă), n. [Russ. kibitka, the tilt or cover of Kibitka, or Kirghiz Tent.

a wagon, a tilt-wagon, a Tatar tent; of Tatar origin.] 1. A circular tent used by the Kirghiz and other Tatars. It is about 12 feet in diameter, with a rounded top. The sides are formed of collapsible or folding lattice-work, and the roof of slender, slightly curved poles; both sides and roof are covered with thick felt. There is an opening for smoke and a flap for the door.

2. A Russian cart or wagon with a rounded top, covered with felt or leather. It serves as a kind of movable habitation, and is used for traveling in winter.

Formerly the journey from Novgorod to Moscow was most painfully accomplished in ninety hours in a kibitka—a cart, or rather a cradle for two, in which the driver . . . sat close to the horses' tails, the hinder part of the cart being shaded by a semicircular hood of fatha covered with birch bark. These vehicles have no springs, and are fastened together by wooden pegs. The luggage is placed at the bottom, and covered by a mattress, upon which an abundant supply of feather-beds alone renders the jolting endurable. A. J. C. Hare, Russia, v.

kiblah (kib'lă), n. [Ar. qibla, that which is opposite, the South, < qabl, before, qabala, be opposite.] The point toward which Mohammedans turn in prayer. This was, according to Mohammedan authorities, at first the Kaaba in Mecca, but after the flight to Medina it was for some time Jerusalem, and then again changed to Mecca. Any object of strong desire or devotion is also spoken of as a kiblah.

There have been few incidents more disastrous in their consequences to the human race than this decree of Mohammed changing the Kibla from Jerusalem to Mecca. Had he remained true to his earlier and better faith, the Arabs would have entered the religious community of the nations as peacemakers, not as enemies and destroyers. Osborne, Islam under the Arabs, p. 58.

kibling (kib'ling), n. See kibbling.

kibosh (ki-bosh'), n. [Also kybosh; a slang word, of obscure origin.] The form, manner, style, or fashion of something; the thing: as, that is the proper kibosh; full dress is the correct kibosh for the opera. [Slang.]

kiby (ki'bi), a. [< kibe + -y.] Affected with kibes or chilblains.

And he haltith often that hath a kyby heie. Skelton, Garlande of Laureli.

kichel, kitchelt, n. [ME. kichil, kechel, < AS. cicel, a cake; prob. akin to *cake*¹, cooky.] A small cake. Also spelled kichil.—God's kichel. See *God*¹.

Give us a bushel whete, malt, or reye, A Goddes kechyl [var. kichil], or a type of these. Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 39.

kick (kik), v. [ME. kiken, < W. cicio (colloq.), kick (cf. cic, foot), = Gael. ceig, kick.] I. trans. 1. To give a thrust or blow to with the foot; strike with the foot: as, to kick a dog; to kick an obstruction out of one's way.

And by mute Disdain kicks back what Words could not refute. J. Beaumont, Payche, vt. 34.

Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love, But—why did you kick me down stairs? J. P. Kemble, The Panel, l. 1.

There he watches yet! There like a dog before his master's door! Kick'd, he returna. Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

2. To strike in recoiling: as, an overloaded gun kicks the shoulder.

Some musketa so contrive it As off to miss the mark they drive at, And, though well aimed at duck or plover, Bear wide, and kick their ownera over. J. Trumbull, McFingal, l. 96.

3. In printing, to operate or effect by impact of the foot on a treadle: used with relation to some kinds of small job-presses: as, to kick a Gordon press; to kick off a thousand impressions. [U. S.]—4. To sting, as a wasp. [Prov. Eng.]—5. To reject, as a suitor; jilt. [Vulgar, southern U. S.]—To kick one's heels. See *heel*¹.—To kick the beam. See beam.—To kick the bucket. See bucket.—To kick up a row or a dust. See *dust*¹.

II. intrans. 1. To strike out with the foot; have the habit of striking with the foot: as, a horse that kicks.

For trowly ther is noon of us alle, If any wight wol clawe us on the galle, That we nel kike, for he seith us sooth. Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 85.

They contemn all phyaic of the mind, And, like galled camels, kick at every touch. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

2. To thrust out the foot with violence, as in wantonness, resistance, anger, or contempt.

Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 3, 93.

Hence—3. To manifest opposition or strong objection; offer resistance. [Now chiefly slang.]

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering, which I have commanded? 1 Sam. ii. 29.

You hold the woman is the better man: A rampant heresy, such as, if it spread, Would make all women kick against their Lorda. Tennyson, Princess, iv.

In a late number you maintain strongly that it is the duty of persons suffering from overcharge, insolence, and other forms of oppression to kick. You urge that the oppressor argues from our American charity, 'bearing all things' with silent fortitude, that we, the people, rather like it; and you insist that a part of our debt to society is invariably, systematically, quickly, continuously, and powerfully "to kick." The Nation, XLVIII. 137.

4. To recoil, as a musket or other firearm.—5. To stammer. Devonshire Dial., p. 72. [Prov. Eng.]—To kick against the pricks. See prick.—To kick off, in foot-ball, to give the ball the first kick which starts the play.—To kick over the traces, to throw off control; become insubordinate. [Colloq.]

kick (kik), n. [< kick, v.] 1. A blow or thrust with the foot.

A kick that scarce would move a horse May kill a sound divine. Cowper, Yearly Diatribe.

2. In foot-ball: (a) The right of or a turn at kicking the ball. (b) One who kicks or kicks off. He's . . . the best kick and charger at Rugby. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 5.

3. The recoil of a firearm when discharged. But he [Mr. Lowe] and I must alike be prepared to stand the recoil of our own guns, even though the kick may be inconvenient. Gladstone, Gleanings, I. 134.

4. A sudden and strong objection; unexpected resistance. [Slang.]—5. The projection on the tang of the blade of a pocket-knife by which the blade is prevented from striking the spring in the act of closing.—6. A cleat or block on the stock-board of a brick-molders' bench, which serves to make a key in the brick.—7. A die for bricks.—8. Fashion; novelty; thing in vogue. [Slang, Eng.] 'Tis the kick, I say, old un, so I brought it down. Dibdin.

9. The indentation or inner protuberance of a molded glass bottle. [Slang, Eng.]

What it [a bottle] holds if it's public-house gin is uncertain: for you must know, air, that some bottles has great kicks at their bottoms.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 511.

10. pl. Trousers. [Slang, Eng.]—Drop kick, in foot-ball, a kick made as the ball, dropped from the hand, rises with a bound from the ground.

Tom . . . performed very creditably, after first driving his foot three inches into the ground, and then nearly kicking his leg into the air, in vigorous efforts to accomplish a drop-kick after the manner of East. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 5.

Place kick, in foot-ball, a kick made while the ball is stationary on the ground.

kickable (kik'a-bl), a. [< kick + -able.] That may be kicked; deserving to be kicked.

The epitome of nothing, fitter to be kicked, if shee were of a kickable substance, than either honour'd or humour'd. N. Ward, Simple Coder, p. 26.

Rigg was a most unengaging, kickable boy. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xii.

kickee (ki-kē'), n. [< kick, v., + -ee.] One who is kicked. [Rare and jocose.]

He . . . was seen . . . kicking him at the same time in the most ignominious manner; and in return to all demands on the part of the kickee to know the reason for such outrage, simply remarking "You are Pleviggin." Savage, R. Meditocot, iii. 8.

kicker (kik'ēr), n. 1. One who or that which kicks.

Cham. 'Twas some fore'd match, If he were not kick'd to th' church o' the wedding day, I'll never come at court. Can be no otherwise. Perhaps he was rich; speak, Mistress Lapet, was 't not so? Mist. Lapet, Nay, that's without all question. Cham. Oh, he would not want kickers, now then. Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, i.

2. One who offers strong, and especially unexpected or perverse, opposition; one who objects or opposes; a bolter. Cf. kick, v. i., 3; n., 4. There is of course a class of chronic kickers who are always finding fault. Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XIII. 6.

kickie-wickie (kik'i-wik'i), a. and n. Same as kicksy-wicksy. Shak.

kickish (kik'ish), a. [< kick + -ish.] Irritable. [Prov. Eng.]

In Majestas Imperii growne so kickish that it cannot stand quiet with Salus Populi, unless it be fettered? N. Ward, Simple Coder, p. 59.

kickle (kik'l), a. Uncertain; unsteady; fickle; tottering. Also keckle. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

kick-off (kik'ōf), n. The first kick in a game of foot-ball.

Daisies in the dewy dale.
J. Cunningham, Day, A Pastoral.

kidnap (kid'nap), v. t.; pret. and pp. kidnapped, ppr. kidnapping. [Orig. a slang word, taken from the cant of thieves; < *kid*¹, n., 5, + nap, a var. of nab, snatch.] To steal, abduct, or carry off forcibly (a human being, whether man, woman, or child). In law it sometimes implies a carrying beyond the jurisdiction.

Brave Mar and Pamure were firm, I am sure;
The latter was *kidnap*t awa.
Battle of Sheriff-Muir (Child's Ballads, VII. 159).

The Janissaries, while they kept their first strength—that strength which made the Ottoman power what it was—were all kidnapped Christian children.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 427.

kidnapper (kid'nap-er), n. One who kidnaps; a man-stealer or child-stealer.

Enemies that have taken a Maid captive won't be guilty of such Barbarity as this; nor will Kidnappers themselves, to those they have Kidnap'd away.

These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law.
Spectator.

kidnapping (kid'nap-ing), n. [Verbal n. of kidnap, v.] The act of stealing, abducting, or carrying off a human being forcibly.

The other remaining offence, that of kidnapping, being the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them into another, was capital by the Jewish law.

Blackstone, Com., IV. xv.

kidneer, kidneret, n. Middle English forms of kidney.

kidney (kid'ni), n. [ME. kidney, kedney, kidneie, kideneie, a corruption of kidneer, kidnere, kidnere, kideneire, < kid*, appar. for quith (E. dial. var. kite), the belly, + neer, nere, kidney: see *kite*² and *neer*².] 1. In anat., a glandular structure whose function is the purification of the blood by the excretion of urine; one of the renes or reins; a renal organ. Kidneys are of very various shapes and positions in the body, and often of loosely lobulated structure. In the higher vertebrates they are always paired and of compact figure, tending to become bean-shaped glands, as in man. The kidneys of man are situated in the loins, opposite the upper lumbar vertebrae, behind the peritoneum, embedded in fat, and capped by the adrenals or suprarenal capsules. The left is somewhat higher than the right, which leaves room for the liver. They are purplish-brown in color, about 4 inches long, 2½ broad, and 1½ thick; they weigh about 4½ ounces. Section displays an outer cortical substance, darker and softer than the rest, consisting chiefly of uriniferous tubules and Malpighian corpuscles. (See corpuscle.) The inner or medullary substance is composed of numerous distinctly striated conical masses, or Malpighian pyramids, whose bases are directed peripherally, while their apices converge toward the interior, ending in the papillae, which project into the cavity of the pelvis. There are from 8 to 18 such pyramids, composed mainly of minute straight and looped uriniferous tubules, which proceed from the cortical substance to open on the papillae. One such papilla, or a set of several papillae, protrudes into a compartment of the general cavity called a calyx; the calyces unite in three infundibula, the beginnings of the general cavity of the kidney, the pelvis, which is also the funnel-shaped beginning of the ureter, the tube by which the urine passes to the bladder. The hilum of the kidney is the place on the median or concave side of the kidney, corresponding to the place of the aorta on a bean, where the ureter goes out, and where the vessels and nerves enter. The organs are abundantly supplied with nerves, blood-vessels, and lymphatics. In its minute and essential structure the kidney consists of a great number of branching, looped, and convoluted epithelial tubes (tubuli uriniferi), terminating in dilatations, each dilatation enveloping a plexus of blood-vessels and forming a Malpighian body. These tubes, moreover, are abundantly supplied with blood-vessels. Malpighian bodies and tubules both share in the work of secreting, but there is reason to think that the former have to do with the secretion of the water and less important parts of the urine, while the elimination of the nitrogenous waste falls on the tubular epithelium. The kidneys, or, in the singular as a collective noun, the kidney, as an important internal organ whose condition is a more or less accurate index of one's bodily health, and, as formerly thought, of one's "humor" or temperament, was formerly often spoken of (somewhat like liver, heart, bowels, stomach, etc.) with reference to one's constitution, temperament, temper, disposition, or inward feelings. As thus used in the quotation from Shakespeare, the word has been misunderstood, as if meaning "sort" or "kind," whence that use in later authors.

Section of Human Kidney.
a, suprarenal capsule;
b, vascular or cortical portion of kidney; c, tubular portion, consisting of cones; d, a, two of the papillae projecting into their corresponding calyces; e, e, the three infundibula; f, pelvis; g, ureter.

Think of that—a man of my kidney—think of that; that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 5, 116.

Talk no more of brave Nelson, or gallant Sir Sidney,
'Tis granted they're tars of a true British kidney.
Song, Newcastle Bellman. (Brockett.)

2. Anything resembling a kidney in shape or otherwise, as a potato.

The corn . . . rises again in the verdure of a leaf, in the fulness of the ear, in the kidneys of wheat.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 69.

3. pl. The inmost parts; the reins.

Curse, curse, and then I goe.
Look how he grins, I've anger'd him to the kidneys.
Fletcher (and another?) Nice Valour, iv. 1.

Heavn's bright Torches, from Earth's kidneys, sup
Som somewhat dry and heatfull Vapours vp.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

4†. A waiting-servant. [Cant.]

It is our custom upon the first coming of the news to order a youth, who officiates as the kidney of the coffee house, to get into the pulpit, and read every paper with a loud and distinct voice.
Tatler, No. 268.

Capsule of the kidney. See capsule.—Floating kidney, in pathol., a kidney which has become loose and displaced in the abdomen. Also called movable kidney.—Granular kidney. See granular.—Surgical kidney, a term somewhat loosely applied to nephritic conditions secondary to mischief further down in the urinary tract, but especially to suppurative pyelonephritis arising from cystitis.

kidney-bean (kid'ni-bên), n. A leguminous plant of the genus Phaseolus, especially Phaseolus vulgaris, the common twining kidney-bean of the gardens, also called French bean and haricot (see cut under haricot): so called from the shape of the seeds. P. nanus, the field- or bush-bean, is perhaps only a variety of the common kidney-bean. The green pods of the common kidney-bean, with their contents, are eaten as a "string-bean," or the dry seeds are baked or boiled.—Kidney-bean tree, a plant of either of the leguminous genera Wistaria and Glycine, especially the American Wistaria frutescens and the Chinese W. chinensis.—Wild kidney-bean, Phaseolus perennis, a slender, high-climbing bean, with small purple flowers, native in the United States.

kidney-cotton (kid'ni-kot'n), n. A South American variety of long-stapled and black-seeded cotton, whose seeds cohere in kidney-shaped masses of eight or ten. It is referred to the Gossypium religiosum of Linnaeus (G. Peruvianum), which is the tallest of the cotton-shrubs.

kidney-form (kid'ni-fôrm), a. Same as kidney-shaped.

kidney-link (kid'ni-linkg), n. In a harness, a coupling below the collar.

A kidney link belonging to harness hames. Gilder's Manual, p. 103.

kidney-lipt (kid'ni-lipt), a. Hare-lipped.

First, Jollie's wife is lame; the next, loose-lipt, Squint-ey'd, hook-nos'd, and lastly kidney-lipt. Herriek, Upon Jollie's Wife.

kidney-ore (kid'ni-ôr), n. A variety of compact hematite, or red oxid of iron, occurring in reniform masses.

kidney-potato (kid'ni-pô-tâ'tô), n. One of various kidney-shaped varieties of the common potato.

kidney-root (kid'ni-rôt), n. The joepeye-weed, Eupatorium purpureum: in allusion to supposed medicinal properties.

kidney-shaped (kid'ni-shâpt), a. Having the shape or form of a kidney; reniform.—Kidney-shaped leaf, in bot., a leaf having the breadth greater than the length, and a wide sinus at the base. The margin should be entire, but may be crenate, as in that of ground-ivy.

Kidney-shaped Leaf of Asarum Europæum.

kidney-stone (kid'ni-stôn), n. A nodule of brown ironstone, traversed by small veins of calcite. Such nodules are common in the Oxford clay, a division of the Middle Oolite, especially near Weymouth in England.

kidney-vetch (kid'ni-vech), n. A leguminous herbaceous plant, Anthyllis vulneraria, found chiefly in dry hilly ground throughout Europe and in western Asia and northern Africa: so called from its supposed medicinal properties. It is a foot or less high, often tufted, clothed with silky hairs, and has pinnate leaves and yellow or variably colored flowers with a permanent inflated calyx, which are borne in close heads, subtended by large bracts, and paired at the ends of the branches. It is of some economic value as sheep-fodder. Its specific name (from Latin villus, a wound) suggests a healing property, which, however, it possesses only as do other hairy plants. Also called lady's-fingers.

kidneywort (kid'ni-wêrt), n. 1. The plant Cotyledon Umbilicus, of the order Crassulacæ: so called from some resemblance of the leaves to a kidney, whence probably it had some reputation as a remedy in diseases of the kidneys. It has fleshy, orbicular, more or less peltate leaves, the lower on long stalks. It is common on rocks, walls, etc., in western Europe and the Mediterranean regions. Also called pennywort and navelwort.

2. A book-name of Saxifraga stellaris, the star-saxifrage.

kidnippers (kid'nip'êrz), n. pl. In gun-molding, nippers used to make the hoops tant about the mold.

kidsman (kidz'man), n.; pl. kidsmen (-men). [< kid's, poss. of kid, 5, + man.] One who trains young thieves. Dickens. [Thieves' slang.]

kief, kiff (kêf, kif), n. [Moorish.] A substitute for tobacco prepared for smoking, consisting of the chopped leaves of the common hemp.

The use of tobacco for smoking appears to be unknown in Morocco, while kief—prepared from the chopped leaves of common hemp—is almost universally employed for that purpose both by Moors and Berbers. Journal of a Tour in Morocco, etc., by Hooker and Ball, p. 46.

kiefekil, keffekil (kê'fe-, kef'e-kil), n. [< Pers. kaf, scum, froth, + gil, clay.] A kind of clay; meerscham.

kie-kie (ki'ki), n. [Native name.] A high-climbing shrub, Freyinetia Banksii, of the natural order Pandanacæ, a native of New Zealand. The fruit consists of berries massed on a spadix. When young the spadix, with its bracts, is edible, and is made by the colonists into a jelly tasting like preserved strawberries. The fiber of the stems may possibly be found useful for paper-making.

Kielmeyera (kêl-mi'êr-ÿ), n. [NL. (Martius, 1824), named for Karl Fr. v. Kielmeyer, of Stuttgart, a noted chemist and botanist.] A genus of polypetalous plants of the natural order Terrestrialiaceæ, tribe Bonnetiæ, having free stamens, small anthers, and the numerous broad, flat ovules downwardly imbricated in two series in each cell. They are small resinous shrubs, with evergreen petioled leaves, and showy flowers in terminal racemes or panicles, or rarely solitary. Seventeen species are known, all natives of Brazil, where, from the resemblance of the flowers to roses, the plant is called rosa do campo. K. speciosa, called mabro do campo, from the resemblance of the flowers to some mallows, is a tree sometimes 15 feet in height, with a twisted trunk, short thick branches, corky bark, elliptical leaves, and flowers resembling camellias, to which, indeed, they are closely related botanically.

kier, n. See Keir.

kieselguhr (kê'zî-gôr), n. [G., < kiesel, flint, pebble (= E. chesil), + guhr: see guhr.] A silicious infusorial earth, used as an absorbent for nitroglycerin in the manufacture of dynamite: same as infusorial silica.

kieserite (kê'zêr-ît), n. [Named after Mr. Kieser, once president of the academy at Jena.] A hydrated sulphate of magnesium, occurring in considerable beds with rock-salt at Stassfurt, Prussia, and elsewhere. It is used in making Epsom salts, and also indirectly in the manufacture of potash salts at Stassfurt.

Kieseritzki gambit. See gambit.

Kiestt. An obsolete preterit of cast! She kies the knot, and the loop she ran, Which soon did gar this young lord deo. The Laird of Waristoun (Child's Ballads, III. 320).

kieve, n. and v. See keeve.

Kigelia (ki-jê'li-ÿ), n. [NL. (Alphonse de Candolle, 1845), < Kigeli-keia, the native name on the coast of Mozambique.] A genus of large trees of Africa, belonging to the natural order Bignoniacæ and to the tribe Crescentiæ, having large pinnate alternate leaves, an ample leathery calyx with oblique, 2- to 5-cleft limb, and the flowers in long, loose, pendent panicles. Only three or four species are known, inhabiting the tropical and subtropical parts of Africa. The best-known species is K. pinnata, found in Nubia, Abyssinia, Mozambique, and as far south as Natal, also on the west coast. It is a large tree with whitish bark and spreading branches. The fruit is often two feet or more in length, hanging from a long stalk. It has a corky rind and is filled with pulp and numerous roundish seeds. In Nubia this tree is held sacred, and religious festivals are conducted under it by moonlight. The fruit, slightly roasted and cut in halves, is applied locally in rheumatic and other complaints.

Kiggelaria (kij-ê-lâ'ri-ÿ), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after Franz Kiggelaar, a Dutch botanist.] A genus of polypetalous plants, belonging to the natural order Birniacæ, tribe Pangicæ, distinguished from other genera of the tribe by distinct scarcely imbricated sepals, the apical dehiscence of the capsules, and the numerous stamens. They are unarmed shrubs with entire or serrate leaves and few-flowered axillary racemes. Only three species are known, natives of the warmer parts of Africa. The anomalous character of the genus has led different authors to make it the type of a distinct botanical group.

Kiggelariæ (kij-ê-lâ'ri-ÿ-ê), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1824), < Kiggelaria + -æ.] A tribe of plants of the old order Flacourtiacæ, embracing the genera Kiggelaria, Hydrocarpus, and Melicetyus, the last of which is now referred to the Violariæ, and the others to the Birniacæ, tribe Pangicæ. Called Kiggelariacæ by Link.

kikar, n. [E. Ind.] The Acacia Arabica, one of the best gum-arabic trees. Its astringent pods, as also its bark, are valuable for tanning, and its wood is used for implements, gun-carriages, boat-timber, etc. See Acacia, bablah, and gum arabic (under *gum*²).

kiket, v. An obsolete form of kick. Chaucer.

kikuel-oil (ki-kê'el-oil), n. [< E. Ind. kikuel + E. oil.] A solid fat of a dull sulphur-yellow color, made from the seeds of Salvadora Persica, and imported into Bombay from Gujerat for local consumption.

kikumon (kik'ô-mon), n. [Jap., < kiku, the Chrysanthemum imperialis, + mon, crest, badge.] A badge or crest borne by the imperial family of Japan, consisting of an open chrysanthemum of sixteen petals conjoined and rounded at the outer extremities. It is frequently represented double—that is, sixteen other petals show from below in the interstices at the ends of the petals shown in the foreground.

Kikumon.

kill, kill-. [< Gael. cill, ceall = Ir. ccall (dim. cillín), a cell, church, churchyard, burying-place, < L. cella, a cell: see cell.] An element in Celtic place-names, signifying 'cell,' 'church,' 'burying-place,' very frequent in Ireland, and common in Scotland: as, Kilpatrick; Kilkenny; Kilbride; Icolmkill.

kilbrickenite (kil'brik-en-ît), n. [< Kilbricken (see def.) + *-ite*².] A sulphid of antimony and lead found at Kilbricken, Ireland.

kildee, kildeer (kil'dêr), n. See killedee.

kilderkin (kil'dêr-kin), n. [< ME. kylderkyne (1411); an altered form of kinderkin, irreg. kindekind; < MD. kindeken, kinneken (D. kinnetje), a small vessel, the eighth part of a tun or vat, lit. 'a little child' (cf. kinchin, from the same source), < kind, a child, + dim. suffix -ken (= E. -kin); in mod. D. a diff. suffix (-je).] A measure of capacity, half a barrel or 2 firkins. Exceptionally—(a) Of soap or ale, 18 United States (old wine) gallons. (b) Of butter, 1 hundredweight net. A statute of 1662 recites the immemorial custom that a kilderkin of butter should weigh 132 pounds gross—namely, butter 112 pounds, cask 20 pounds. The kilderkin of honey, according to a statute of 1581, is 16 wine gallons.

Massie silver and gilt plate, some like and as bigge as kilderkins. Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 465.

Som for envy sall haf in thair lymis, Also kylles and felons and apostymis. Hampole, Frick of Conscience, l. 2994.

kilerg (kil'êrg), n. [Irreg. < Gr. κίλιος, a thousand (see kilo-), + εργον, work (see erg).] In physics, a thousand ergs.

Kilhamite (kil'am-it), n. [< Kilham (see def.) + *-ite*².] A member of the "New Connection of Wesleyan Methodists": so called from Alexander Kilham (1762-98), the founder of the organization.

kilikinic (kil'i-ki-nik'), n. Same as kinnikinick.

kilin (ki-lên'), n. [Chin.] A fabulous creature mentioned in Chinese mythology. It is represented as a kind of unicorn, and is said to have appeared at the birth of Confucius. In Japan it is called kirin, and takes in decorative art different forms, sometimes that of a horse with head and jaws modified to approach those of a crocodile and an immense spreading tail.

kilk (kilk), n. [*< Contr. of killock, kallock, ult. < AS. cerlic, > E. charlock, q. v.] Charlock, Brassica Sinapistrum. [Prov. Eng.]

kill¹ (kil), v. t. [< ME. killen, kyllen, commonly cullen (later also, as early mod. E., coll, cole), strike, ent, < Icel. kolla, hit on the head, harm, = Norw. kylla, poll (trees), = D. kollen, knock down; from the noun, Icel. kollr, top, head, = Norw. koll, top, head, crown: see *coll*¹.] The notion that kill is another form of quell, AS. cwellan, kill, is erroneous.] 1. To strike, beat, cut, or stab; strike down.

There-at Thelaphus hade tene, & trnret belyue, 'Aght to a kene spere, cuttyng before, Caupit enyn with the knight; kyll hym to dethe. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12803.

2. To deprive (a human being or any animal, or, in more recent use, a vegetable) of life, by any means; put to death; slay.

Ennye and yuel wille was in the Iewes; Thei essten and contreden to kulle hym when thei mygte. Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 137.

I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel. . . . I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways. Shak., As you Like it, v. I, 62.

3. To destroy; render wholly inactive, inefficient, etc.; deaden; quell; overpower; subdue; suppress; cancel: as, sudden showers kill the wind; a thick carpet kills the sound of footsteps.

This way you kill your merit, kill your cause, And him you would raise life to. Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iv. 1.

The hose was cut, fire dumped out. . . pins removed, and engines killed so that it will take days to bring them to life again. Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, March 20, 1886.

[Low, U. S.]—To kill down, to destroy the life of (a plant) as far as to the roots or stem.—To kill off, to exterminate.—To kill time, to occupy spare time with employments, recreations, or amusements of merely passing interest or entertainment.

If killing birds be such a crime, . . . What think you, Sir, of killing Time? Cowper, Beau's Reply.

To kill up, to kill by wholesale or summarily.

Swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals and to kill them up,
In their assign'd and native dwelling-place.

Shak., As you like it, II. 1, 62.

= Syn. 2. Kill, Slay, Murder, Assassinate, Slaughter, Massacre, Despatch. Kill is the general word, meaning simply to deprive of life, whether wrongfully (Ex. xx. 13), accidentally, in self-defence, in war, or by process of law. Slay is a less commonplace word with the same meaning as kill. Murder is the general word for killing wrongfully, especially with premeditation. Assassinate means to kill wrongfully by surprise, suddenly, or by secret assault. To slaughter is to kill brutally or in great numbers; massacre is more intense than slaughter, meaning to kill indiscriminately, without need or without warrant, rapidly or in great numbers. To despatch is to kill with promptness or quickness, and generally in a quiet way. Kill, slay, slaughter, and despatch may apply to ordinary and proper taking of the life of an animal. Kill and slaughter are the ordinary words used to describe the work of a butcher.

killdee (kil'dē), n. [Also kildeer, kildee, kildeer; imitative of the bird's cry.] The largest and commonest ring-plover of North America, Agialites vociferus: so called in imitation of its shrill two-syllabled note. The killdee is from 9 to 10 inches long, and 20 in extent of wings. The bill is black; the eye is black with a bright ring around it; the legs are pale; the upper parts are grayish-brown with a bronzed olive tint, changing to orange-brown on the rump; the under parts are pure white, with two black collars encircling the neck; the front and line over the eye are white, with a black stripe over this; and the tail-feathers are peculiarly variegated with black, white, and the bright color of the rump. It occurs almost everywhere in North America, is migratory, not gregarious, very noisy, and restless. It nests on the ground, in grass or sedge, and lays four pyriform eggs, $\frac{1}{4}$ inches long and $\frac{1}{2}$ inches broad, of a drab color heavily blotched with blackish brown.

It was the plaintive cry of a killdee startled from its sojourn on the bank.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII, 48.

The apulchral boom of the bittern, the shriek of the curlew, and the complaint of the killdeer-plover were beyond the power of expression. Bret Harte, Sketches, p. 90.

J. Forbes, Oriental Memoirs, III, 50.

kilmagore (kil'mā-gōr), n. A fish of the family Scaridae, the Scarus pseudoscarus caruleus.

Kilmarnock bonnet. See bonnet.

kiln (kil), n. [Also kill, formerly kil; early mod. E. kylne, kyll, < ME. kylne, kulne, < AS. cýln, cýlenc, cýlinc = Icel. kylna = Norw. kylna = Sw. kölna = Dan. kille, a kiln, a drying-house, < L. culina, a kitchen: see culinary.] The present pronunciation requires the spelling kill (cf. mill, formerly myln, of similar phonetic form); but kiln is the prevalent spelling. A furnace or oven for drying, baking, or burning. Kilns may be divided into two chief classes: those for direct burning, in which the material is submitted to the action of flame, the fuel and material being mingled together in one furnace; and those for vitrifying, drying, and baking, in which the material is separated from the furnace proper. The lime-kiln represents the first class. It consists of an upright furnace resembling a blast-furnace, the limestones and fuel being fed into the top and the burned lime or quicklime being drawn below. (See lime.) To the second class belong the pottery-kilns, brick-kilns, and porcelain-kilns. The pottery- and porcelain-kilns, which include also terra-cotta, drain-pipe, and other similar kilns, consist of a structure, usually of brick, circular in section, and cone-shaped, the furnaces being arranged around the edge below, and the hollow space within being filled with the materials to be burned or vitrified. In the common pottery-kiln the materials are exposed directly to the flames from the furnaces. In the kilns for finer ware the materials are protected from direct contact with the fire. Drying-kilns for malt, hops, grain, lumber, etc., are strictly dry-houses or drying-rooms, though sometimes called kilns. Fruit-kilns are now superseded by evaporators. Brick-kilns are properly distinguished from brick-clamps by the fact that the furnace is a permanent structure. See *brick*².

Not farre from the Citty are twentie Lyme kilns, and as many Brick-kilns, serving for the reparations of the Temples, and the houses thereto belonging.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 616.
To lie in kilns and barns at e'en . . .
Is, doubtless, great distress!
Burns, First Epistle to Davie.

kiln (kil), v. t. [Also kill; < kiln, n.] To dry or burn in a kiln.

Strype, Memorials, Edw. VI., an. 1550.

kilo (kil'ō), n. An abbreviated form of kilogram.

kilodyne (kil'ō-din), n. [Irreg. contr. < Gr. χίλιος, a thousand, + E. dyne.] In physics, an amount of force equal to 1,000 dynes.

kilogram, kilogramme (kil'ō-gram), n. [< F. kilogramme, < Gr. χίλιος (irreg. reduced in the French metric system of nomenclature to kilo-), a thousand, + γράμμα, a weight (a gram): see *gram*².] The ultimate standard of mass in the French system of weights and measures, equal to 1,000 grams; the mass of a certain cylinder of platinum deposited in the Archives of France on the 22d of June, 1799, and thence known as the Kilogramme des Archives. But in future the ultimate standard will be the international kilogram at the Pavillon de Breteuil near Sèvres; this substitution will not alter the value of the kilogram. The kilogram was intended to be (and is, within one ten-thousandth part) the mass of a cubic decimeter of water at its maximum density. It was ascertained by Miller to be equal to 15432.34874 grains, or 2.20462125 imperial pounds, with a probable error of 3 in the last decimal place. An independent determination by Miller (made merely as a check upon the other) gave 2.20462116, with a probable error of 5 in the last place. The real error, however, and indeed the variations of weight of this ill-constructed Kilogramme des Archives, may very likely be somewhat greater. See metric system, under metric.

kilogrammeter, kilogrammetre (kil'ō-gram'-e-tēr), n. [< F. kilogrammètre; as kilogram + *mètre*².] A unit used in measuring mechanical work, equal to the work done against gravity in raising one kilogram a vertical distance of one meter: it is equivalent to about 7.2 foot-pounds.

kiloliter, kilolitre (kil'ō-lē-tēr), n. [< F. kilolitre, < Gr. χίλιος, a thousand, + λίτρον, a pound (taken as 'liter'): see *liter*².] A unit of capacity equal to 1,000 liters.

kilometer, kilometre (kil'ō-mē-tēr), n. [< F. kilomètre, < Gr. χίλιος, a thousand, + μέτρον, a measure (taken as 'meter'): see *mètre*².] A length of 1,000 meters, or $\frac{5}{8}$ of a statute mile less 19 feet 2 inches. Abbreviated km.

kilostere (kil'ō-stēr), n. [< F. kilostère, < Gr. χίλιος, a thousand, + στερεός, solid (taken as 'stere'): see stere.] A French solid measure, consisting of 1,000 steres or cubic meters, and equivalent to 35314.72 cubic feet.

kilowatt (kil'ō-wot), n. [< Gr. χίλιος, a thousand, + E. watt.] A thousand watts.

kilt¹ (kilt), v. t. [< ME. kylten, < Dan. kilte, kilte, truss, tuck up, = Sw. dial. kilta, swaddle; appar. < Icel. kjalta, the lap, = Sw. dial. kilta, the lap, = Goth. kilthei, the womb.] 1. To tuck up; truss up (the clothes). [Scotch.]

With wind wafling hir haris lowait of trace,
Hir skirt kiltit till hir bare knees.
Gavin Douglas, Æneid, l. 320.
Janet has kilted her green kirtle
A little aboue her knee.
The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, l. 116).

The wives maun kilt their coats and wade into the aurt to tak' the fish ashore.
Scott, Antiquary, xxvi.

2. In dressmaking, to lay (a skirt or a flounce) in deep, flat, longitudinal plaits hanging free at the bottom, in the fashion of a Highland kilt.

kilt² (kilt), n. [Also kelt; < kilt¹, v. Cf. Icel. kilting, a skirt. The Gael. word for 'kilt' is represented by filibeg. The Ir. cealt, OIr. celt, clothes, is prob. unrelated.] In the original Highland dress, that part of the belted plaid which hung below the waist; in modern times, a separate garment, a sort of petticoat reaching from the girdle nearly to the knees, composed of tartan and deeply plaited. The garment is imitated in various fabrics for children's wear. See kilting¹.

Aft haves I wid thro' glens with chorking feet,
When neither plaid nor kelt cou'd fend the weat.
Ramsay, Poems, II, 393.

There arises in the mind of the present writer a comical vision of the twirling plaid kilt worn by the very inadequate representative of the historically kiltless thane.
The Academy, Oct. 20, 1888, p. 252.

Among the Highlanders, the kilt seems to have been originally formed by folding and girding up the lower part of the mantle or plaid.
Jamieson.

kilt⁴ (kilt), a. [Origin obscure.] Small; lean; slender. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

kilted (kil'ted), a. [< kilt¹, n., + -ed.] Wearing a kilt.

Thus having said, the kilted goddess kissed
Her son, and vanish'd in a Scottish mist.
Byron, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

kilter, kelter¹ (kil'tēr, kel'tēr), n. [Cf. kilting²; origin uncertain.] Order; proper form, adaptation, or condition: only in the colloquial phrase out of kilter.

Ye very sight of one [a gun] (though out of kilter) was a terrour unto them.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 235.

If the organs of prayer be out of kelter, or out of tune, how can we pray?
Barrow, Works, l. vi.

"I'm a failure because I always see double," pursued Hollis, "like a stereoscope out of kilter."
C. F. Woolson, Jupiter Lights, xviii.

kilting¹ (kil'ting), n. [Verbal n. of kilt¹, v.] An arrangement of flat plaits set close together, each one hiding about half of the last, so as generally to make three thicknesses of stuff.

kilting² (kil'ting), n. [Cf. kilter.] 1. A tool; an instrument.—2. One of the component parts of a thing.

kimbo, kimboll, kimbow, n. See akimbo.
kimbo (kim'bō), a. [Also kembo; by aphesis from akimbo, akimbo, q. v.] Bent, as the arms when set akimbo. [Rare.]

The kimbo-handles seem with bears foot carv'd.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Eclogues, lii.

kimbo² (kim'bō), v. t. [Also kembo; < kimbo, a.] To set (the arms) akimbo; crouch; bend.

"Oona, madam!" said he, and he kemboed his arms, and strutted up to me. . . . "Kemboed arms! my lord, are you not sorry for such an air?"
Richardson, Sir Charles Grandison, IV, 288.

kimet, n. A Middle English form of come.

kimelin, kimeling, n. Same as kinmel.
Anon go gete us faste into this in kim-kam² (kim'kam), a. [A varied redupl. of kam², cam².] Crooked; awry.

The wavering commons in kym kam sectes are haled.
Stanhurst, tr. of Virgil.

True (quoth I), common it is in some sort, and in some sort not: but first mark, I beseech you, the comparison, how they go clean kim kam, and against the stream, as if rivers run up hills.
Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 959.

kimmer (kim'ēr), n. A variant of cummer.

Kimmerian (ki-mē'ri-an), a. and n. See Cimmerian. Gladstone.

Kimmeridge clay, shale. See Kimmeridgean.

Kimmeridge-coal money, ornament. See money, ornament.

Kimmeridgean (kim-e-rij'i-an), a. and n. [< Kimmeridge (see def.) + -ian.] In geol., noting a division of the Jurassic series, forming the base of the upper or Portland Oolite group as used by English geologists, and named from Kimmeridge, on the coast of Dorsetshire. The rocks of this geological division are chiefly shales, cement-stones, and clays. In the lower division of the Kimmeridgean fossils are abundant, and among them are bones of various saurians. Portions of the Kimmeridge shale are so bituminous that they have been, and still are, burned by the cottagers as fuel in districts where they occur. The shale has also been employed at various times for making naphtha, candles, and even gas. This is the material from which the so-called "coal money" was made in prehistoric times. The cement-stones of the Kimmeridgean have been used for cement.

kinmel (kim'nel), n. [(a) Early mod. E. also kymnel, kemmel, Sc. kimmen, kymmond, ME. kymnell, kymnelle (ML. cimnile); (b) also kimling, kemlin, early mod. E. kimelin*, kemelin, < ME. kymelyng, kymlyne, kemelyn (cf. ML. cumula, cimiline), a bowl, tub; prob. dim. of the form seen in MD. komme, D. kam = LG. kummi = OHG. chuhma, chohma, chuma, MHG. G. kumme = Dan. kum, kumme, a bowl, kettle, < L. cucuma, a cooking-vessel, a kettle.] A large tub used in salting meat, in brewing, and for other purposes.

She's somewhat simple, indeed; she knew not what a kinmel was; she wanta good nurters mightly.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 7. kimono (ki-mō'nō), n. [Jap.] In Jap. costume, a garment resembling a European dressing-gown, folding across the breast, leaving the neck exposed, and held in place by a sash. The principal outer garment of both sexes is made in this form, the chief difference being in the sleeves. Art. Jour., 1888, p. 156.

Kimri, Kimry (kim'ri), n. pl. See Cymry.

kin¹ (kin), n. [< ME. kin, kyn, ken, kun, < AS. cynn, cyn = OS. kunni = OFries. ken, kin, kon, kin, kind, race, tribe, = D. kunne, sex, = MLG. kunne = OHG. cunni, chunni, MHG. chunne, kinnic, kin, kind, race, = Icel. kyn, kin, = Dan. kjøn = Sw. kön, sex, = Goth. kuni, kin: allied to kind¹, kind², kindle¹, ken², child, and ult. to the equiv. Wl' broaches, and wl' rings;
And they hse courted her, lady Mairay, Wl' a' kin kind of things.
Lady Mairay (Child's Ballads, II, 80).

Kith and kin. See kith, 3.—Next of kin. (a) The relatives of a decedent entitled to his personal estate under the statute of distributions. See heir. (b) A person's nearest relatives according to the civil law. (Stimson.) The phrase does not include a widow, she being specifically provided for by the law as widow, and it is sometimes used in contradistinction to children: as, the widow, children, and next of kin. In either use it means that one (or more) who stands in the nearest degree of blood-relationship to the deceased. What degree is deemed nearest varies somewhat in the details of the law of different jurisdictions; but in general where there are no children, or descendants of children, the father is the next of kin, and if there is no father, the mother, and if no parent, the brothers and sisters are the next of kin, and so on.—Of kin, of the same kin; having relationship; of the same nature or kind; akin. See akin.

The king is near of kin to us. 2 Sam. xix. 42.
Like the wife, the adopted son, when he passed out from his former household, ceased to have any connection with his former relatives. He was no longer of kin to his natural father or to his brothers in the flesh.
W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 104.

To count kin. See count¹. kin¹ (kin), a. [Partly < kin¹, n., partly by aphesis from akin.] 1. Of kin; of the same blood; related.

Ny kyn he is to King of Norway,
For of Melusine descended all they.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6278.

Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen.
Shak., T. and C., l. 1, 75.

2. Of the same kind or nature; having affinity.

Yet do I not use . . . any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.
Shak., Ham., V., iii. 7, 71.

Melissa hitting all we saw with shafts
Of gentle satire, kin to charity.
Tennyson, Princess, ll.

kin² (kin), n. [A dial. (unassibilated) var. of chinc¹.] A chap or chilblain. [Prov. Eng.] kin³ (kin), n. [Chin.] A weight, in use in China and Japan, equal to 601.043 grams, or nearly 1½ pounds avoirdupois; a catty.

kin⁴ (kin), n. [Chin.] A Chinese musical instrument, of very ancient origin, having from five to twenty-five silken strings. It is played like a lute.

-kin. [ME. -kin (rarely -ken), much used in forming diminutives of proper names, as Dawkin, Hawkin, Hopkin, Tinkin, Tomkin, etc. (many of which exist as surnames in the orig. poss. form -kins, as Dawkins, Hawkins, Tomkins or Tompkins, etc.); not found in AS, and prob. of D. origin: < D. -ken = LG. -ken = OHG. -kin, -chin, MHG. -kin, -chen, G. -chen, a compound dim. suffix, < -k + -in, orig. -in, now, in the simple form, -en (see -en³).] A diminutive suffix, attached to nouns to signify a little object of the kind mentioned: as, lambkin, a little lamb; pipkin, a little pipe; catkin, a little cat, etc. As applied to persons it usually conveys contempt, as in lordkin. It is sometimes preceded by a short vowel, as in conakin or canakin, manakin or manikin, boatkin, etc. In the obsolete botkin, ladkin (lakin), etc., the diminutive form is due to the tendency to mute vowels. In many words, as bumpkin, buckin, firkin, griskin, kilderkin, malkin, napkin, siskin, etc., the diminutive force is for various reasons (but chiefly because most of them are not of original English formation) not now perceived. In foitkin the suffix is adjectival. In botkin, gherkin, panapkin, and some other words the termination requires special explanation: see their etymology.

kinesthesia (kin-es-thē'si-ä), n. [Gr. κίνησις, κίνησις, κίνησις, perception.] The muscular sense; the sense of muscular effort. Also kinesthesia, kinesthesia, kinesthesia.

kinesthetic, a. See kinesthesia.

kinate (kin'ät), n. [= F. kinate; as kin(ic) + -ate.] A salt of kinic acid.

kinbotet, n. An obsolete variant of eynebot.

kinch¹, n. [Early med. E. also kinch; < ME. kyuch, a bundle; perhaps a transposed form of knitch, q. v.] A bundle: same as knitch.

A kinch of wood, fascis. Levin's Manip. Vocab., p. 150.

kinch² (kinch), n. Same as kench.

kinchin (kin'chin), n. [Formerly also kynechin, kynechin; < MD. kindeken, kinneken (= MLG. kindekin, LG. kindken, kinneken = G. kindechen), a little child (also in D., a little tun, kilderkin: see kilderkin), < kind, child, + dim. -ken: see child and -kin.] A child. [Thieves' slang.] —Kinchin lay, the robbing of children (see the extract); hence, a minor rôle among professional thieves. [Thieves' slang.]

"Ain't there any other line open?" "Stop," said the Jew, laying his hand on Noah's knee. "The kinchin lay." "What's that?" demanded Mr. Claypole. "The kinchins, my dear," said the Jew. "Is the young children that's sent on errands by their mothers, with sixpences and shillings, and the lay is just to take their money away."
Dickens, Oliver Twist, xli.

"The detective business," which is, at the best, the kinchin lay of fiction. The Academy, Sept. 20, 1883, p. 203.

kinchin-coveit, kinchin-cot (kin'chin-köv, -kō), n. A youth not thoroughly instructed in vagabond knavery. Hallivell. [Thieves' slang.]

kinchin-mortt (kin'chin-mört), n. A child, generally a girl a year or two old, carried on the back by professional beggar-women. [Thieves' slang.]

The times are sair altered since I was a kinchin mort.
Scott, Guy Manuering, xxviii.

kincoob (kin'kob), n. [Anglo-Ind., < Hind. kin-kheab, Guzarathi kin-khāb.] A rich stuff made in India with silk or silk and cotton and a free use of gold thread, silver thread, or both. Also kin-khāb.

Sandal-wood workboxes and kincoob scarfs. Thackeray.
Stolen out of the house of Mr. Peter Paggen in Love Lane near Eastcheap. . . One Isabella colour Kincoob Gown flowered with Green and Gold.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, (l. 167).

kind¹ (kind), a. [ME. kinde, kynde, kunde, in earliest form icunde, < AS. gecynde, very rarely without the prefix, cynde, natural, inborn, < ge-, a generalizing prefix, + cund*, used only as a suffix, -cund, born, of a particular nature (as in godevund, of the nature of God, divine), native, natural, = Goth. -kunds, born (cf. Icel. kundur, son); with orig. pp. suffix -d (see -ed²), from the verb represented by the secondary (causal) form, AS. ecuman, obs. E. ken, beget, bring forth, whence also the noun, AS. cynn, E. kin¹: see kin¹, ken². Hence the noun kind², q. v.] 1f. Native; natural; characteristic; proper to the genus, species, or individual.

Selden, Table-Talk, p. 109.
The tax upon tallsge was often levied in kind upon corn.
Arbuthnot, Ancient Coins.

Kind of (also sort of) runs into certain marked idioms. It is used with a following noun to express something like or resembling or pretty near to what the noun expresses; as, he is a kind of fool (that is, not far from being a fool). Then, in careless and vulgar speech, it is transferred (especially in the abbreviated form kind of, pronounced kind o, and often written kinder, where the r is never pronounced) to use before an adjective; as, that is kind of good; he acted kinder ugly; and even before a verb; as, he kind of (kinder) laughed.

"A slight figure," said Mr. Peggotty, looking at the fire, "kind of worn."
Dickens, David Copperfield, lxiii.

The women rather liked him, and kind of liked to have him round.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 8.

It kinder seemed to me that something could be done.
S. Judd, Margaret, ll. 8.

Also, in phrases like what kind of a thing is this? he is a poor kind of fellow (that is, a thing of what kind, a fellow of a poor kind), kind of has come to seem like an adjective element before the noun, and hence before a plural noun, after words like some, all, and especially these and those, kind

it sometimes keeps the singular form: as, these kind of people. This inaccuracy is very old, and still far from rare, both in speaking and in writing; but good usage condemns it.

I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others. Shak., T. N., iii. 4, 266.

These kind of knaves I know. Shak., Lear, ii. 2, 107.

kind-witted, a. [ME. kynde-witted; < kind¹, a., + wit, n., + -ed².] Having natural sense or intelligence, as opposed to instructed. Compare kind wit, under kind¹, a.

No more can a kynde-witted man bote clerkes hym teche, Come for alle hus kynde wyttes thorwe Cristendom to be saued. Piers Plowman (C), xv. 52.

king¹ (kīn), n. [See cow¹.] Plural of cow¹. [Archaic.]

A herd of beeves, fair oxen and fair kine. Milton, P. L., xi. 647.

When the deep-breathing kine come home at twilight. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, IV.

king² (kīn), n. [Origin obscure.] A weasel. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

kingdom, n. [ME., also kyncdom, kindom, kyn-dom, < AS. cyncdom, kingdom, < cyne-, of a king, + dōm, jurisdiction: see kingdom.] Same as kingdom.

kinematic (kin-ē-mat'ik), a. and n. [Gr. κίνημα(-), movement, < κινεῖν, move: see kinetic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to kinematics.

II. n. Same as kinematics.

The rules about space and motion constitute the pure sciences of Geometry and Kinematics. W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I. 265.

Also cinematic.

kinematical (kin-ē-mat'i-kal), a. [kinematic + -al.] Same as kinematic. Also cinematical.

kinematics (kin-ē-mat'iks), n. [Pl. of kinematic: see -ics.] 1. That part of the science of mechanics which treats of motion, its direction, velocity, acceleration, composition, etc., without reference to mass or to constraints: opposed to dynamics.

Thus, the relation between Kepler's laws and the law of gravitation comes under the head of kinematics, because the planet is perfectly free to move and its mass has nothing to do with the question. On the other hand, the consideration of perturbations belongs to dynamics and not to kinematics. Again, the subject of the brachistochrone, though it involves no consideration of mass, is excluded from kinematics, as involving constraint. Statics is not considered to belong to kinematics, since most static problems involve constraints, though others do not. But the whole distinction between kinematics and dynamics seems artificial, unscientific, and confused.

2. The theory of mechanical contrivances for converting one kind of motion into another, as for example for making a piston-rod with a reciprocating motion communicate to a wheel a uniform rotation. Also called applied kinematics.

kinemerkt, n. [ME., also kyne-merk; < cyne-, of a king (see king¹), + marc, mark.] A mark or sign of royalty. Hævetok, l. 602.

kinepox (kin'poks), n. Same as cowpox.

kinerict, kinerichet, n. [ME., also kuerieche, kinric, etc., < AS. egerice (= OHG. chunirichi), a kingdom, < cyne-, of a king (see king¹), + rice, a kingdom. Cf. kingric.] Same as kingric.

kinescope (kin'e-skōp), n. Same as kinetoscope, 2.

kinesiatric (ki-nē-si-at'rik), a. [Gr. κίνησις, movement, + ιατρικός, relating to a cure, < ιατρός, a physician.] In therap., relating to or consisting in muscular movement employed as a remedy; pertaining to kinesiopathy.

kinesipathic (ki-nē-si-path'ik), a. [kinēsipath-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to kinesipathy; motorpathic.

kinesipathist (kin-ē-sip'a-thist), n. [kinēsipath-y + -ist.] One who practises kinesipathy; one versed in kinesipathy.

kinesipathy (kin-ē-sip'a-thi), n. [Irreg. < Gr. κίνησις, movement (< κινεῖν, move), + πάθος, suffering (taken, as in homeopathy, etc., to mean 'cure').] Kinesitherapy, especially in its earlier and cruder forms.

kinesitherapy (ki-nē-si-ther'a-pi), n. [Gr. κίνησις, movement, + θεραπεία, cure.] In therap., a mode of treating diseases by gymnastics or appropriate movements; movement-cure.

kinesodic (kin-ē-sod'ik), a. [Gr. κίνησις, movement, + ὄδ, force, + -ic.] Transmitting motor impulses: applied to the motor tracts of the nervous system.

kinesthesia, kinæsthesia, n. See kinaesthesia. kinesthetic, kinæsthetic (kin-es-thet'ik), a. [kinæsthesia, after æsthetic.] Pertaining to kinæsthesia.

kinetic (ki-net'ik), a. [Gr. κίνητικός, < κίνητός, verbal adj. of κινεῖν, move: see cite¹.] 1. Causing motion; motory.—2. Actually exerted, as force: opposed to latent or potential.

The potential energy of a material system is the capacity which it has of doing work depending on other circumstances than the motion of the system. In other words, potential energy is that energy which is not kinetic. Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, art. lxxxiii.

Kinetic coefficient of viscosity. See coefficient.—Kinetic constraint. See constraint.—Kinetic energy or activity. See energy, 7.—Kinetic theory of gases. See gas, 1.

kinetical (ki-net'i-kal), a. [kinetic + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or concerned with kinetics.

This he considers to be dependent upon the difference between the statical and the kinetical pressure of the column of lava on the sides of the duct. J. Prestwich, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 258.

kinetics (ki-net'iks), n. [Pl. of kinetic: see -ics.] That branch of the science of dynamics which treats of forces causing or changing the motion in bodies or of the circumstances of actual motion: opposed to statics, and synonymous with dynamics in one of the senses of that word. See dynamics.—Chemical kinetics. See chemical.

kinetogenesis (ki-nē-tō-jen'o-sis), n. [Gr. κίνησις, verbal adj. of κινεῖν, move (see kinetic), + γένεσις, origin: see genesis.] Origination of animal structures by means or in consequence of the movements of animals, or the doctrine of such origination. E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 423.

kinetoscope (ki-nē-tō-skōp), n. [Gr. κίνησις, moving (verbal adj. of κινεῖν, move), + σκοπεῖν, view.] 1. A kind of movable panorama. [Rare].—2. An instrument for illustrating the results of combinations of arcs of different radii in making curves. Also called kinesi-scope.

kyne-yerd, n. [ME. kyneyerd, kynezerd, < AS. cyneycard, a scepter, < cyne-, of a king, + yard, rod, yard: see yard¹.] A scepter.

Hil setten on ys heved a crowne of rede golde, Ant token him a kyneyerde . . . to deme. Execution of Sir Simon Frazer (Child's Ballads, VI. 277).

king¹ (king), n. [ME. king, kyng, < AS. cyng, a late contracted form of the usual cyning = OS. kuning = OFries. koning, kining, kening, keneng, also, with alteration of the suffix, konig, kenig, keneg = OD. coninc, koninec, D. koning, MLG. konink, konink, LG. koving, kōning = OHG. chuning, kunine, also, with alteration of the suffix, chunig, kunig, MHG. künne, künec, contr. küne, G. könig, formerly also konig (with vowel duo to LG.) = Icel. konungr, contr. kongr = Sw. konung, contr. kung = Dan. konge (a Goth. form, kuniggs*, is not recorded, and perhaps never existed, the usual word being thiudans = AS. theóden), a king, i. e. a chief, the chief man of a tribe, prob. lit. 'belonging to a tribe,' or 'descendant of a tribe' (or 'one of noble kin?'), < AS. cynn (= Goth. kuni, etc.), a race, tribe, kin (cf. AS. cyne- (= OHG. chuni-), in comp., of a king, perhaps a contr. form of cyning in comp., otherwise a related noun), + -ing, a common patronymic suffix: see kin¹ and -ing³.

The exact notional relation of king with kin is undetermined, but the etymological relation is hardly to be doubted. The asserted identity of the word with Skt. janaka, a father, is false. There is no connection, as alleged, with can¹ and evning¹. 1. A chief ruler; a reigning sovereign or monarch; a man who holds by life tenure the chief authority over a country and people. The word is used both as a generic designation of any sovereign ruler and as the specific title of the rulers of certain states distinctively called kingdoms. It is applied by extension to an infant who has become heir to the sovereign power, and reigns through a regent. King, originally applied to any tribal chief, whether such by hereditary, elective, or military right, took on a more imposing sense with the rise of the modern European states; but it is still used historically, or with a modern imputation or suggestion of royal splendor, with reference to many ancient and modern barbarian or savage tribes, as the ancient Canaanite kings, the Mongol kings of Asia, the ancient kings of Ireland, the kings of central Africa, the American Indian King Powhatan and King Philip, etc. The autocratic or despotic power formerly implied by the title king has been almost lost in Europe, where a king is now merely a chief magistrate for life, bound by constitutional and statutory limitations equally with his subjects. The office of king is now, as a rule, hereditary in principle; but in former times it was often elective, or in some manner the subject of choice or selection. In the generic sense, God is often called king, as the supreme ruler of the universe. Abbreviated K.

And also wee have a Kyng, nougth for to do Justice to every man, for he schalle fynde no forete amonge us; but for to kepe noblesse, and for to schewe that we ben obeyssant, wee have a Kyng. Mandeville, Travels, p. 294.

Who is this King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty. Ps. xxiv. 8.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king That treason can but peep to what it would. Shak., Hamlet, IV. 5, 123.

2. One who or that which is chief or greatest in any respect; a holder of preëminent rank or power of any kind: as, a king of good fellows; the lion is called the king of beasts.

If [leviathan] beheldeth all high things: he is a king over all the children of pride. Job xii. 34.

Of a' the lads that I do ken, A Wamphray lad's the king of men. Lads of Wamphray (Child's Ballads, VI. 173).

Time made thee what thou wast, king of the woods. Coverer, Yardley Oak.

3. In games: (a) A playing-card bearing a picture of a king: as, the king of diamonds.

Whiles he thought to steal the single ten, The king was silly finger'd from the deck. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1, 44.

An Ace of Hearts steps forth; the King unseen Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive Queen. Pope, R. of the L., III. 96.

(b) The chief piece in the game of chess. See chess. (c) A crowned man in the game of draughts. (d) See the quotation.

About the middle of the [billiard-table] was placed a small arch of iron, and in a right line, at a little distance from it, an upright cone called the king. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 396.

4. pl. [cap.] The eleventh and twelfth books of the Bible. In Hebrew manuscripts they are undivided, and form a continuous narrative of the Hebrew people from the later days of King David to the captivity of Judah in Babylon. The division into two books was first made in the Septuagint and retained in the Vulgate, in both of which they are named the third and fourth books of Kings (the two books of Samuel being the first and second); hence, in the English Bible, the double title "The first book of the Kings, commonly called the third book of the Kings," etc. The period embraces the reigns of all the kings of Israel and Judah, except Saul's and most of David's. The work was probably composed substantially before the end of the captivity. The authorship is uncertain.

king¹ (king), v. [< king¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To supply with a king.

For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shak., Hen. V., ii. 4, 26.

2. To make royal; raise to royalty.

Those traitorous captains of Israel who kinged themselves by slaying their masters and reigning in their stead.
South, Works, XI. ii.

II. intrans. To perform the part of king; act the king: with an indefinite it.

The News here is that Lambeth-House bears all the sway at Whitehall and the Lord Deputy kings it notably in Ireland.
Hovell, Letters, ii. 28.

king² (king), n. [Chin.] 1. The collective name in China for the books edited or compiled by Confucius, and forming with the Four Books (see analect) the classics of the country.—2. In Chinese translations of Buddhist Scriptures, the equivalent of sutra (which see).

king-apple (king'ap'1), n. A variety of apple, large, red in color, and of excellent quality.

king-at-arms (king'at-armz'1), n. In her., an officer of some antiquity in Great Britain, and formerly of great authority, whose business it is to direct the heralds, preside at their chapters, and have the jurisdiction of armory. In England there are three kings-at-arms, namely, Garter (see Garter), Clarenceux, and Norroy. The first of these is styled principal king-at-arms, and the others are called provincial kings, because their duties are confined to the provinces—the one (Clarenceux) officiating south of the Trent, and the other (Norroy) north of that river. There is a Lyon king-at-arms for Scotland, and an Ulster king-at-arms for Ireland, and one styled Bath or Gloucester, whose jurisdiction extends to Wales, but who is not a member of the heraldic chapter. The crown of a king-at-arms is composed of sixteen oak-leaves set erect upon a golden circle; nine leaves appear in the representations. Each king-at-arms has his official escutcheon, which he impales on the dexter side, with his own paternal arms on the sinister.

king-awk (king'ak), n. The great auk, Alca impennis.

king-bird (king'bërd), n. 1. A tyrant flycatcher, Tyrannus carolinensis, abundant in the United States (also called bee-martin), or some other species of the same genus, as the gray king-bird, Tyrannus dominicensis.—2. Any bird of the family Tyrannidae; any tyrant flycatcher.

king-bolt (king'bôlt), n. 1. A large bolt connecting the fore part of a carriage with the fore axle. The axle rotates about it as a joint when the carriage is turned.—2. A large bolt which passes through the truck and body-bolsters and center-plates of a car-body and the center of a truck. Car-Builder's Diet.

Also king-pin.

king-by-your-leavet, n. An old game of hide-and-seek.

[King-by-your-leave] A playe that children have, where one sytting blynde folde in the midle bydeth so tyll the rest have hydden themselves, and then he going to seeke them, if any get his place in the meane space, that same is kyng in his roume.
Huloet, 1572.

king-crab (king'krab), n. 1. A horseshoe-crab or Mouluca crab; a crustacean of the family Limulidae and genus Limulus, as L. polyphemus, L. moluccanus, or L. rotundicaudus. The king-crab is so called from its great size; it sometimes attains a length of 2 feet. The carapace is concavo-convex, rounded in front, and movably divided into the larger anterior horseshoe-shaped cephalothorax, whence the name horseshoe-crab, and a smaller wedge-shaped abdomen, from which projects a long, sharp, bayonet-like tail or telson. On the upper surface are a pair of large compound eyes, and in front of them a pair of small simple eyes. Underneath are five pairs of long ambulatory legs, springing from the cephalothorax near together, and an anterior pair, much smaller and otherwise modified, and differing in the two sexes. The mouth is in the middle line, behind the first pair of legs. Under the abdomen are a number of movable flaps, in the form of thin plates lying one upon another like the leaves of a book; these are pereopods or swimming-feet, and also respiratory organs or gills. The animal when just hatched is about a quarter of an inch long, has no telson, and the cephalothoracic and abdominal regions are much alike, being somewhat semicircular and hinged by a straight line. The abdomen shows traces of segmentation, and the general aspect recalls that of a trilobite, of which Limulus is the nearest relative living. In many respects these strange creatures resemble scorpions, and some contend, therefore, that they are arachnidans, not crustaceans. They are found on the eastern coasts of North America and Asia. See cut under horseshoe-crab.

2. A British decapod crustacean, Maia squinado, better known as the thornback-crab.

kingcraft (king'kräft), n. The craft or occupation of kings; the art of kingly government; royal polity or policy.

With what modesty can hee pretend to be a Statesman himself, who, with his Fathers Kingcraft and his own, did never that of his own accord which was not directly opposit to his professed Interest both at home and abroad?
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

As for tricking, cunning, and that which in sovereigns they call king-craft, and reason of state in commonwealths, to them and their proceedings Polybius is an open enemy.
Dryden, Character of Polybius.

Never was there so consummate a master [as Louis XIV.] of . . . king-craft—of all those arts which most advantageously display the merits of a prince, and most completely hide his defects.
Macaulay, Mirabeau.

king-crow (king'krō), n. A drongo-shrike of the genus Dierurus, as the Indian finga, D. macrocerus, remarkable for its elongated forked tail and for the courage and address with which, like the king-bird of the United States, it attacks other birds. The term is extended to various other drongos of the family Dicruvidae.

kingcup (king'kup), n. A plant: same as gold-cup.

Strowe me the ground with Daffadowndillies,
And Cowslips, and Kingcups, and loved Lillies.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., April.

king-devil (king'dev'1), n. A species of hawkweed, Hieracium pratense, recently introduced from Europe, and becoming a serious pest to farmers. It forms a continuous mat of pale-green leaves, lying flat on the ground and preventing any other form of vegetation from taking root. L. F. Ward, Botanical Gazette, XIV. 14. [Northern New York].

kingdom (king'dum), n. [< ME. kingdom, kyngdom, < AS. cyningdōm (= OS. kuningdōm = MD. koninkdom, D. koninkdom = G. königthum = Icel. konungdóm = Dan. kongedømme = Sw. konungadöme), kingly power, < cyning, king, + dōm, jurisdiction: see king¹ and -dom. This word has taken the place of ME. kinedom, < AS. cynedōn, a kingdom.] 1. The power or authority of a king; regal dominion; supreme rule. [Archaic.]

There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.
Mat. xvi. 28.

The Father, to whom in heaven supreme Kingdom, and power, and glory appertains.
Milton, P. L., vi. 815.

2†. The state of being a king; kinghood; kingship.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass.
Shak., Rich. III., iv. 2, 62.

3. The territory or country subject to a king; the dominion of a king or monarch (see king¹); in general, a domain; country.—4. Anything conceived as constituting a realm or sphere of independent action or control: as, the kingdom of thought.

In the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns Between my conscience and my conſin's death.
Shak., K. John, iv. 2, 246.

Who pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4, 47.

5. In the New Testament, with the definite article, usually in fuller phrase the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of heaven, the spiritual reign of God as supreme king, and over subjects loyally accepting it: generally conceived as founded by the Messiah, and therefore a Messianic kingdom. The term is used with different shades of meaning, but always with this fundamental idea of God's reign as recognized and loyally accepted. Sometimes this reign is spoken of as recognized in the heart and life of the individual, sometimes as supreme in the community, sometimes prophetically as in its perfection embracing the whole body of the redeemed. (See for a collection of these definitions, Dr. James S. Candlish's "The Kingdom of God," Appendix, note 2, p. 392.)

Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom.
Mat. iv. 23.

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.
Mat. vii. 21.

The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.
Rom. xiv. 17.

6. In nat. hist., one of the three great divisions in which natural objects are ranked in classification—namely, the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms.—Kingdom come, the hereafter: as, to go to kingdom come (that is, to die). [Slang.]—Latin kingdom. See Latin.—United Kingdom, Great Britain and Ireland: so called since the legislative union of the two islands under the Act of Union of 1800, which took effect January 1st, 1801.

kingdomed (king'dumd), a. [< kingdom + -ed²] Possessing kingly power or character.

Imagined worth
Holds in his blood such swoll and hot discourse,
That 'twixt his mental and his active parts Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages.
Shak., T. and C., ii. 3, 185.

king-duck (king'duk), n. A kind of eider-duck, Somateria spectabilis, of the subfamily Fuligininae and family Anatida, common on the northern coasts of Europe and America. It differs from the common eider notably in the shape of the bill and head, in coloration, mode of feathering of the base of the upper mandible, position of the nostrils, etc.

king-eider (king'î'dër), n. Same as king-duck.
king-fern (king'fërn), n. The royal or flowering fern, Osmunda regalis.

kingfish (king'fish), n. One of various fishes, of large size or of excellent quality, belonging to different families. (a) In the Atlantic States, and especially in New York, a scianoid fish, Menticirrhus nebulosus, of elongate form, with the ventral fins some distance behind the pectoral fins, and the body grayish and silvery in color, with irregular dark bars, of which the anterior trend obliquely backward and downward, and the posterior forward and downward. It is much esteemed for its flesh. Also called whiting, tomcod, hake, black mullet, and mink, names properly belonging to different animals. The name is also extended to related species, as the southern M. alburnus (also called Carolina whiting, Bermuda whiting, though not found in Bermuda, bullhead whiting, ground mullet, and barb) and the Pacific coast M. undulatus (also called sucker). (b) In California, another scienoid fish, Seriplus politus, better known as queenfish. (c) A scienoid fish, Sciæna antarctica, of southern Australia and Tasmania, closely related to the maigre of Europe. (d) In New Zealand, a carangoid fish, Seriola lalandi, of a fusiform shape, with from 6 to 8 dorsal spines and 32 to 36 dorsal rays, steel-blue above and white below. It sometimes attains a length of 4 feet, and is an excellent food-fish. (e) In England, the opah, Lampris tuna or L. guttatus. See opah. (f) A scombroid fish, Scomberomorus regale or Cybus regale, related to the Spanish mackerel; also, the Scomberomorus caballa or cero. (g) A scienoid fish, the little rounder, Genyonemus lineatus, common on the coast of California; so called in the San Francisco markets. (h) A fish of the family Polymniidae, Polymnius indicus, esteemed in India for the sounds, which yield isinglass of the best quality, and which are a constant source of traffic among the Chinese.

kingfisher (king'fish'ér), n. 1. Any bird of the extensive family Alcedinidae. Kingfishers form a natural family of picarian birds, with fissirostral bill and syndactyl feet, and are remarkable for their number and variety as well as for the brilliancy of their plumage. They nest in holes, and lay white eggs. Their characteristic habit is to sit motionless on the watch for their prey, dart after it, and return to their perch. There are about 125 species and 20 genera, found in most parts of the world, but very unevenly distributed. Thus, there are only 2 species peculiar to northern parts of the old world, only 2 species in North America, and only one genus in all America. The Ethiopian region and the Indian region are about equally rich; the Australian (in a broad sense) is the richest, alone possessing half the genera and half the species. The common kingfisher of Europe, Alcedo ispida, a small bird of brilliant colors, is supposed to be the halcyon of classic writers. The pied kingfisher, Ceryle rudis, also inhabits Europe as well as other countries. The common American kingfisher, C. alcyon, is 12½ inches long, 22 in extent of wings, dull-blue above, white below, with a bluish belt on the breast and in the female a chestnut bar behind this; the wing- and tail-feathers are black, spotted and barred with white; the head is crested. This bird is known as the belled kingfisher. (See cut under Ceryle.) A small, glossy green-and-white species, which reaches the Mexican border of the United States, is C. cabanisi. The giant kingfisher or laughing-jackass of Australia is Dacelo gigas. See cut under Dacelo. Erroneously—2. (a) The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus, popularly imagined to be the female of the kingfisher Alcedo ispida. [Local, Scotland and Ireland.] (b) The tern or sea-swallow.

Also king's-fisher.

swallow-tailed kingfisher, the paradise jacamar, Galbula paradisaica, a bird of Surinam.

king-geldt, n. [< king¹ + gelt².] Eseeuag, or royal aid. Bailey, 1731.

king-gutter (king'gut'ér), n. A main drain. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

Kingia (kin'ji-ä), n. [NL. (Robert Brown, 1827), named primarily in honor of Capt. Philip Gidley King, governor of New South Wales at the time of Flinders's expedition, during which the plant was first collected, but also intended to commemorate Capt. King, who first found the ripe seeds in November, 1822.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants of anomalous character, referred by the latest writers to the Liliaceae, but formerly regarded as belonging to the Juncaceae, or rush family. It has by some authors been made the type of the group to which it belongs, but is now placed in the tribe Calceatiseae with Calceatsea and Baptaria. It differs, however, from both those genera in having the leaves crowded at the apex of the trunk, and the flowers likewise crowded in a terminal head, and in its 3-celled ovary. The trunk is woody, and the leaves are linear, the whole plant forming a sort of grass-tree. Only one species, K. australis, is known, native of southwestern Australia.

kingio (kin'gyō), n. [Jap., goldfish, < kin, gold, + gio, fish.] A Japanese variety of the goldfish, Carassius auratus.

king-killer (king'kil'ér), n. 1. One who kills a king; a regicide.

king-vulture (king'vul'tūr), n. A large American vulture of the family Cathartidae, the Sar-

King-vulture (Sarcorhamphus or Gyparchus papa).

corhamphus papa: so called because the smaller vultures, as turkey-buzzards and carrion-crows, are often driven from their repasts by this more powerful bird of prey. The plumage is white, of a creamy or pale-buff tint; the large wing- and tail-feathers are black; and the head and upper neck are naked or nearly so, and brilliantly varied with scarlet, orange, blue, black, and white. The bird is much inferior in size and in spirit to the condor of South America and to the Californian condor. It inhabits South and Central America and Mexico, in wooded districts; its extreme range is from Paraguay to near the Mexican border of the United States.

kingwood (king'wüd), n. A Brazilian wood believed to be derived from a species of Dalbergia (Triptolemaea), but by some referred to Brya Ebenus. It is beautifully streaked with violet tints, and is used in turning and small cabinet-work. Also called violet-wood.

kinic (kin'ik), a. [Also quinic; = F. kinique; < kina, an abbr. of quinquina, cinchona: see quinine.] Pertaining to or obtained from cinchona: same as cinchonic.—Kinic acid, $C_7H_{12}O_6$, a monobasic vegetable acid found in the cinchona bark, where it exists in combination with the alkaloids cinchonine and quinine, and also with lime, forming the kinates of these bases. It is found also in the blueberry (Vaccinium Myrtillus), in coffee-beans, and in the leaves of oak, elm, ivy, holly, etc.

kink¹ (kingk), n. [Also dial. kenk, and (Sc.) kinch, kinsch; = D. G. kink, < Norw. Sw. kink, a twist or curl in a rope; cf. Icel. kengr, a bend or bight, a metal crook. Cf. also Norw. kika, kinka, writhe, Icel. kikka, sink at the knees under a burden.] 1. A knot-like contraction or curl in a thread, cord, or rope, or in a hair, wire, or chain, resulting from its being twisted or doubled upon itself, or from the nature of the material. Also kinkle.

It is impossible by projecting the after-image of a straight line upon two surfaces which make a solid angle with each other to give the line itself a sensible kink.

W. James, Mind, XII. 532.

2. An unreasonable and obstinate notion; a crotchety; a whim. [Colloq.]

The fact is, when a woman gets a kink in her head sgin a man, the best on us don't allers do jest the right thing.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 33.

kink¹ (kingk), v. i. or t. [< kink¹, n.] 1. To form kinks; to twist or contract into knots.—2. To become entangled: said of a line.

kink² (kingk), v. i. [< ME. kinken, kynken, also assimilated kencken, < *AS. cincian (in verbal n. cincung, a fit of laughter) = MD. kinchen, D. kinken, cough; prob. ult. imitative, like hic. Hence chink⁴, kinkcough, chincough, kinkhaust, etc.] 1. To laugh loudly.—2. To gasp for breath as in a severe fit of coughing: especially applied to the noisy inspiration of breath in whooping-cough. [Obsolete or colloq. in both uses.]

I laghe that I kynke.

Towneley Mysteries, p. 309. (Hallivell.)

kink² (kingk), n. [< kink², v.] A convulsive fit of coughing or laughter; a sonorous indraft of the breath; the whoop in whooping-cough; a gasping for breath caused by coughing, laughing, or crying. [Scotch and southern U. S.]

kinkle¹ (king'kl), n. [< kinkle, v.; or dim. of the orig. kink¹, n.] Same as kink¹, 1.

I love, I say, to start upon a tramp,
To shake the kinkles out o' back an' legs.

Lonell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., li.

kinkle² (king'kl), n. Brassica Sinapistrum, the charlock. [Prov. Eng.]

kinkled (king'kld), a. [< kinkle + -ed²] Having kinkles or kinks.—Kinkled glass. See glass.

kinky (king'ki), a. [< kink¹ + -y¹] 1. Full of kinks; kinkled; woolly: applied especially to hair, as that of the negro, which is not cylindrical, but flattened so that when pulled out straight and allowed to untwist itself the flattening is in different planes. The hair of the beard, etc., of other races is also kinky to some extent.—2. Crotchety; eccentric. [Colloq., U. S.]

kinless (kin'les), a. [< kin¹ + -less.] Destitute of kin or kindred.—Kinless loons, a name given by the Scotch to the judges sent among them by Cromwell, because they distributed justice solely according to the merits of the cases, being uninfluenced by family or party ties. Imp. Dict.

kinikinick, kinnikinic (kin'i-ki-nik'), n. [Also killikinick, kilikinic; Algonkin, lit. 'a mixture,' 'that which is mixed.')] 1. The leaves or bark of several plants (willow, sumac, etc.), smoked either with or without tobacco by the American Indians.—2. Specifically, the trailing ericaceous plant Arctostaphylos Uva-ursi, or bearberry, common northward in America, as well as in the Old World.

The bearberry has, however, an association with Indian history, as it is the kinikinick of the Western races, who smoke it, and believe the practice secures them from malarial fevers.

Thomas Meehan, Native Flowers and Ferns, I. 78.

3. The silky cornel, Cornus sericea, whose bark was used in the manner mentioned in def. 1; doubtless, also, the closely related Cornus stolonifera, or red-osier dogwood. In this sense best known in America.

kino¹ (kē'nō), n. [= F. kino; appar. of E. Ind. origin.] A well-known drug resembling catechu, consisting of the gum of several trees belonging to the tropics. It is a more or less brittle substance, in general of a dark reddish-brown color in the mass. Its chief component is tannic acid, and it thus becomes a powerful astringent. Its leading use is medicinal, but it is also employed in India in dyeing cotton, giving the color called nankeen. The kinds may be classified according to their source. (a) Esst Indian, Malabar, or Amboyna kino is the product of the leguminous tree Pterocarpus Marsupium of India and Ceylon. It is the kind most extensively used, and the only kino of the British Pharmacopœia. (b) The Bengal, butea, dhak, or palas (pulas) kino is yielded by Butea frondosa, to some extent also by B. superba and Spatholobus Rozburghii. (c) Botany Bay, Australian, or eucalyptus kino is derived from Eucalyptus resinifera and several other species, the best variety probably from E. coriambosa. It is used in England, under the name of red-gum, in astringent lozenges for sore throat. See iron-bark-tree. (d) African kino was the first brought into notice, but has long been out of the market. It was produced by Pterocarpus erinaceus. (e) West Indian or Jamaica kino is the product of the tree Coccoloba uvifera, the seaside grape. It has sometimes been exported, but appears to have no fixed standing in the market. (f) South American or Caracass kino is thought to be from the same tree as the West Indian. It has come into considerable use in the United States.

kino², n. Another spelling of keno.

kinofluous (ki-nof'lō-us), a. [< kino¹ + L. fluere, flow.] Exuding kino.

kiosk (ki-ask'), n. [Also kiosque; < F. kiosque = G. Pol. kiosk, < Turk. kushk (kyushk), a summer-house, pavilion, < Pers. kushk, a palace, villa, pavilion, portico.] 1. A kind of open pavilion or summer-house, generally constructed of wood, straw, or other light materials, and often supported by pillars round the foot of which is a balustrade. Such pavilions, which are common in Turkey and Persia, have been introduced into the gardens and parks of western Europe.

In the mean time we went to a kiosk: that is, a place like a large bird-cage, with enough roof to make a shade, and no walls to impede the free passage of the air.

B. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 376.

The sea-wall is lined with kiosks, from whose cushioned windows there are the loveliest views.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 346.

2. In France, a street news-stand or booth somewhat resembling in form a small kiosk as in sense 1.

The trees between the endless lines of houses spread their bare branches or their sickly verdure in a perspective of luminous newspaper kiosques, green benches, and tall advertising columns crowned by a ring of gas jets.

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 692.

kiotome (ki'ot-ō-tōm), n. [For kionotome, < Gr. kiōn, a column (see cion2), + τμήσις, cutting, < τέλειν, τακτείν, cut.*] A surgical instrument devised by Desault for dividing pseudo-membranous bands in the rectum and bladder, and also used by him for the removal of the tonsils.

Sw. kjortel*, a kirtle; with dim. suffix -el, prob. < Icel. skyrta = Dan. skjorte = Sw. skjorta, a skirt, shirt; the orig. initial s being lost, perhaps by association with L. curtus (> E. curt, kirt = D. kort = G. kurz, etc.), short: see curt, short, shirt, skirt.] 1. In former use, a garment of which the form and purpose varied at different times. (a) A tunic or undergarment; a shirt. (b) A close-fitting gown for women, which sometimes was called a long kirtle and had a train. (c) A garment like a doublet for men. (d) A cloak. (e) A monk's gown. Coat and kirtle are mentioned together in the middle of the seventeenth century as forming a woman's costume: as, a tawny camlet coat and kirtle cost £10 17s. In this case kirtle is evidently the petticoat, or the garment worn under the coat. See half-kirtle, and full kirtle, below.

A knights wife may haue her kirtle borne in her owne howse, or in any other place, so it be not in her betters presence. Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), l. 19.

Tennyson, The Sea-Fairies.

2. (a) A confection, usually made of whites of eggs and powdered sugar, mixed, and baked in an oven. (b) A sugar-plum or candied confection made of pulled sugar and variously colored and flavored.—3. pl. Same as kiss-me.—Kiss of peace, in the early church, a kiss exchanged as a greeting and in sign of Christian love, and used ceremonially at baptism and on other occasions, but especially in the eucharistic service introduced by the words "Peace be with you" (response, "and with thy spirit"), and "Greet ye one another with a holy kiss," or some similar form. (See 1 Cor. xvi. 20, and other passages of Scripture.) Kissing as an act of salutation was not unusual in ordinary intercourse in some of the countries where Christianity first prevailed; but among the Christians the kiss of peace was ordered at a very early date to be confined to persons of the same sex. Later, the custom of actually giving the kiss fell into gradual disuse, though liturgical forms still survive to represent its spiritual meaning of reconciliation to God and man. In the Western Church the kissing of a tablet called the pax has, since the thirteenth century, replaced the kiss between persons; and this form of the ceremony is still sometimes used at high mass in the Roman Catholic Church, but is not extended to the congregation. Sometimes called simply the peace. See pax.

kiss (kis), v. [ME. kissen, kyssen (pret. kist, kiste), < AS. cyssan (pret. cyste) = OS. kussjan = OFries. kessa = D. kussen = MLG. kussen = OHG. chussen, chussan, cussan, MHG. G. küssen = Icel. kyssa = Dan. kyss = Sw. kyssa, kiss; from the noun: see kiss, n. Cf. Goth. kukjan, kiss.] I. trans. 1. To smack with the pursed lips (a compression of the closed cavity of the mouth by the cheeks giving a slight sound when the rounded contact of the lips with one another is broken); press one's lips to, or touch with the lips, as a mark of affection or reverence, or as a conventional salutation; salute or caress with the lips: as, to kiss the Bible in taking an oath; to kiss a lady's hand; to kiss one on the cheek; they kissed each other.

In the left syde of the Walle of the Tabernacle is, well the heighte of a man, a gret Ston to the quantytee of a mannes Hed, that was of the Holy Sepulchre; and that Ston kissen the Pilgrynes that come thidre.

I heard the sound of a kit playing a minuet over our heads.
Addison, Frozen Words.

kit⁶ (kit), n. [= Dan. kit = Sw. kitt, putty, < G. kitt, formerly kütt, MHG. küt, küte, cement, lute, putty, OHG. cuti, chuti, quiti, a gluey substance, = AS. cwidu, culu, gum; see cul.] A kind of cement.

kit⁷ (kit), n. [Perhaps a particular use of *kit*⁴.] A fish, the smear-clab. [Cornwall, Eng.]

Kitaibelia (kit-ā-bē'li-ā), n. [NL. (Willdenow), named after Dr. Paul Kitaibel, director of the Botanical Garden at Pesth.] A genus of tall perennial herbs of the natural order Malvaceae, of Reichenbach's division Kitaibelia of the tribe Malveae, the present subtribe Malopeae, distinguished from Malope by having the style stigmatic at the apex, and from other related genera by its 6 to 9 braets united at the base. Only one species, K. vitifolia, the vine-leaved kitaibelia, exists, whose native home is the banks of the Danube in Hungary, but which is cultivated in gardens in England and the United States. It is a rough hairy herb, 2 or 3 feet high, more or less clammy above, with 5-lobed leaves and dull-white flowers an inch and a half across. The leaves are employed in Hungary as a vulnerary.

Kitaibelia (kit-ā-bē'li-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1837), < Kitaibelia + -ae.] A group of malvaceous plants founded on the genus Kitaibelia, now included in the subtribe Malopeae of the tribe Malveae.

kit-cat¹ (kit'kat), n. [Also kit-kat; a varied redupl. of cat; or, which is nearly the same thing, < *kit*⁴ + *cat*¹.] The game of tip-cat.

Then in his hand he takes a thick bat,
With which he used to play at kit-cat.
Cotton, Works (1734), p. 88.

kit-cat², kit-kat (kit'kat), n. [So called from portraits of members of the Kit Cat Club (founded in London about 1700), painted of this size by Sir Godfrey Kneller. See first quotation below. The club, of which Addison and Steele were members, was so called from Kit Cat or Katt (Christopher Katt), a pastry-cook who served the club. "Immortal made as Kit Cat by his pies"—W. King, Art of Cookery, let. viii. (first printed in 1708).] A particular size of portrait, less than half-length, in which a hand may be shown; a truncated portrait.

The room where these portraits [of the Kit-Kat Club] were intended to be hung (in which the Club often dined) not being sufficiently lofty for half-length pictures, that circumstance is said to have been the occasion of a shorter canvas being used, which is now denominated a Kit-Kat, and is sufficiently long to admit a hand. The canvas for a Kit-Kat is thirty-six inches long and twenty-eight wide. Malone, Life of Dryden, p. 534, note.

Addison saw in Steele's kit-cat of Sir Roger the occasion for a full-length after his own heart.
A. Dabson, Int. to Steele's Plays, p. xxxi.

Some of his kit-kats and his full-length figures give one a better idea of his widely differing subjects than can be found in any other of the branches of his twin arts.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII.

kitcat-roll (kit'kat-rōl), n. In agri., a kind of roller for land, somewhat in the form of a double cone, being thickest in the middle.

kitcheit, n. See kicheit.

kitchen (kich'en), n. [< ME. kitchen, kichen, kichene, kychen, kechen, cochine, kuchen, etc., < AS. cyean, ciēan, cyccne = MD. kokene, keukene, D. keuken = MLG. kokene, koke = OHG. chuhhina, chuchina, cuchina, MHG. küchen, küche, G. küche = Dan. kjøkken = Sw. kök = F. cuisine (> E. cuisine) = Sp. cocina = Pg. cozinha = It. cucina, cucina, < L. coquina, a kitchen, a cooking-room, < coquere, cook; see *cook*¹.] 1. A room in which food is cooked; an apartment of a house fitted with the necessary apparatus for cooking.

The sheryfe had in hys kechyn a coker.
Lytell Geete of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 73).

A fat kitchen makes a lean will.
Franklin, Way to Wealth.

Dish-washer and broach-turner, loon!—to me
Thou smell'est all of kitchen as before.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

2. In Scotland and Ireland, anything eaten by way of relish with bread, potatoes, porridge, or whatever forms the substantial part of a meal.

Thus, when a meal is composed of potatoes and salt, the salt is the kitchen; if of bread and butter, the butter is the kitchen; if of potatoes and bread and fish, the fish is the kitchen.

Many another [peasant] will have some better kitchen than salt to his potatoes for his Christmas dinner!
Contemporary Rev., LI. 127.

Kitchen cabinet. See cabinet.—Tin kitchen. (a) Same as Dutch oven (which see, under oven). (b) A child's toy. kitchen (kich'en), v. t. [< kitchen, n.] 1. To entertain with the fare of the kitchen; furnish food to.

There is a fat friend at your master's house,
That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner.
Shak., C. of E., v. 1, 415.

2. To serve as kitchen for; give a relish to; season; render palatable. [Scotch.]

The poor man's wine,
His wee drap parricht, or his bread,
Thou kitchens fine.
Burns, Scotch Drink.

3. To use (food) as kitchen—that is, sparingly, or so that it may last. Thus, a child eating bread and milk may be told to kitchen the milk—that is, use it sparingly in proportion to the bread. [Colloq., Scotch.]

kitchen-cof (kich'en-kō), n. A corruption of kinchin-cove.

A Kitchen Co is called an idle runagate boy.
Fraternity of Vagabonds (1561), quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 594.

kitchendom (kich'en-dum), n. [< kitchen + -dom.] The domain of the kitchen. Davies.

What knowest thou of flowers, except, belike,
To garnish meats with? hath not our good King
Who lent me thee, the flower of kitchendom,
A foolish love for flowers?
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

kitchener (kich'en-er), n. 1. A person employed in a kitchen; the superintendent of a kitchen; a kitchen-purveyor.

Two most important officers of the Convent, the Kitchener and Refectioner, were just arrived with a sumpter-mule, loaded with provisions.
Scott, Monastery, xv.

The industry of all crafts has paused—except it be the smith's fiercely hammering pikes, and in a faint degree the kitchener's cooking off-hand victuals.
Carlyle, French Rev., I. v. 5.

2. An economical or elaborated cooking-stove or other culinary appliance. Specifically—(a) A special form of stove adapted for cooking, fitted with dampers, and combining ovens, plate-warmers, devices for heating a supply of water, and often many other contrivances.

A general use of gas cooking stoves and kitcheners burning small coke.
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 101.

It is almost impossible to have a properly roasted joint in closed kitcheners.
Encyc. Brit., VI. 332.

(b) A name given to ancient utensils of bronze, such as those found at Pompeii, in which water could be heated and various dishes kept hot at slight expense of fuel. The Naples Museum contains some very elaborate specimens.

kitchen-fare (kich'en-fär), n. Such fare as servants are allowed in a kitchen.

kitchen-fee (kich'en-fē), n. The fat which falls from meat in roasting; drippings; so called because it forms one of the cook's perquisites. [Great Britain.]

The managers were satisfied that fat drippings and kitchen-fee were preferable to the proposed substitute.
Caledonian Mercury, Nov. 24, 1823.

kitchen-gain† (kich'en-gän), n. Same as kitchen-fee.

The sweat upon thy face doth off appear
Like to my mother's fat and kitchen-gain.
Greene, Doron's Eclogue.

kitchen-garden (kich'en-gär'dn), n. 1. A garden or piece of ground appropriated to the raising of vegetables for the table.

The product of kitchen-gardens in all sorts of herbs, salads, plants, and legumes. Sir W. Temple, Of Gardening.

2. A kindergarten in which kitchen-work is taught. [Local, U. S.]

kitchenist† (kich'en-ist), n. [< kitchen + -ist.] A kitchener; a cook.

Brick-makers, Brewers, Colliers, Kitchenists, Tobacco Battered, 427. (Davies.)

kitchen-knave (kich'en-näv), n. A scullion.

Grant me to serve
For meat and drink among thy kitchen-knaves.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

A brazen tub of kitchen-leet. Ford.

kitchen-maid (kich'en-mäd), n. A female servant employed in a kitchen.

Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?
Shak., C. of E., iv. 4, 77.

kitchen-midden (kich'en-mid'n), n. [< kitchen + midden, after the equiv. Dan. kjøkkenmødding.] A shell-mound; the literal translation of the Danish kjøkkenmødding, kitchen refuse. This refuse forms extensive heaps or mounds, which consist chiefly of the shells of edible mollusks mixed with fragments of bones of various animals, and implements of stone, bone, and horn. Mounds of this kind are found in large numbers on the eastern coast of Denmark, in various parts of Scotland along the shores of the firths, as well as in Ireland and elsewhere. They are the refuse heaps which accumulated around the dwellings of former inhabitants, and in the case of Denmark are believed by the best authorities to be referable to the early part of the Neolithic age, "when the art of polishing flint implements was known, but before it had reached its greatest development" (Sir J. Lubbock, Prehistoric Times, 2d ed., p. 240). See midden and shell-mound.

During the past summer the museum at Copenhagen has explored a large kitchen-midden in Jutland, situated in a forest a couple of miles from the sea.
Amer. Naturalist, XXIII. 80.

kitchen-mort (kich'en-mört), n. A corruption of kinchin-mort. [Old slang.]

Times are said altered since I was a kitchen-mort. Men were men then, and fought each other in the open field.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxviii.

kitchen-physic (kich'en-fiz'ik), n. Nourishing diet for an invalid; substantial fare; good living. [Humorous.]

For my selfe, if I be ill at ease, I take kitchyn physicke; I make my wife my doctor, and my garden my apothecaries shop.
Greene, Quip for Upstart Courtier (Harl. Misc., V. 406).

Nothing will cure this man's understanding but some familiar and Kitchen physick; which, with pardon, must for plainness sake be administer'd unto him. 'Call hither your cook.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst., § 2.

kitchenry† (kich'en-ri), n. [< kitchen + -ry.] 1. Utensils used in the kitchen; utensils for cooking.—2. The body of servants employed in a kitchen.

Close unto the front of the chariot marcheth all the sort of weavers and embroiderers; next unto whom goeth the black-guard and kitchenry.
Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 12.

kitchen-stuff (kich'en-stuf), n. 1. Material used in kitchens; requisites for a kitchen; specifically, vegetables for cooking.

In such a state of things, would you easily believe his lordship could pride himself in cooking up this cold kitchen-stuff, and serving it again and again, amidst so elegant an entertainment?
Warburton, Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophy.

2. The refuse of a kitchen; garbage; specifically, refuse fat and fat-yielding material, such as may be got from pots and dripping-pans.

A thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuff.
Donne.
Here in a small apartment may be a pile of rags, a sack-full of bones, the many varieties of grease and kitchen-stuff, corrupting an atmosphere which, even without such accompaniments, would be too close.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 120.

kitchen-wench (kich'en-wench), n. A kitchen-maid; a female scullion.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench.
Shak., R. and J., II. 4, 42.

kitchenery (kich'er-i), n. Same as keifjerre.

kite¹ (kit), n. [Early mod. E. also improp. kighte; < ME. kite, ketē, < AS. eġta, a kite (bird). Cf. W. cu, a falcon, also flight, velocity.] 1. A diurnal bird of prey of the family Falconidae and subfamily Milvinae; a glee. The kites are among the inferior or hawks, having a rather weak bill without a tooth, small feet with moderate talons, long pointed wings, and usually long, often forked tail; but there are no diagnostic characters by which the kites can be defined with precision. They prey upon humble quarry as insects, reptiles, and small birds and mammals. The common kite or glee of Europe is Milvus tetina, regalis, or vulgaria, a bird 2 feet long, the wing 20 inches, the head a brown color above, the feathers with reddish edgings, the under parts mostly rufous; the tail is 15 inches long, forked. Milvus egyptius is the Arabian kite; M. ater is the black kite of Africa and parts of Europe; M. vociferans is the Indian kite; M. swainsoni, the Australian, in which the head is crested. Elanoides forficatus is the beautiful swallow-tailed kite of the United States, glossy black and white, with a long, deeply furcate tail. (See cut under Elanoides.) Nauclerus vociferans is a corresponding African species. The white-tailed or pearl kite of the United States is Elanus leucurus; and there are several other species of this genus in the warmer parts of the world. The Mississippi kite is Ictinia mississippiensis; and a very similar species, Ictinia plumbea, inhabits South America. In Swainson's system of classification a certain group of hawks which he called Cymindinae were named kites. The name has been misapplied to various hawks of different genera, as Buteo, Circus, etc. See glade and hawk, 1.

Pearl Kite (Elanus leucurus).

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1, 33.

2†. A sharper. [Slang.]

Roister Doister that doughtie kite.
Udall, Roister Doister, v. 5.

Cramming of serving-men, mustering of beggars,
Maintaining hospitals for kites and curs.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, i. 1.

3. [Prob. so called from its hovering in the air, like the bird so named.] A light frame, usually of wood and covered with paper, constructed for flying in the air by means of a long cord attached. In western countries the flying of kites is chiefly an amusement of boys; but in Japan, and to a less extent in China, it is a national pastime of adults, often practised in competitive contests, with kites of elaborate construction.

4. Naut., one of the highest and lightest sails; one of the small sails that are usually spread in light winds, and furled in a strong breeze.

All hands were then called, and set to work in earnest to take in the kites.
The Century, XXVI, 944.

5. [In punning allusion to paper kites (in def. 3). Cf. flier, 6.] An accommodation bill; a negotiable instrument made without consideration; a "wind-bill"; in the plural, mere paper credit not based on commercial transactions. See accommodation. [Commercial slang.]

Here's bills plenty—long bills and short bills—but even the kites, which I can fly as well as any man, won't raise the money for me now.
Miss Edgeworth, Love and Law, i. 2.

In English Exchequer-bills full half a million,
Not kites, manufactured to cheat and inveigle,
But the right sort of "fimsy," all sign'd by Montague.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II, 48.

6. The brill. [Local, Eng.]—Electrical kite, a contrivance employed by Franklin to verify his hypothesis respecting the identity of electricity and lightning, resembling in shape a school-boy's kite, but covered with silk and varnished paper, and armed with a wire.—Everglade kite. See everglade.—Flying kites (naut.), the light sails of a ship.—To fly the kites. See fly, 1.

kite¹ (kīt), v. i.; pret. and pp. kited, ppr. kiting. [kite¹, n., 1 and 3.] 1. To go or fly with great rapidity or with the ease of a kite: as, to go kiting about. [Colloq.]—2. To fly commercial "kites"; raise money or gain the temporary use of money by means of accommodation bills, or by borrowed, illegally certified, or worthless checks. [Commercial slang.]

kite² (kīt), n. [Also kyte; appar. irreg. < ME. kit*, kid* (found only in comp.: see kidney), < AS. cwith = Icel. kviðr = Sw. qued, the womb, = Goth. kwithus, the belly, perhaps = Gr. γαστήρ, the belly, = Skt. jathara, the belly; see *gaster*². kite-flying (kīt'flī'ing), n. 1. The amusement of flying kites.—2. The practice of raising money or sustaining one's credit by means of accommodation bills or other fictitious commercial paper. Also called simply kiting.

kitefoot (kīt'fūt), n. A variety of the tobacco-plant: so called from its resemblance to a kite's foot.

kite-key (kīt'kē), n. The key or fruit of Fraxinus excelsior, the common ash of Great Britain. Also kitty-key. [Prov. Eng.]

kite-tailed (kīt'tāld), a. Having a long tail like a kite's: as, the kite-tailed widgeon, Dafila acuta, a duck, so called in Florida.

kite-wind (kīt'wind), n. A south and south-southwest wind in Siam, prevailing in the latter part of February and early March.

kit-fox (kīt'foks), n. The American corsak, or swift-fox, Vulpes velox, a small fox peculiar to western North America, where it lives in holes in the prairies. It has been noted and named for its swift-footedness, but this has been much exaggerated. It was called kit-fox by Lewis and Clarke, named Canis velox by Thomas Say in 1823, and called C. cinereo-argentatus by Richardson in 1829. It is scarcely half as large as the common fox, the length over all being only about 2½ feet, of which the tail is 1 foot. The color is a uniform pale reddish-yellow above, in winter paler grayish with silvery tips of the hairs; the under parts whitish, the upper lip and tip of the tail blackish. The pelage is very fine, with copious under-fur. This diminutive fox is closely related to Kit-fox (Vulpes velox).

Vulpes corsac of Asia, having no near relative among European or American foxes.

kith (kīth), n. [Formerly also dial. kif; < ME. kith, kyth, kitthe, kutthe, kuththe, cuththe, couththe, < AS. cjth, cjthth, cjththu, knowledge, acquaintance, relationship, kinship, native land (= OFries. kethe, kede = MD. kunde, koude, D. kunde = MLG. L.G. kunde, knowledge, nows, = OHG. cundida, chundida, knowledge, mark, contr. chunde, MHG. kunde, künde, knowledge, acquaintance, mark, native place, G. kunde, knowledge, news, = Icel. kygni, acquaintance, = Goth. kunthi, knowledge), < cūth, known; see couth.] 1†. knee-jerk (nē'jērk), n. A sudden jerking of the knee, caused by a contraction of the quadriceps femoris, evoked by a blow on the patellar tendon or in any way that gives the quadriceps a sudden tug. Also called patellar tendon reflex and knee-kick.

All the methods by which the knee-jerk may be obtained are merely different ways of giving the quadriceps muscle a twitch by bringing a sudden strain upon its tendon.
Amer. Jour. Psychol., I. 7.

Human Knee-joint.

knee-joint (nē'joint), n. 1. (a) The joint at the knee; the joint between the thigh and the lower leg; the articulation of the femur with either or both of the bones of the leg, the tibia and fibula. In man the knee-joint is formed by the articulation of the large external and internal condyles of the femur with the broad flattened top of the tibia (the fibula being excluded), covered in front by the kneecap or patella, a large sesamoid bone in the tendon of the extensor muscles. It is a ginglymus or hinge-joint, permitting complete flexion, limiting extension to a right line, and admitting in some positions of slight rotatory movement. As far as the bones are concerned, the knee-joint is one of the most open and insecure articulations in the body; but it is very strongly secured by its ligaments and tendons. These are, on the surface of the joint, a general capsular investment, particularly thick and strong behind, where it is known as the posterior ligament of Winslow, a structure preventing extension beyond a right line; the patellar ligament, that in which the kneecap is situated, and which is the extensor tendon of the muscles in front of the thigh, inserted into the tibia; the internal lateral ligament, chiefly derived from the tendon of the semi-membranosus muscle; and two external lateral ligaments, passing to the head of the fibula. Inside the joint are a pair of crucial ligaments, crossed like the letter X, passing from the femoral intercondylar notch to the head of the tibia. The nearly flat head of the tibia supports a pair, inner and outer, of semilunar interarticular fibrocartilages. These serve to deepen the depressions which receive the very convex condyles of the femur. These cartilages are interconnected by an anterior transverse ligament, and united to the inner surface of the capsular ligament by two coronary ligaments. The most extensive synovial membrane of the body is found in the knee-joint. Its processes, known as alar and meniscus ligaments, are not ligaments in a proper sense. There are several separate synovial bursae about the joint; it contains a quantity of fat beneath the patellar ligament, and is supplied by appropriate arteries, veins, nerves, and lymphatics. (b) Some joint likened to or mistaken for a knee: as, (1) the carpal articulation of the fore leg of various animals, as the horse; (2) the tarsal articulation of a bird's foot; the heel.—2. In mach., same as toggle-joint.

knee-jointed (nē'join'ted), a. Same as kneecap, 3.

knee-kick (nē'kik), n. Same as kneecap.

kneel (nēl), v. i.; pret. and pp. knelt or kneeled, ppr. kneeling. A lovely boy, stolen from an Indian king, . . .
And jealous Oberon would have the child
Knyght of his train, to trace the forests wild.
Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1, 25.

Specifically—3. In Europe during the middle ages, a person of noble birth trained to arms and chivalry, first as page and afterward as squire to the sovereign, or to some earl, baron, or other superior lord, to whom he attached himself, and whom he was bound to follow to war on horseback. Knights were of two grades: knyghts bachelors (or simple knyghts), received into the order with much ceremony and solemnity, in which the church had a large share; and knyghts bannerets, who were generally created on the field by their superior on account of some valorous action, and were entitled to display a square banner, and to hold higher commands, while the former could use only the pennon. In England, under the feudal system, a prerequisite was the ownership of a certain amount of land (called a knyght's fee), held of the king or of an earl or baron on a tenure which bound the holder to definite military service and other obligations. Although this form of tenure continued until the time of Charles II., the military service was early commuted for a money payment, and the holder of a knight's fee was no longer necessarily a knight. During the age of chivalry following the crusades, knights were bound by the highest obligations to chivalrous conduct, and were supposed to espouse the cause of the unfortunate, especially of women. See order of knighthood, under knighthood.

A Knyght ther was, and that a worthy man,
That from the tyme that he first bigan
To ryden out, he lovede chivalrye.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 43.

These two children kepte the Citee right wele, but knyghtes were the noon, for they were to yonge of age.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 238.

For that dangerous fight
The great Armenian King made noble Bevis Knyght.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 323.

"God make thee good as thou art beautiful,"
Said Arthur, when he dubb'd him knyght.
Tennyson, Holy Grail.

(Hence, with reference to the particular designations of medieval knights, humorous expressions like knyght of the cleaver (that is, a butcher), knyght of the pestle (an apothecary), knyght of the road (a highwayman), knyght of the shears (a tailor), etc.)

4. In Great Britain in modern times, a man upon whom a certain honorary dignity has been conferred by a sovereign as a reward of personal merit of some kind, without reference to birth or possessions, and in no way involving military service, which disappeared as a feature of knighthood with the other institutions of chivalry. In the British empire knighthood confers no privilege other than the social one of precedence next after baronets. Knights have the right to the title Sir prefixed to the Christian name, as Sir William Wallace; but neither the dignity nor the title is transmissible to heirs, as in the case of baronets (who as such are not knights, although they also have the title Sir). The wife of a knight has the legal designation of Dame, for which Lady is customarily substituted. Knights may still, as in medieval times, hold their rank either simply as individuals or as members of an order. (See order of knighthood, under knighthood.) Those of the latter class are now created only by royal letters patent; those of the former (knights bachelors) may be so created, but are often personally dubbed by the sovereign with the accolade. This ceremony of the accolade was formerly essential to the creation of all knights, whether by sovereign or feudal superior, and was commonly attended by elaborate observances.

And Helmshley, once proud Buckingham's delight, Slides to a scrivener or a city knyght.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 178.

5. A champion; a warrior; especially, a champion devoted to the service of another; a defender.

Pardon, Goddess of the night,
These that slew thy virgin knyght.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 3 (song).

In all your quarrels will I be your knyght.
This will I do, dear damsel, for your sake.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

6. One of the pieces in the game of chess, having usually the figure of a horse's head. Its move is a peculiar one—from the square it occupies to the opposite corner of any rectangle of two squares by three; and in so moving its course is not obstructed by any intervening or surrounding pieces. The number of squares it commands varies from eight when at least two squares separate it from any side of the board to two when it stands in a corner.

Strange game of chess! A King
That with her own pawns plays against a Queen. . . .
Ay; but this fine blue-blooded Courtenay seems Too princely for a pawn. Call him a Knyght,
That with an ass's, not a horse's head,
Skips every way. Tennyson, Queen Mary, i. 3.

7†. In card-playing, the knave or jack.
Abbreviated knt., or in combination K. (as K. G., Knight of the Garter; K. C. B., Knight Commander of the Bath).

Knight bachelor, a knight of the lowest order; now, in Great Britain, one who has been raised to the dignity of knighthood without being made a member of any titular order, such as that of the Bath or the Thistle.—Knight banneret. See banneret 2, 1.—Knight errant, an errant or wandering knight; a knight who traveled in search of adventures, for the purpose of exhibiting military skill, prowess, and generosity.

I have discover'd, not a stone's cast off,
An ancient castle, held by the old knight
Of the most holy order of the Bell,
Who gives to all knyghts-errant entertain.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 6.
Like a bold knyght-errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame.
Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.

To follow Fame Knyghts-Errant make Profession.
Congreve, Epil. to Southern's Oroonoko.

Knight marshal, formerly, an officer in the household of the British sovereign, having cognizance of transgressions within the royal household and verge, and of contracts made there when a member of the household was one of the parties. Also called marshal of the king's (or queen's) household.—Knight of the post. (a) An offender who has been "dubbed" at the whipping-post or pillory. Hence—(b) A hiring witness; one who gained his living by giving false evidence; a false bail; a sharper in general.

A knyght of the post, quoth he, for so I am teamed; a fellow that will swear you anything for twelve-pence.
Nashe, Pierce Penilesse.

On this account, all those whose fortune's crost,
And want estates, may turn knyghts of the post.
Fletcher, Poems, p. 258. (Hallivell.)

In Anne's time "Knyghts of the Post are to be had in the Temple Walks from Moring till Night, for two Pots of Belch, and a Sixpenny slice of Boil'd beef."
Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 142.

Knight of the road, a footpad; a highwayman.—Knight of the shears, a tailor; probably a pun on knyght of the shire.—Knight of the shire, the representative in Parliament of a county at large, as distinguished from the representatives of such cities and towns as are counties of themselves. [Eng.]—Knight of the square flag. See banneret 2, 1.—Knight's fee, the amount of land, varying from about two to about six hides, or twenty librates, with which a knight was invested on his creation, and which he held on condition of rendering homage, fealty, and forty days of military service each year; the holding sufficient to support a knight.—Knights of Christian Charity, an order founded by Henry IV. of France (1589-1610), the members of which were devoted to the care of invalid soldiers.—Knights of Constantine. See order.—Knights of Labor, the name assumed by the members of an association more fully styled the "Noble Order of the Knights of Labor," founded in the United States in 1869 for the protection of the interests of working people and the promotion of industrial and social education among the masses. It is a secret society, has a ritual, has numerous branches called "local assemblies," and is intended to include all kinds of skilled and unskilled labor. The chief executive officer is styled "General Master Workman."—Knights of Our Lady of Mount Carmel. See order.—Knights of Rhodes. See Hospitaler.—Knights of St. Bridget. See order.—Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. See Hospitaler.—Knights of the Band, an order founded by Alfonso XI., king of Castile, in the fourteenth century, for services against the Moors.—Knights of the Bath. See bath 1.—Knights of the chamber, formerly, such knights bachelors as were made in time of peace, in the king's chamber, and not in the field, as in time of war.—Knights of the Chase. Same as Knights of the Order of St. Hubert of Wurtemberg (which see, under order).—Knights of the Cordon Jaune. See order.—Knights of the Golden Circle, in U. S. hist., a name assumed by an organization formed in the Northern States by sympathizers with the South during the civil war.—Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, a military order established by Godfrey de Bouillon in 1099 to guard the sepulcher of Christ.—Knights of the Order of Christ. See order.—Knights of the Order of St. Crispin, a trades-union association of shoemakers.—Knights of the Round Table. See table.—Knights Templars. (a) See Templar 1. (b) A branch of the fraternity of Freemasons in the United States, with an organization based upon that of the medieval order of the same name.—Knight's tour, a series of moves of the chess knight carrying it to every square on the board once and once only.—Order of the Knights of Malta, a name sometimes given to the Order of the Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem. See Hospitaler.—Teutonic Knights. See Teutonic.—Windsor Knight, one of a body of military pensioners having their residence within the precincts of Windsor Castle. They are now called the Military Knights of Windsor, and sometimes Poor Knights of Windsor.

knight (nīt), v. t. [ME. knyghten (= MHG. knechten); from the noun: see knyght, n.] To dub or create a knight; confer the honor of knighthood upon. The ceremony is regularly performed by touching the person on whom the dignity is conferred with a sword as he kneels. See accolade, 1.

A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Cœur-de-Lion knyghted in the field.
Shak., K. John, i. 1, 54.

This drone, yet never brave attempt that dar'd, his emyes, and so dide Vter; but I may not telle alle they well dedis. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), I. 56.

Order of knighthood, an organized and duly constituted body of knights. The orders of knighthood are of two classes: they are either fraternities, possessing property and rights of their own as independent bodies, or merely honorary associations established by sovereigns within their respective dominions. To the former class belonged three celebrated monastic military orders founded during the crusades—the Knights Templars, Knights Hospitallers, and Teutonic Knights. The other class, consisting of orders merely titular, embraces most of the existing European orders, such as the Order of the Golden Fleece, the Order of the Holy Ghost, and the Order of St. Michael. The British orders are the Order of the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, St. Michael and St. George, the Star of India, and the Indian Empire. The various orders have each its appropriate insignia, which generally include a badge or jewel, a collar, a ribbon of a certain color, and a star. See bath, garter, order, star, thistle.

knighthood-errant (nit'hūd-er'ant), n. A body of knights errant. [Rare.]

I was first of all the kings who drew
The knighthood-errant of this realm and all
The realms together under me, their Head.
Tennyson, Guinevere.

knighthood-money†, n. In Eng. hist., a fine payable by persons who refused to accept the honor of knighthood.

He was fined in October, 1630, for refusing the honour of knighthood, a matter then lately brought up to obtain money for his majesties use. This money, which was paid by all persons of 40 l. per an. that refused to come in and be dub'd knights, was called knighthood-money.
Life of A. Wood (1642)

Knightia (ni'ti-ä), n. [NL. (Robert Brown, 1810), named after Thomas Andrew Knight, once president of the British Horticultural Society.] A genus of proteaceous plants of the tribe Embotriaceae, made by Reichenbach the type of his division Knightsia. They are trees or shrubs of New Zealand and New Caledonia, having sparse thick leaves and dense sessile racemes of flowers which are pedicellate in twos. The fruit is a hard, straight, or somewhat falcate pod. There are only three known species, one of which, K. excelsa, a native of New Zealand, is a lofty tree, the so-called New Zealand oak or rewa-rewa, the wood of which is prized for its mottled red and brown color, rendering it suitable for ornamental work and furniture. It also splits readily. The tree is sometimes cultivated as an ornamental shade-tree. The remaining two species are small trees of New Caledonia, differing in some important respects from the New Zealand type.

Knightiae (ni-ti'ä-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1828), < Knightia + -ae.] A division of the Proteaceae, now included in the tribe Embotriaceae.

That hast with knightslest gulle, and trecherous train, Faire knighthood fowly shamed. Spenser, F. Q., I. vi. 41.

knighthood (nit'li-nes), n. The character or quality of being knighly.

He whilome some gentle swaine had bene,
Trained up in feats of armes and knighthood.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. vii. 45.

knighly (nit'li), a. [< ME. knighly, knighly, knighly, < AS. cnihtlic, boyish, youthful (= D. knechteljik, servile), < cniht, a boy: see knight and -ly.] Of or pertaining to a knight or knights; befitting a knight; chivalrous: as, a knighly combat.

A gentle knight, was worthy and uallant,
Which in knighly werke neuer gan to fall.
Ann. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), I. 5744.

I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knighly trial.
Shak., Rich. II., I. 1, 81.

knighly (nit'li), adv. [< knighly, a.] In a manner like or becoming a knight; chivalrously.

Say who thou art,
And why thou com'st thus knighly clad in arms.
Shak., Rich. II., I. 3, 12.

knight-service (nit'sér'vis), n. The service due to the English crown as the condition of holding land. This was ordinarily a military service for forty days in each year at the pleasure of the sovereign, but it was commuted on occasion in such a way that of every three knights one should serve for a threefold term, the others adding to equip him.

knightship (nit'ship), n. [< ME. knihtshipe, cnihtseipe; < knight + -ship.] The state of being a knight; knighthood. [Rare.]

With white sendal in syght seemely too knowe, Absaunders of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), I. 544.

knill†, v. An obsolete variant of knell.

knip†, v. An obsolete and more original form of nip.

Kniphofia (nip-hó'fi-ä), n. [NL. (Moench, 1794), named after Johann Hieronymus Kniphof of Erfurt, professor of anatomy, surgery, and botany.] A genus of large and showy liliaceous plants of the tribe Hamocallaeae, having long, narrow leaves and reflexed spiked flowers with a narrow tubular perianth, short lobes, and hypogynous stamens. The dense racemes or spikes of yellow or scarlet flowers are borne at the summit of tall, simple, leafless scapes, and are very showy and handsome. There are about 20 species, growing in South Africa and Madagascar. Several of these are in cultivation as hardy plants, and are very effective in lawns or in front of shrubbery. Among these, K. burchellii, K. aurea, and K. recurvata are perhaps the best known, and are called torch-lilies. K. aloides is called the queen's lily, and in the West Indies it goes by the name of red-hot poker plant. These plants are best known to florists under the name Tritoma, which has given way to the older name Kniphofia, under the rule of priority.

knipperkin†, n. An obsolete form of nipperkin. D'Urfey.

knit (nit', v.; pret. and pp. knitted (in literal use) or knit, ppr. knitting). [< ME. knitten, knytten, knetten, knutten, < AS. cnyttan, cnyttan (= LG. kniitten, knutten = Icef. knyta, knyfta = Dan. knytte = Sw. knyta), knit, knot, form into a knot, < cnotta, a knot: see knot.] I. trans. 1. To tie together; tie with a knot; fasten by tying; join by making into or as into a knot or knots. [Now chiefly poetical.]

All the company enclinet, casyn to ship;
Cachyn in cables, knit vp her ances.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 4617.

V for I, in wryt is set.
Cryst for vs on croys was knit.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 249.

And [he] saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel de-

A knitting cup there must be.
E. Jonson, Magnetic Lady, iv. 1.

knitting-machine (nit'ing-ma-shēn'), n. A hand- or power-machine for knitting. Such machines employ barbed or hooked needles, having some form of latching device for catching the thread and drawing it through a loop previously made in the same thread, and throwing it off at the right moment. It is the use of these needles and of a single thread that distinguishes a knitting-machine from a loom, a braider, or a netting-machine. Hand-knitters by machinery for domestic use employ either a series of needles laid flat in a frame or a ring of upright needles placed in the periphery of a cylinder. By the use of various attachments these machines can make hollow or flat knitted fabrics, plain, ribbed, etc. The power-machines are essentially the same as the hand-machines, except that, being larger, they knit wider fabrics. There is also a single-needle hand knitting-machine.

knitting-needle (nit'ing-nē'dl), n. An instrument used for knitting. Knitting-needles for hand-work are straight, slender rods, usually of steel, with rounded ends; two or more are used at once. See knitting-machine.

knitting-pin (nit'ing-pin), n. A small bar or rod used for knitting, having a button at one end. It is made of ivory, bone, gutta-percha, wood, etc., and is used to pairs for knitting large work, such as shawls.

knitting-sheath (nit'ing-shēth), n. A cylindrical sheath arranged so as to be secured to the dress of a knitter, and intended to support one of the knitting-needles while in use. Also called knitting-case.

knitting-stick (nit'ing-stik), n. A form of the knitting-sheath in which the sheath of wood or similar material is prolonged so as to be passed through the belt or otherwise secured for the convenience of the knitter.

knitting-work (nit'ing-wērk), n. 1. The occupation of knitting.—2. A piece of knitting, with needles, ball of yarn, etc. Hence—3. Any occupation for the hands which leaves the mind unemployed and permits conversation. [U. S.]

knittle (nit'l), n. [Dim. of knit, n.; or < knittle*, a supposed freq. of knit, v.] 1. A string that gathers or draws together a purse, a bag, or the like; a shirring-string.—2. Naut.: (a) A kind of small line made of rope-yarns twisted together, used for seizings or for hammock-ropes. Formerly robbers for bending sails and reef-points were sometimes made in this way.

The reef enwrap'd, the inserted knittles ty'd.
Falconer, Shipwreck, ii.

(b) pl. The halves of two adjoining yarns in a rope, twisted up together for pointing or grafting. Also written knittles.

knives, n. Plural of knife.

knob (nob), n. [Also sometimes spelled nob, formerly nobbe; also in var. form knub, nub (see nub); < ME. knobbe (= MLG. knobbe, LG. knobbe, knubbe), a knob, a var. of knop, q. v.] A rounded projection; a protuberance; a bunch; a knob.

He [the Pilgrime] had a long staffe in his hand with a nobbe in the middle.
Coryat, Crudities, i. 20.

(a) A fleshy protuberance; a pimple.

The knobbes sitting on his cheeks.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 633.

(b) A rounded projection forming the termination of something, as of a staff; specifically, the more or less ball-shaped part of the handle for a door, drawer, or the like.

One or more Besides march first, each carrying a long Staff, at the End of which is a great Apple or Knob of Silver.

Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [l. 57.]

My lock, with no knob to it, looked as if it wanted to be wound up.
Dickens, Bleak House, iv.

(c) A prominent isolated hill; a hill generally: same as mound in Wisconsin and Iowa, and butte in the Cordilleran region. [Southern and western U. S.] (d) In entom., a dilated outer portion of a part. Specifically—(1) An expanded apical portion of an insect's antenna, as in a butterfly. (2) In Diptera, the capitulum or outer portion of the halter or balancer. (3) The distended outer portion of a fly's proboscis. (e) In a cannon, the spherical part at the rear end of the piece, forming the opposite extremity to the muzzle: it is a part of the cascabel. The slightest knosp or pinnacle.
Scott, Marmion, v., Int.

knot¹ (not), n. [< ME. knotte, < AS. enotta = D. knót = MHG. knote; cf. OHG. chnodo, chnoto, MHG. knode, knote, G. knoten = Icel. knútr (for knutr*?) = Dan. knude = Sw. knut, a knot; prob. = L. nodus (for gnodus*), a knot (> E. node, q. v.), these kindred forms being somewhat complicated.

Hence knit, and, through Russ. from Icel., knout.] 1. An interlacement of parts of a cord, rope, or any flexible strip, formed by twisting the ends about each other, and then drawing tight the loops thus formed; also, a similar interlacing of two or more cords, threads, etc.; a bunch of threads or thread-like things entangled together.

a, bowline-knot; b, figure-of-eight knot.

Bind up this hair
In any simple knot. Shelley, The Cenci, v. 4.

Specifically—2. A piece of ribbon, lace, or the like folded or tied upon itself in some particular form, used as an ornamental adjunct to a costume, or to a sword, a cane, etc.: as, a knot of ribbon; a breast-knot; a shoulder-knot.—3. Something resembling a knot in its complication, its protuberance, or its rounded form.

John was new making several kinds of poppies and field-flowers to make her a present of knots for the day.
Gag, Letter, quoted in Thackeray's English Humourists.

The Queen, who sat
With lips severely placid, felt the knot
Climb in her throat, and with her feet unseen Crush'd the wild passion out against the floor.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

(a) The hard, cross-grained mass of wood formed in a trunk at the insertion of a branch; particularly, the round, gnarly formation resulting from a branch being broken off and the tissues growing around its stump. This stump often decays, or falls out in cutting, leaving a knot-hole.

As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Shak., T. and C., I, 3, 7.

(b) A node in a stem, or any node-like expansion in a stem, pod, etc.

The canes of Egypt, when they newly arise from their bed of mud and slime of Nilus, start up into an equal and continual length, and are interrupted but with few knots.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I, 838.

(c) An excrescence on a trunk or root; a gnarl or knur. (d) A tuft, as of grass. (e) A flower-bud.

It [the citron-tree] bore some ripe ones, and some sour ones, some in the knot, and some in the blossom altogether.
Ep. Hackett, Abp. Williams, II, 88.

(f) In lithol., a small concretion or aggregation of mineral matter, or imperfectly developed crystal, found occasionally in schistose rocks, appearing to be the result of contact metamorphism. Knots of this kind sometimes occur crowded together in large numbers, so as to give a knotty appearance to what otherwise would be a quite smooth slaty surface. Such slate is called knotted slate or schist (in German knottenschiefer). The knots are sometimes simply segregations of ferruginous material around a small fragment of the slate; sometimes more or less distinctly formed crystals, andalustite being the most common mineral thus occurring. This peculiar formation is well shown in the eastern Vosges and in the lake district of England. (g) In mech., same as knot. (h) In arch., same as knob. (i) In brush-making, a tuft of bristles ready to be fastened into a hole in the stock. (j) In anat., a ganglion; a node; a plexus. (k) A defect in flint-glass, consisting of an opaque particle of earthy matter from the furnace, or abraded from the glass-pot, or a particle of glass-gall, or an imperfectly vitrified grain of sand. (l) In phys. geog., an elevated and plateau-like region where several great chains of mountains unite: a term little used by geographers except in describing parts of the chain of the Andes.

The Knot of Pasco, a great ganglion, as it were, of the system [of the Andes].

Sir J. Herschel, Physical Geography, p. 130.

(n) Naut.: (1) A division of the log-line, so called from the series of pieces of string stuck through the strands and knotted at equal distances on the line, being the space between any consecutive two of such knots. When the 28-second glass is used, the length of the knot is 47.3 feet. See log. (2) A nautical mile. The length of a sea-mile varies with the latitude, according to some authorities; but the United States Hydrographic Office and United States Coast Survey have adopted 6,080.27 feet as its constant length, the English Admiralty 6,080 feet. See mile.

In order to remove all uncertainty and to introduce uniformity, this office adopted, several years ago, the value which results from considering the nautical mile as equal to the one sixtieth part of the length of a degree on the great circle of a sphere whose surface is equal to the surface of the earth. This value, computed on Clarke's spheroid, is: One nautical mile = 1853.248 metres = 6080.27 feet, a value which corresponds to the adopted length of the Admiralty Knot = 6080 feet.

Report U. S. Coast and Geod. Survey, 1831, p. 354.

(n) In geom., a universal curve in three-dimensional space, which, upon being brought into a plane by any process of distortion whatever without the crossing of one part through another (that is, without passing through a nodal form), will always have nodes or crossings. A knot differs from a link in being unicursal, while a linking consists of two curves or ovals in space, which, after being brought into a plane by the above process, are always crossed the one with the other; a linking consists of three which are similarly joined together, independently of any linking of pairs of them. An amphichiral knot is one which is its own perversion—that is, whose image in a mirror does not differ from the knot itself in respect to right- or left-handedness. (o) In Essex, England, eighty rounds of the reel of baize, wool, or yarn. (p) In her., a piece or two or knot² (not), n. [Also gnat, and dial. knat, knēt; said to be "named after King Canute [AS. Cnūt], who was very fond of it"; but no connecting ME. form appears, and if it existed it would give a mod. form (see knoutberry); there is no evidence that Canute was very fond of this bird, and no probability that so common a bird would be named after a particular person.] 1. The robin-snipe; the red-breasted or gray-backed sandpiper, Tringa canutus, a bird of the snipe family, Scelopacidae. It breeds within the arctic circle, and at other seasons than the summer is dispersed along most of the sea-coasts of the world. The knot is 10½ inches long, and 20½ inches in extent of wings. In summer the under parts are brownish-red; in winter, white. The upper parts of the adult are brownish-black, varied with tawny and white. The young are ashy above, varied with white, and with dark edgings of individual feathers. The knot usually goes in flocks, like other small waders, and when it is fat its flesh is delicious.

How evil an historian see you, that leave out the chief knot of all the discourse. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, II.

As soon as we come to 8 folds we have some knots which may preserve their knottiness even when this condition [taking the crossings alternately over and under] is not fulfilled. These ought, therefore, to be regarded as proper knots and to be included in the census as new and distinct types. This is a difficulty of a very formidable order. It depends upon the property which I have called knottfulness. Tait, Trans. Roy. Soc. of Edin., XXXII. III. 504.

knot-grass (not'grās), n. 1. A weed of almost world-wide distribution, Polygonum ariculare: so called from the numerous nodes in its stems and its thickly spreading habit. It is a tough trailing and branching plant, common in trodden ground, and often carpeting dooryards, etc. (Also called knott-weed, goose-grass, cow-grass, doorweed, etc.) An infusion of it was formerly supposed to retard bodily growth, whence Shakespeare calls it "hinderer knot-grass."

Get you gone, you dwarf! You minnows, of hinderer knot-grass made. Shak., M. N. D., III. 2, 329.

We want a boy extremely for this function Kept under for a year with milk and knotgrass. Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, II.

knowlechet, n. and v. A Middle English form of knowledge.

knowledge (nol'ej), n. [ME. knowlege, knowleche, knowleche, knowliche, knolych, knowlage, knowlache, knowlage, knowlache, etc., knowledge, < known, know, + -leche, assimilated form of -leke, < Icel. -leikr, -leiki = Sw. -lek, a suffix used to form abstract nouns, = AS. -lāc, in vedlāc, wedlock, prob. identical with lāc, play, gift: see *lake*², *lake*⁴. The term -leche became assimilated, through -lache, to the suffix -age.] 1. The state of being or of having become aware of fact or truth; intellectual recognition of or acquaintance with fact or truth; the condition of knowing. Subjectively considered, knowledge implies clear conviction or a consciousness of certainty; but this consciousness does not constitute knowledge, and may be associated with error.

Knowledge is the perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas.
Locke, Human Understanding, IV. i. 2.

The essentials of Cognition, or Knowledge, may be summed up thus:—First. To know any single thing, we must be conscious of it as Differing from some things, and as Agreeing with other things. To this extent knowledge involves only what belongs to Sensation and Perception. Secondly. When Knowledge amounts to Affirmation there are usually at least two things taken notice of: and not only so, but the couple must be farther viewed, as coming under a third property, namely one of the Universal Predicates of Propositions—for example, Co-existence or Succession. "The sun is a luminous body," "night follows day"—are higher combinations than the mere knowledge of "Sun," "Night," "Day"; they unite simple or elementary cognitions into affirmations or propositions; and the binding circumstance is one of the comprehensive generalities called Co-existence and Succession. Thirdly. Into these Affirmations there must enter the active state or disposition termed Belief (or Disbelief).

A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 592.

We have but faith; we cannot know;
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it comes from thee,
A beam in darkness; let it grow.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, Int.

With that certainty which is absolutely objective, i. e. with knowledge, psychology has no direct concern; it is for logic to furnish the criteria by which knowledge is ascertained.
J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 83.

2. A perception, judgment, or idea which is in accord with fact or truth; that which is known.

"Not all," quod she, "madame, that may not be;
ffor yet I haue no knowledge whiche he is."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), I. 730.

I'll make this new report to be my knowledge;
I'll say I know it; nay, I'll swear I saw it.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, III. 1.

All government of action is to be gotten by knowledge, and knowledge best, by gathering many knowledges.
Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

For knowledges are as pyramides, whereof history is the basis: so of Natural Philosophy the basis is Natural History; the stage next the basis is Physic; the stage next the vertical point is Metaphysic.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II.

This knowledge of the cause of a phenomenon is different from . . . the knowledge of that phenomenon simply as a fact; and these two cognitions or knowledges have, accordingly, received different names. The latter . . . is called historical or empirical knowledge; the former is called philosophical, or scientific, or rational knowledge.
Sir W. Hamiltan, Metaph., III.

3. Acquaintance with things ascertained or ascertainable; acquired information; learning.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., IV. 7, 79.

I think by far the most important bill in our whole code is that for the diffusion of knowledge among the people.
Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 45.

4. Practical understanding; familiarity gained by actual experience; acquaintance with any fact or person: as, a knowledge of seamanship; I have no knowledge of the man.

Thys is gret meruell
That ye take a wif vnknow what is sche,
Neither haue knowlich of hir gouernail,
Ne of hir kinrede; strange is without fail!
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), I. 844.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge.
Sir P. Sidney.

Huram sent him by the hands of his servants ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea. 2 Chron. viii. 18.

This gentleman 's a stranger to my knowledge;
And, no doubt, sir, a worthy man.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, III. 1.

The wisest of Pagan Philosophers said that the greatest Learning was the Knowledge of one's self.
Howell, Letters, II. 77.

5. Specific information; notification; advertisement.

Knowltonia (nɒl-tɒn-i-ə), n. [NL. (R. A. Salisbury, 1796), named after Thomas Knowlton, once curator of the Botanic Garden at Eltham.] A genus of ranunculaceae plants, of the tribe Anemoneae, closely related botanically to Adonis and Anemone, but differing from both in its berry-like carpels. The 5 or 6 species are South African perennial herbs with the habit of the Umbelliferae, having rigid root-leaves ternately decomposed, those of the stem often reduced to bracts or wanting, and greenish or yellowish flowers on irregularly umbellate peduncles. They are acrid plants, and their property of producing blisters has long been known. The bruised leaves are used at the Cape of Good Hope as a substitute for cantharides. The sliced root is said to be still more powerful. Reichenbach made this genus the type of a subgenus of the Anemoneae.

Knowltonia (nɒl-tɒn-i-ə), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1837), < Knowltonia + -ae.] A sub-section of the Ranunculaceae-Anemoneae, typified by the genus Knowltonia.

An elaborate code of signals and passwords was adopted, and all operations of the "Americans" were wrapped in profound secrecy. If a member of the order was asked about its practices or purposes, he answered that he knew nothing about them, and "Americans" for that reason, soon came to be called Know Nothings.
T. W. Barnes, Thurlow Weed, p. 224.

II. a. Very ignorant.

Their knowing and know-nothing books are scatter'd from hand to hand. Tennyson, Despair.

Know-nothingism (nɒ'nuθ'ing-izm), n. [< Know-nothing, 2, + -ism.] The doctrines or principles of the Know-nothings.

Know-Nothingism was, therefore, something more than a lamentable aberration; the republic was seriously menaced by it, and it violently shook one of its main pillars.
H. von Holst, Const. Hist. (trans.), p. 105.

knowperts (nɒ'pɜrts), n. [Perhaps for knowpwort; cf. knapperts.] The crowberry, Empetrum nigrum. See crowberry. [Scotch.]

Be rived in sunder.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II, iv. 2.

knurned, a. [ME. cnurned, knorned; < knurn*, knorn* (appar. equiv. to knurl, < knur), + -ed.] Knotty; knobby; gnarled.

He . . . sege no synge of resette . . .
Bot lyge boukkez & brenz, vpon bothe halue, & ruge knokied knarrez, with knorned stoncz.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2166.

knurr, n. See knur.

knurred (nér'd), a. [knur + -ed.] Knotted or studded. Davies.

Three gates of warfare wyl then bee manncied hardly With steels bunch chayne knob clingd, knurd and nar-roie lincked.
Stanikurst, Æneid, l. 231.

knurry (nér'i), a. [knur + -y.] Full of knurs or knots; gnarly.

And as (with vs) vnder the Oaked barke
The knurry knot with branching veines we marke
To be of substance all one with the Tree.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 4.

Now I am like the knurry-bulked oak.
Drayton, Shepherd's Garland.

ko, v. i. An obsolete or dialectal contraction of quoth.

koa (kō'ā), n. [Hawaiian.] A common and very valuable forest-tree of the Sandwich Islands, Acacia Koa. Its wood is excellent for fuel and for construction, and especially for fine cabinet-work, its polished surface being handsomely marked with wavy lines. It is much used for veneers. The bark is employed for tanning.

koala (kō-ā'ā), n. [Also coala; native Australian.] A marsupial mammal of Australia, Phascolarctos cinereus. It is related to the wombats and phalangers, but is now commonly placed in another family, Phascoractidae. It is an arboreal animal, whose general aspect recalls both the sloths and the bears. The form is stout and clumsy, with no visible tail, a short snout, bushy ears, thick woolly pelage, and feet formed like hands for grasping limbs of trees. In the fore foot two of the digits oppose the other three, and in the hind the inner toe serves for a thumb. The fur is ashy-gray. The koala has one cub at a time, which is carried about by the parent for a while after leaving the pouch. The animal feeds on leaves and twigs of trees. The natives pursue it in the trees, where it is despatched with a club, or shaken off a branch to be killed or disabled by the fall. Also called native sloth, native bear, and kangaroo-bear.

kob (kob), n. [African. Hence NL. Kobus, koba.] An African antelope of the genus Kobus; a water-antelope, of which there are several distinct species known by different names. The sing-sing, Antelope koba or Kobus sing-sing, is a large species of western Africa, reddish-brown above and white below, with annulated horns forming together a lyre-shaped figure. The water-buck, K. ellipsiprymnus, is a large animal of southern and eastern Africa, of a brown color, with a white ellipse on the rump. It stands 12 or 13 hands high, and has horns 2 feet or more in length. Other kobs are the leche-antelope, K. leche; the pookoo, K. vardoni; and the musnu, K. leucotis. See Kobus, 1.

koba (kō'ā), n. Same as kob.

kobalt, n. See cobalt.

kobang, koban (kō'bang), n. [Jap., lit. 'small division,' < ko, little, + ban (= Chin. fan), a cutting or division.] An oblong gold coin with rounded corners, formerly current in Japan. It was about 2 inches long and 1 1/2 inches broad, weighed originally about 200 grains troy, and was consequently worth from 15 to 16 bu, though in the early days of foreign trade with Japan it was valued at only 4 bu (equivalent to one ryo or ounce of silver). This unfavorable rate of exchange having almost drained the country of its gold, the government became alarmed, and after adopting several palliative measures ultimately reduced the weight of the kobang to 51 grains troy, with an average fineness of 0.650. Also spelled cobang. Compare obang.

kobaoba (kō-ba-ō'ā), n. [African.] The long-horned white rhinoceros of Africa, Rhinoceros (Ateolodus) simus.

kobellite (kō'bel-it), n. [After Franz von Kobell, a German mineralogist and poet (1803-82).] A mineral of a blackish lead-gray or steel-gray color. It is a sulphid of antimony, bismuth, and lead.

kobold (kō'bold), n. [= D. kobold = Sw. Dan. kobolt, < G. kobold, < MHG. kobolt, a spirit of the hearth, a fairy, goblin; perhaps < MHG. kobe, G. koben, a room, cabin (= AS. cofa, E. cove), + -wald (reduced to -olt, -old, as in herold = E. herald) (= AS. -wald, ruler, < walten, wield, rule; the sense being equiv. to AS. cofgod, in pl. cofgodas, lares, penates, household gods—a word containing the same initial element (E. cove).] Less prob. < ML. cobalus, a goblin, demon, < Gr. κόβαλος, an impudent rogue; see goblin. Hence prob. cobalt, q. v.] In Germany, an elemental spirit, or nature-spirit of the earth, corresponding to this element as undines, sylphs, and salamanders respectively correspond to water, air, and fire; a gnome or goblin. Kobolds are supposed to inhabit mines and other underground places. When regarded as present in houses, the kobold is more frequently called a poltergeist ('racket-sprite'), in allusion to its mischievous pranks.

Kobresia (kō-brē'si-ā), n. [NL. (Willdenow, 1805), named after Von Kobresia of Augsburg, who collected a rich cabinet of natural history which was purchased by King Ludwig of Bavaria.] A genus of glumaceous plants of the natural order Cyperaceae, tribe Sclerieae, type of an old division Kobresieae. It differs from Scleria in having the spikelets always disposed in a terminal spike and the leaves frequently cespitose at the base of the stem. Eight species have been recognized, which should probably be reduced to three or four, inhabiting the northern and mountainous parts of Europe and Asia. They are low cespitose perennials with grass-like leaves and often leafless scapes, closely resembling sedges.

Kobresia (kō-brē'si-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Lestibondo, 1819), < Kobresia + -ae.] A division of the Cyperaceae including, besides Kobresia, a number of old genera (Elyna, Catagyna, Opetiola, Diaphora, etc.), most of which are now embraced in Scleria, Kobresia, or Eriospora, that is, in the tribe Sclerieae, but some belong to Cyperus and other genera not included in that tribe.

Kobus (kō'bus), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1846), < kob, q. v.] 1. A genus of African antelopes of the family Bovidae, subfamily Antelopinae, forming part of a small group sometimes named Cervicaprinae; the water-bucks. It includes a number of water-antelopes called kobs. Cervicapra is a synonym.—2. [l. c.] An antelope of the genus Kobus; a kob.

Kochia (kō'ki-ā), n. [NL. (Roth, 1799), named after W. D. J. Koch, director of the Botanical Garden at Erlangen.] A genus of chenopodiaceous plants of the tribe Chenoleae, characterized by a turbinate perianth, the lobes broadly winged in the fertile flowers. About 30 species are known, inhabiting central Europe, temperate Asia, northern and southern Africa, and Australia, besides a single species in India and another in western North America. They are herbs, often woody at the base, with alternate entire leaves and inconspicuous flowers, some of which are hermaphrodite, others entirely female, the fertile expanding into horizontal wings in the fruit. Two Australian species, K. aphylla and K. sedifolia, are evergreen shrubs 2 to 3 feet high, and are cultivated under the name of broom-cypress. Other Australian species, K. eriantha, K. pubescens, and K. villosa, are valuable fodder-plants in the arid regions of that continent. The last-named is called the cotton-bush on account of its downy adventitious excrescences, and is highly valued. The American species, K. prostrata, partakes of this quality, and affords excellent winter grazing in the west when no grass can be obtained; in common with another related plant, Eurotia lanata, it there receives the name of white sage.

Kochia (kō'ki-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Kochia + -ae.] In Endlicher's botanical system, a subtribe of the tribe Chenopodieae, order Chenopodaceae, characterized by the absence of floral bracts, and embracing 13 genera, a number of which are now regarded as synonyms, and those still retained fall under several of the modern tribal divisions. One of these genera, Cryptocarpus, is excluded from the order entirely and referred to the Nyctagineae.

kodt, v. i. An obsolete variant of quoth.

"Y well queyt the," kod the screeff.
Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 28).

koel (kō'el), n. [Hind. koyal, kōlā, Prakrit koelo, < Skt. kōkila, cuckoo; see cuckoo.] A cuckoo of the genus Eudynamis, as the Indian koel, E. orientalis. Also koil, kuil.

Koeleria (kē-lē'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Persoon, 1805), named after Georg Ludwig Köler, professor at Mainz, and author of a work on grasses.] A genus of grasses falling within the tribe Festuceae or fescue family, and the subtribe Eragrostae, distinguished by a spike-like cylindrical or somewhat interrupted panicle, and more or less hyaline-scarious flowering glumes. They are annual or perennial caespitose grasses with narrow flat or almost setaceous leaves. There are 15 species, chiefly natives of Europe, temperate Asia, and northern Africa, but a few occur in other parts of the world, notably one species, K. cristata, in North America and also in South Africa, as well as in Europe and elsewhere. This widely distributed species is a valuable "bunch-grass" of the arid regions of western America. The closely allied K. glauca of Australia can be sown to advantage on coast-land.

Koelreuteria (kel-rō-tē'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Laxmann, 1770), named after Joseph Gottlieb Köelreuter, professor of natural history at Carlsruhe.] A genus of ornamental Chinese trees with bladder-like fruit, belonging to the natural order Sapindaceae, and type of Radlkofer's tribe Koelreutericae, distinguished by its 5 valvate sepals, 3 to 4 spreading petals, inflated loculicidal capsule, pinnate leaves, and ample, terminal, many-flowered, branching panicles of yellow flowers. Two species are now recognized, one of which, K. paniculata, a small tree with coarsely toothed leaflets a, perfect flower; b, male flower; c, fruit cut longitudinally, showing two seeds.

and large bladder-like pods, is extensively planted in parks in both Europe and America, where it is hardy, and very handsome in leaf, flower, and fruit.

Koelreuteria (kel-rō-tē'ri-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Radlkofer, 1888), < Koelreuteria + -ae.] A tribe of plants of the order Sapindaceae, typified by the genus Koelreuteria, and embracing in addition the genera Stocksia and Erythrophyssa.

Koenigia (kē-nij'i-ā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1767), named after Johann Gerhard König, a pupil of Linnæus, and later a traveler and collector of plants.] A genus of polygonaceous plants, type of the tribe Koenigieae, being delicate dwarf herbs with hyaline bracts, small obovate entire leaves, and minute flowers, chiefly fasciated among the upper leaves, the lobes of the perianth and stamens generally three. Two very closely allied species, perhaps only varieties of one, occur, the one widely distributed throughout the arctic and subarctic regions, the other confined to the Himalaya mountains.

Koenigieae (kē-nij'i-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1880), < Koenigia + -eae.] A tribe of plants of the order Polygonaceae, of which Koenigia is the type. They are low herbs with dichotomous inflorescence, the flowers capitate or densely fasciated in the forks. It embraces besides Koenigia four other genera, all natives of California, one of which is also found in Chitt.

kof, a. Same as cof.

koff (kof), n. [D. kof, a two-masted vessel.] A small Dutch sailing vessel.

koffle, n. See caffle.

koftgar (kof'tgär), n. [Hind.: see koftgari.] In India, an inlayer of steel with gold. See koftgari.

koftgari (kof'tgä-ri), n. [Hind. koftgari, < kofta, pounded, + -gari, doing, making, < -gar, doer.] Inlaid East Indian metal-work in steel and gold; a variety of damaskeening. The pattern is drawn out on the surface of the steel, and a wire of soft pure gold is hammered in. The chief center of the art is Gujerat in the Panjab. Also called koft or kuft-work.

koft-work (kof'twërk), n. Same as koftgari. Art Jour., 1884, p. 198.

Kogia (kō'ji-ā), n. [NL.] A genus of pygmy sperm-whales, of the subfamily Physeterinae, and family Physeteridae. They have from 9 to 12 lower teeth, and 2 rudimentary upper teeth, or none; the symphysis menti less than half the length of the jaw; the cervical vertebrae ankylosed; and 7 cervical, 13 or 14 dorsal, and 30 to 50 or 51 lumbar and caudal vertebrae. Several nominal species, from 7 to 10 feet long, are described, but not satisfactorily distinguished from K. brevirostris of southern seas.

Kohathite (kō'hath-it), n. [< Kohath (see def.) + *-ite*².] In Jewish hist., a descendant of Kohath, the second son of Levi. The Kohathites were one of the three great families of the Levites (Num. iii. 17-37), and had charge of bearing the ark and its furniture in the march through the wilderness.

kohl (kōl), n. [Also kuhl; Ar. kohl: see alcohol.] A powder used in the East from time immemorial in the toilet, to darken the orbits of the eyes, etc., properly consisting of finely comminuted antimony.

Kohl is also prepared of the smoke-black produced by burning the shells of almonds.

E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, I. 41.

Eyes pencilled with kohl seen larger and more oblong.

R. F. Burton, tr. of Arabian Nights, VII. 250, note.

kohlrahi (kōl-rā'bi), n. [< G. kohlrabi, kohlrabe, formerly kolrabi, after It. carolo rapa: see cole-rape. The G. form kohlrabi simulates the It. pl. caroli rapa, or the L. rabi, gen. of rapum. The plant is also called in pure G. kohlräbe, < kohl (< L. caulis), cabbage, + rübe, = L. rapum, turnip.] The turnip-stemmed cabbage, or turnip cabbage, Brassica oleracea, var. gongyloides (caulo-rapa). It is a frequently cultivated variety of the cabbage-plant, in which the stem above the ground swells into a large bulb-like formation which serves the purposes of a turnip, resembling in quality the Swedish variety, or rutabaga.

koiianaglyphic, a. Same as calanaglyphic.
koiolon (koi'lon), n. [< Gr. kōilon, neut. of kōilos, hollow: see caeliac, etc., carel.] In the anc. Gr. theater, the auditorium; the caeua. See cuts under caeva and diazoma.

kok¹, n. A Middle English form of *cock*¹.
kok², v. and n. A Middle English form of *cook*¹.
kok³ (kok), n. An Indian rat, Mus kok.

kokako (kō-kā'kō), n. [Native New Zealand name.] The New Zealand wattle-crow, Calliastur or Glaucopsis cinerea. See Glaucopsis.

kokil (kō'kil), n. [Skt. kokita, Hind. koklā: see koel, cuckoo.] A large green-billed cuckoo of India, Zanclus tristicus. Also called mal-koha.

kokoket, n. An obsolete form of cuckoo.
kokoon (kō-kōn'), n. A tree of the genus Koona.

Koona (kō-kō'nā), n. [NL. (Thwaites, 1853), from the Cingalese name of the species that grows in Ceylon.] A genus of large tropical trees growing on the islands of Ceylon and Borneo, belonging to the polypetalous order Celastrineae, distinguished from related genera by a 3-celled ovary and winged seeds destitute of aril or albumen. These trees have a yellow bark, opposite coriaceous leaves, and small yellowish-lurid flowers with twisted petals, arranged in axillary paniced cymes. The fruit is a 3-sided and 3-celled capsule, 1 to 3 inches long. K. Zeylanica, the kokoon or koona-tree of Ceylon, is used by the inhabitants, who make a kind of snuff from the bark for the cure of headache, and express an oil from the seeds which they burn in lamps. The only other species is a native of Borneo, and is little known.

kokra-wood (kōk'rā-wūd), n. Same as coco-wood, 1.

kokum-butter, kokum-oil, n. See cocum-butter.
kokwoldt, n. A Middle English form of *cuckold*¹.
kola-nut, kolla-nut, n. See cola-nut.

Kolarian (kō-lā'ri-an), a. [< Kōli + -arian.] Relating to the Kōlis and kindred tribes, regarded as an aboriginal race in India, older than both Dravidian and Aryan.

Koli (kō'li), n. [Hind.: see coolie.] A member of an aboriginal tribe in the hills of central India, whither they were driven by the early Aryan settlers. They are scattered widely, as cultivators and laborers, throughout southern India, but have preserved their original language, customs, and superstitions. See coolie.

kolinsky (kō-lin'ski), n. The chorok, red sable, or Siberian mink, Putorius sibiricus, about 15 inches long, with a bushy tail 8 or 10 inches long, the fur uniformly buff or tawny, somewhat paler below, varied with black and white on the head. The fur is known as Tatar sable; it is usually dyed to imitate other kinds. The tail is used for artists' pencils. The Tatar name is kulon.

kolloxylene (kō-lōk'si-lin), n. Guncotton. Eissler, Mod. High Explosives, p. 120.

komeceras, komoceras (kō-mes'-, kō-mos'-e-ras), n. [NL., < Gr. komē, the hair, + keras, horn.] In mammul., a horn or pseudo-horn formed of matted or felted hair of the skin covering the core. This horn is annually developed and shed, as in the American pronghorn, Antilocapra americana. J. E. Gray.

kon¹, v. An obsolete spelling of con¹ for can¹.

kon², v. t. An obsolete spelling of con².
kong, n. See *kung*¹.

kongsbergite (kōngs'berg-it), n. [< Kongsberg (see def.) + *-ite*².] A variety of silver amalgam, containing 95 per cent. of silver, found at Kongsberg in Norway.

Koninckia (kō-ning'ki-ā), n. [NL., named after Prof. de Koninck of Liège.] 1. A genus of corals of the family Favositidae. Edwards and Haimé, 1849.—2. Same as Koninckina.

Koninckina (kō-ning-ki-nā), n. [NL. (Suess, 1853), *< Koninckia + -ina*¹.] The typical genus of Koninckia. K. leonhardi is a species from the Upper Trias of the Austrian Alps.

Koninckinidæ (kō-ning-kin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Koninckia + -idæ.] A family of fossil brachiopods, based on the genus Koninckina.

koninckite (kō-ningk-it), n. [After Prof. de Koninck of Liège.] A hydrated iron phosphate from Visé in Belgium.

konistra (kō-nis'trā), n. [< Gr. κονίστρα (see def.), < κονίτιον, koniēon, cover with dust, < κόνις, dust, = L. cinis, ashes: see cinereous.] In the anc. Gr. theater, the orchestra; properly, a circular area between the stage and the auditorium or koilon, raised slightly above the level of a surrounding space or passage, which was usually paved and coped with stone. The thymele stood in the middle of the konistra, which was so called because its floor consisted of ashes or ashes and earth compounded, beaten down to a hard and smooth surface. This disposition of the ancient theater was usually changed, under the Romans, for an even pavement of stone; but notable examples survive, as at Epidaurus and Sicily. See cut under diazoma.

konite, n. See conite.
kōnlite (kōn'lit), n. [After Mr. Kōnlein, a superintendent of coal-works at Uznach.] A soft reddish-brown hydrocarbon occurring in folia or in grains with brown coal at Uznach in Switzerland.

konningt, konyngt, n. and a. Middle English forms of *cunning*¹.

koot, n. See coel.

koochahbee (kō-chā'bē), n. [Amer. Ind.] The larvæ of a dipterous insect, Ephydra californica, prepared and used for food by the Indians. See Ephydra.

The worms are dried in the sun, the shell rubbed off by hand, when a yellowish kernel remains like a small grain of rice. This is oily, very nutritious, and not unpleasant to the taste; and under the name of koo-chah-bee forms a very important article of food. Stand. Nat. Hist., II. 432.

koodoo (kō'dō), n. [African.] The striped antelope, Antelope strepsiceros or Strepsiceros kudu, found in many parts of Africa from Abyssinia to Cape Colony. It is much hunted, and has been almost exterminated in the latter region. The koodoo is a large handsome animal, the male standing about Koodoo, or Striped Antelope (Strepsiceros kudu).

13 hands high at the withers, with horns 3 or even 4 feet long, spirally twisted, and 2½ feet apart at their sharp points. The coat of old males is grayish-brown, indistinctly marked; that of young males and of females is a more reddish brown, with 8 or 10 long white stripes on each side. The koodoo frequents covered country, especially in the vicinity of rivers. Also koodo, kudu, coudou.

kook (kūk), v. t. See *cook*³.

kookery, kookree, n. See kukeri.

Kooleen, n. See Kulin.

koolokamba (kō-lo-kam'bā), n. [Native name.] A kind of anthropoid ape, Troglodytes koolokamba, described by Du Chaillu as inhabiting the forests of equatorial Africa, and named T.

aubryi by Gratiolet and Alix. It is related to the gorilla, chimpanzee, and uschiogo.

koomiss, n. See kumiss.

koorbash (kōr'bash), n. [Also kourbash, and formerly coorbash, coorbash; < Ar. kurbāš, < Turk. qirbāch, kirbāch, a whip, a scourge.] A whip of hippopotamus- or rhinoceros-hide, used in Egypt and other parts of Africa.

He tried the argument of an unlimited application of the koorbash—in this case a frightfully thick thong of hippopotamus-hide. E. Sartorius, In the Soudan, p. 129.

koorbash (kōr'bash), v. t. [< koorbash, n.] To beat with a koorbash.

Koord, n. See Kurd.

Koordish, n. See Kurdish.

kooskoos, n. See couscous.

kooso, koosso, n. See cusso.

kopeck, kopek, n. See copeck.

koppa (kop'pā), n. [Gr. κόππα, < Phen. (Heb.) qōph.] A letter of the original Greek alphabet, q, analogous in form and corresponding in position and use to the Phœnician and Hebrew koph and the Latin q, q. See episemon, 2. The κάρρα (κ, κ) was substituted for it in the words in which it had been used, but the sign was retained as a numeral with its ancient value of 90.

koppite (kop'it), n. [After Prof. Hermann Kopp of Heidelberg.] A rare mineral, related to pyrochlore in composition, found at Schelingen in the Kaiserstuhl, Baden.

Kopp's law of boiling-points. See boiling-point.

kopra, koprah, n. See copra.

Kopsia (kop'si-ā), n. [NL. (Blume, 1826), named after a Dutch botanist, Jan Kops, professor at Utrecht.] A genus of tropical Old World trees or shrubs, belonging to the natural order Apocynaceae, or dogbane family, tribe Plumbeiceae, having a hypocrateriform or salver-shaped corolla, calyx destitute of glands, corolla-lobes twisted and overlapping to the right, opposite leaves, and white or pink flowers in short terminal cymes. It was made by Don the type of his tribe Kopsieae. Only four species are known, native in the Malayan peninsula and archipelago. K. fruticosa is very ornamental in cultivation, and produces flowers several times in a year.

Kopsiæ (kop-si'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Don, 1838), < Kopsia + -iæ.] A tribe of plants of the order Apocynaceae, typified by the genus Kopsia.

kora, n. See koray.

Koran (kō'ran or kō-rān'), n. [Also rarely Coran, Qurān, formerly also Core; with the Ar. article, Alkoran, Alcoran (q. v.); = Turk. Pers. qurān, < Ar. qurān, qorān, book, reading, < qarā, read.] The book which contains the religious and moral code of the Mohammedans, and by which all their transactions, civil, legal, military, etc., are regulated. It consists of revelations uttered by Mohammed at intervals during many years, and written down on loose leaves, the collection of which was completed after his death in 114 surahs or chapters. Its style is regarded as the standard of classical Arabic.

He Anathematizeth the Core, that is, Mohammed's Scripture, and all his learning, laws, Apocryphal narrations, traditions, and blasphemies. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 264.

Koranic (kō-ran'ik), a. [< Koran + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Koran.

Half afterwards enrolled himself in the same order and became a professor of Koranic exegesis. Encyc. Brit., XI. 367.

korazint, n. See corazin.

Kordofan gum. See gum arabic, under *gum*².

Korean, a. and n. See Corcan.

korker (kōr'kēr), n. Same as *cork*⁴.

koro (kō'rō), n. [A native name.] An inferior light-colored kind of trepang.

In the Gulf of Carpentaria we did not find any other than the koro, or gray slug. Captain Flinders, Voyage.

koroscopy (kō-ros'kō-pi), n. [< Gr. κόρη, the pupil of the eye, + σκοπέω, view.] The shadow-test for the refraction of the eye. See refraction.

korybant, n. An occasional form of corybant.

kos (kos), n. [Heb.] A Jewish measure of capacity, equal to about 4 cubic inches.

kosher (kō'shēr), a. [Also cosher; Heb., lawful.] Pure; clean; lawful; conforming to the requirements of the Talmud; used by Hebrews; as, kosher bread, kosher meat, etc.: opposed to tref.

The whole difference between kosher and tref (lawful and forbidden, clean and unclean meat) lies in the observance of, or departure from, certain . . . Talmudic ordinances concerning the knife to be used for slaughtering, its shape, . . . and the like. The Century, XXIII. 913.

kosmeterion (kos-mē-tē'ri-on), n.; pl. kosmeteria (-iā). [Gr. κοσμητήριον (see def.), < κοσμεῖν, adorn: see cosmetic.] In Gr. antiq., a public storehouse for the various ornaments and accessories used in the celebration of religious festivals, processions, etc., as at Sicily.

kosmic, kosmogony, etc. See cosmic, etc.

koss, n. See cozz.
kosso (kos'ō), n. See cusso.

Kosteletzky (kos-te-lets'ki-ä), n. [NL. (Presl, 1835), named after V. F. Kosteletzky, a Bohemian botanist.] A genus of malvaceous plants of the tribe Hibisceae, closely related to Hibiscus, from which it differs chiefly in having only one ovule in each cell of the ovary. Eight species have been described, inhabiting the warmer parts of America, several in Mexico and Texas, and one (K. Virginica) extending as far north as the salt marshes of New Jersey and New York. This last, which is a well-known plant, is a tall perennial herb, sometimes 4 or 5 feet high, with ample heart-shaped or halberd-shaped 3-lobed leaves, and large rose-purple flowers, often 2 inches in width.

Kozta's case. See *case*¹.

kraket, v. A Middle English form of crack.

kraken (krä'- or krä'ken), n. [Also sometimes krauken; < Dan. kraken, < Norw. krake, a fabled sea-monster: little used in Norw., but appar. a particular use of krake, a pole, stake, post, a stunted crooked tree, a hook, also a stunted animal or person, = Icel. kraki, a pale, stake, post, = Dan. krage, a climbing-pole, = Sw. krake, a stunted horse; prob. ult. akin to E. crook.] A mythical sea-monster said to appear at times off the coast of Norway. The popular notion of the kraken dates back at least to the time of Pontopidan (1698-1764), who wrote a description of it. One of the giant squids, as a cephalopod of the genus Architeuthis, might furnish a reasonable basis for the myth.

To believe all that has been said of the Sea-Serpent or the Kraken would be credulity; to reject the possibility of their existence would be presumption.

Goldsmith, Animated Nature, iv. 3.

Then, like a kraken huge and black,
She crushed our ribs in her iron grasp!
Longfellow, The Cumberbund.

Krameria (krä-mē'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linneus), named after J. G. H. Kramer, an Austrian physician and botanist.] A polypetalous genus of American herbs or undershrubs, referred by modern botanists to the order Polygalaceae, or milkwort family, but with such anomalous characters as to have been erected by some botanists into an order by itself, the Krameriacae or Krameriacae. It has 4 or 5 nearly equal sepals, 5 unequal petals, a 1-celled ovary containing 2 ovules, a globose indehiscent echinate fruit, and seeds destitute of albumen. The flowers are borne in terminal racemes. The number of species is set down by different authors at from 20 to 25, all growing in the warmer parts of America, but ranging from southern Florida and Texas to Chili. K. triandra, the ratany, a shrub found in the mountainous parts of Peru, Bolivia, and Chili, from 3,000 to 8,000 feet altitude, produces the medicinal ratany-root of commerce (see ratany), and all the species are said to possess intensely astringent properties. K. pauciflora, from Mexico, is an ornamental shrub.

Krameriacæ (krä-mē-ri-ä'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1835), < Krameria + -acæ.] An order of plants, consisting of the genus Krameria only, now referred to the Polygalaceae: same as the Krameriacæ of Reichenbach.

kries, n. Another spelling of creese.

Krigia (krij'i-ä), n. [NL. (Schreber, 1791), named after David Krig, who collected plants in Maryland near the beginning of the 18th century.] A genus of North American liguliflorous composite plants, of the tribe Cichoriaceae, subtribe Hyoserideae, with yellow flowers, usually on leafless scapes, a few-bracted involucre, many-ribbed achenes, and pappus of 5 to 8 small chaffy scales, alternating with as many bristles. They are low herbs with milky juice and radical leaves in a rosette on the ground, with the aspect of small-flowered dandelions. The genus embraces only five species, all of which are found in the United States, belonging to three sections—K. Virginica, a common little plant of eastern North America from Canada to Texas, being the type. K. Dandelion, with much larger flowers and globose tubers, was formerly placed in a distinct genus, Cynthia.

Krigiæ (kri-jī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Karl Heinrich Schultz, 1835), < Krigia + -æ.] A tribe of composite plants created for the reception of the genera Krigia and Luthera, the latter of which is equivalent to Cynthia, now merged in Krigia.

Kuroshiu (kô-rô-shê'wô), n. [Jap., < kuro, black, + shiu, tide.] The Black Current or Gulf Stream of Japan. Beginning about 20° N. latitude, near the Bashee Islands, between Luzon and Formosa, it flows northward along the eastern shores of Formosa and the south of Loochoo, till it reaches the 26th parallel of latitude, where it divides, the main current flowing north-east to the eastern shores of Kinshin, Shikoku, and the main island of Japan. About latitude 38° it bends more to the east, and continues to the Aleutian Islands and the North American coast, where it is known as the Pacific drift. On the coasts of Japan its temperature is always 4° or 5° higher than that of the neighboring waters, but it decreases in temperature and depth as it runs northward and eastward. Its breadth, which is 40 miles near Japan, increases as it approaches the American coast.

kursaal (kôr'säl), n. [G., < kur, = E. cure (< L. cura), + saal (= AS. sal), a hall, > F. salle, salon: see salon, saloon]. A public hall or room for the use of visitors at many German watering-places or health resorts. Reading-rooms and rooms for recreation are usually associated with the kursaal.

kursi, kursy (kêr'si), n.: pl. kursies (-siz). [Ar. kursi, korsi (< Hind. kursi), a chair.] A small low table, usually octagonal, upon which an eating-tray is put at meal-time: a common arrangement in the Moslem East. The kursi itself is often very richly ornamented, especially with inlaid work of ivory, ebony, and metals; but sometimes it is of carved wood, or of metal filigree.

Kurtidæ (kêr'ti-dê), n. pl. [NL., < Kurtus + -idæ]. A family of acanthopterygian fishes represented by the genus Kurtus, to which different limits have been assigned. (a) In Günther's ichthyological system, the only family of the third division of Acanthopterygii (Kurtiformes), embracing both true Kurtidæ and Pempheridæ. (b) In late systems, fishes of a compressed oblong form, with a short submedian dorsal fin, a long anal, and an air-bladder lodged within dilated convex ribs forming rings.

Kurtiformes (kêr-ti-fôr'méz), n. pl. [< Gr. kurtós, curved, + L. forma, form.] In Günther's ichthyological system, the third division of the order Acanthopterygii, having only one dorsal fin, which is much shorter than the long anal, and no superbranchial organ.

Kurtus (kêr'tus), n. [NL. (Bloch, 1787), < Gr. kurtós, curved, arched.] A genus of acanthopterygian fishes, in which the back is gibbous in front of the dorsal fin, representing the family Kurtidæ. K. indicus is an example. Also Kyr-tus.

Kushitic (kû-shit'ik), a. Same as Cushite.

kuskus, kusskuss, n. Same as *cuscus*².

kuthet, v. A variant of kithc.

kutia (kôt-yä'), n. [Russ. kutya, kutiya]. A dish made of boiled rice or other grain with honey or hydromel and raisins. Nearly everywhere in the Greek Church this dish is eaten after a funeral or a service for the dead, having been taken to the church or cemetery and placed on the reading-desk during the service. The ingredients are thought to be symbolic, the rice meaning the resurrection, the honey the joy of eternal life, etc. The custom is probably derived from funeral ceremonies of the ancient Greeks.

kuttar (kut'är), n. [Hind.] A sort of short dagger, peculiar to India, having a handle consisting of two parallel bars with a crosspiece connecting them. The hand is inserted to grip the crosspiece, and the bars serve as a guard to the wrist.

kuwazoku, kuazoku (kwä-zô'kü), n. [Jap., < kuwa (= Chin. hwa), a flower, flowery, + zoku (= Chin. tsuk), class.] 1. The noble class: a collective name in Japan for both the kuges or court nobles and the daimios or territorial nobles, since the surrender to the mikado, in 1872, of the lands and retainers of the latter. — 2. One of this class.

kvass (kvas), n. [= F. kvas = G. kvass, < Russ. kwasu, a drink so called.] A fermented drink in general use in Russia, taking the place of the beer of other countries. Common kvass is made from an infusion of raised rye flour or dough, or of other flour or baked bread, with malt. Finer kinds are made from apples, raspberries, or other fruit, without malt.

ky, kye (ki), n. An obsolete or dialectal plural of *cow*¹.

In places ther is fodder abundance,
The ky may otherwhiles be withdrawe.

The kyrbasia, or kidaris, was a high pointed hat of Persian origin.
Encyc. Brit., VI, 454.

Kyrie (kir'i-e), n.: pl. Kyries (-ez). [Short for Kyrie eleison.] 1. The Kyrie eleison, especially in its western form (with Christe eleison), and the repetitions collectively, as used at the beginning of the Roman mass or as at the beginning of the Anglican communion office. — 2. The musical setting of these words.

Kyrie eleison (kir'i-e e-lä'i-son). [Gr. Κύριε ἐλέησον, Lord, have mercy: Κύριε, Lord; ἐλέησον, aor. impv. of ἐλεειν, have mercy or pity: see Christe eleison.] 1. Literally, Lord, have mercy! a brief petition, founded on nearly identical Scriptural phrases (for example, Ps. cxxiii, 3, Mat. xx, 30), used as a response in the primitive liturgies and in the eucharistic and other offices of Oriental churches to the present day.

In the Latin Church Kyrie eleison (thrice) is followed by Christe eleison (thrice), and this again by Kyrie eleison (thrice). The formula is always said in this Greek wording, but the intermediate Christe eleison is unknown to the Eastern Church. The Oriental Kyrie is used in the irenica at the beginning of the liturgy and in other litanies. The Western Kyrie (a remnant of the irenica) is used by the Roman Church at mass just after the introit, and also in the breviary offices and in litanies. In the Sarum missal it also occurred near the beginning of the service, and this use of it is represented in the communion office of the Book of Common Prayer by the responses after the commandments, "Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law." In the same book it occurs in the form "Lord, . . . Christ, . . . Lord, have mercy upon us," in the litany, and before the collect for the day at morning and evening prayer. This is also called the lesser litany.

2. The first movement or division in a musical setting of a Roman Catholic mass or the Anglican communion office, the text being the petitions above mentioned.

kyriolexy (kir'i-ô-lek-si), n. [< Gr. κυριολεξία, the use of literal expression, < κύριος, having authority, authorized, regular, + λέξις, speaking: see lexicon. Cf. kyriologic.] The use of literal as opposed to figurative expressions, or of words in clear and definite senses. [Rare.]

kythet, v. See kithc.

kyxt, n. A Middle English form of kec.

Kylix. (From an example in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.)

1. The twelfth letter and ninth consonant of the English alphabet. It had a similar place in the Latin, Greek, and Phœnician alphabets, from which the character has come to us. The scheme of its forms in those alphabets, with the Egyptian characters from which they are perhaps ultimately derived (see L), is as follows:

The l-sound is made with the tongue in the same general position against the roof of the mouth as d and t and n (see these letters), and hence is called, like them, a dental (or gingival, or lingual, or tongue-point) sound. Its characteristic peculiarity of utterance is that it involves a breach of the close d-position at the side or sides of the tongue, the intoned breath escaping there, while the tip of the tongue remains in contact. This breach may be made on either side of the tongue, or on both sides at once: the habits of different individuals, and perhaps of different communities, varying in this regard. Other l-sounds, agreeing with ours in the lateral breach of mute contact, but differing in the position of the tongue, are found in some other languages: as, the palatal l of French and Italian (the French l mouillé, now mostly converted into a simple y-sound; the Italian gl), the lingual or cerebral l of Sanskrit, and so on. L is the most sonorous and continuable, or most vowel-like, of our consonant-sounds; and hence it has come, by the loss of an accompanying vowel, to have itself the value of a vowel in a very large number of English unaccented syllables—especially after a mute, as in fickle, wriggle, bottle, noddle, apple, babble; less often after consonants of other classes, as in muscle, muzzle, raffle, devil, and colloquially in such as kernel, gunnet, pommel. The sign l never has any other than its own proper sound; but it is silent in a few words, as baln, half, talk. In the recent history of our language the sound l is a peculiarly stable one, hardly exhibiting transition into any other; more anciently, and in other tongues, it exchanges sometimes with d (as Latin lacrima, Greek δακρυ), but especially with r (thus, in Sanskrit, the l is to a large extent a later alternative to an r); in many French words it appears converted into u (as maux, plural of mal, beau beside bel, belle, and so on); in Italian, after mutes, into i, as piano, Latin planus, etc. In virtue of its general phonetic character, l is a semivowel (so far as that term is admitted), and is often classed as such, along with r, or with r and y and z. More popularly, it is ranked as a "liquid," with m and n and z, nothing more being implied in the classification (a loose and unscientific one) than its special sonorosity and continuability.

2. A symbol—(a) in chem., for lithium: also Li; (b) in Roman numerals, for 50, and with a line drawn above it (L) for 50,000.—3. An abbreviation—(a) [l. c.] in music, of la (in solmization); (b) of Latin; (c) in stage-directions, of left; (d) [l. c.] of liber, a book, as a division of a literary work; (e) [l. c. or cap.] of libra, pound sterling, when written after the figures (when before the figures, it has the conventional form £): as, 100*l.* = £100; (f) [l. c.] in a ship's log-book, of lightning; (g) [l. c.] in references, of line: as, Milton, Lycidas, l. 72; (h) [l. c.] of logarithm; (i) [l. c.] in astron., of longitude (l denoting the heliocentric and λ the geocentric longitude); (j) [l. c.] of lege; (k) [cap. or l. c.] in anat., of lumbar: used in vertebral formulæ.—The three L's (naut.), lead, latitude, and lookout: a phrase used by seamen to signify that a careful use of the first (in sounding), a knowledge of the second, and the vigilant performance of the third will prevent a vessel from running ashore.

L² (ell), n. [Prop., as a word, spelled ell; from the letter L.] 1. A part of a house or other structure projecting at a right angle from the main body, so as to form with it the figure of the letter L: as, the building has an L of 20 feet.

The milk-pans tilted to sun against the underpinning of the L. Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 134.

2. A rectangularly bent pipe-connection. E. H. Knight. Also ell in both senses.

la¹ (lā), interj. [Also law; var. of lo, < AS. lā, interj.: see lo.] An expression of mild admiration, wonder, or surprise, and formerly of asservation: as, O la! that is strange. [Now vulgar.]

Truly, I will not go first; truly, la! I will not do you that wrong. Shak., M. W., I. 1, 322.

La! miss, why, it is witchcraft.

C. Reade, Love me Little, l.

La you!, behold; see there.

La you now, you hear!

Shak., W. T., II. 3, 50.

la² (lä), n. [See gamut.] In solmization, the syllable used for the sixth tone of the scale—that is, the submediant. In the major scale of C this tone is A, which is therefore sometimes called la, especially in Italy and France. Abbreviated l.

la³ (lä). [See le.] The feminine form of the definite article in French, occurring in some names and phrases used in English.

La. In chem., the symbol for lanthanum.

laager (lä'gër), n. [D., var. of leger, a camp: see *laager*², lager.] In South Africa, an encampment; an inclosure for temporary defense of the wagons of a traveling party.

laager (lä'gër), v. t. [< laager, n.] To arrange in such a way as to form a defensive inclosure; arrange so as to form a laager: as, to laager wagons. [S. African.]

laast, n. A Middle English form of laer.

labf (lab), v. [< ME. tabben, < OD. labban, blab, tell tales: cf. G. labbe, lip, mouth. Cf. *blab*¹, babble.] I. intrans. To blab; babble; tattle.

Of hir tonge a labbing shrewe is she.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Squire's Tale, l. 10.

II. trans. To blab.

Piers Plowman (C), xlii. 39.

lab (lab), n. [< ME. labbe; from the verb.] A blabber; a tattler; a telltale. [Prov. Eng.]

I am no labbe,

Though I it say, I am nought leef to gabbe.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 323.

Labadism (lab'a-dizim), n. [< Labadie (see Labadist) + -ism.] The doctrines and practices of the Labadists.

Labadist (lab'a-dist), n. [< Labadie (see def.) + -ist.] A follower of Jean de Labadie (1610-74), a Jesuit, afterward a mystic Protestant preacher in France and Holland. The Labadists were Christian communists. Among their tenets were denial of the obligation of sabbath observance, on the ground that life is a perpetual sabbath; belief in the direct influence of the Holy Spirit; and belief in marriage as a holy ordinance valid only among believers, the children of the regenerate being born without original sin. The sect disappeared about the middle of the eighteenth century.

Labarraque's fluid or solution. See fluid.

labarum (lab'a-rum), n. [LL., in LG. λάβαρον, also λάβαρον, λάβαρον; origin obscure; according to Baillet (Diet. Celtique), < Basque labaria, a standard; according to Larramendi (Diet. trilingue), of Cantabrian origin, < labaru, anything with four heads or limbs, such as the cruciform framework of a military standard. Cf. LL. eantabrum, a standard, a variant reading of labarum in some passages, neut. of Cantaber, Cantabrian, pl. Cantabri, the Cantabrians; see Cantabrian.] 1. A Roman military standard adopted by the later emperors as the imperial standard. It consisted of a staff or lance carrying a purple banner on a cross-bar. This banner usually bore the effigy of the general or emperor; but Constantine the Great, after his conversion, placed upon it, woven in gold, the cross and the monogram (christogram) or emblem of Christ, ☩ or ☩, consisting of the Greek letters XP (Chr), standing for Christ. In later times the name was given to the monogram itself, or to the cross in the monogram.

Ecclesiastical Labarum.

2. A standard or banner of similar form, borne in ecclesiastical processions of the Roman Catholic Church.—3. Figuratively, a moral standard, guide, or device.

It is now the Pagans who have seized the labarum of duty and self-sacrifice. F. P. Cobbe, Peak in Dartem, p. 5.

Labatia (la-bat'i-i), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1797), named after a French monk and botanist Jean Baptiste Labat.] A genus of tropical American trees belonging to the gamopetalous order Sapotaceæ, tribe Poutericæ, having a 4-parted calyx, 5 fertile and 5 abortive stamens, a 4-celled ovary, and fleshy fruit. Five species are known, natives of the West Indies and Brazil.

labbe¹, v. A Middle English form of lab.

labbe², la-beet. A contraction or corruption of let be. See let. Chaucer.

Hee'l purchase induction by simony, labefy (lab'ë-fi), v. t.; pret. and pp. labefied, ppr. labefying. [< L. labefacere, cause to totter, shake, weaken. < labere, totter, give way, + facere, do, make.] To weaken or loosen; enfeeble; impair. [Rare.]

label¹ (lä'bel), n. [< ME. label, labell, labelle, lubl, < OF. label, labeau, also, with an inserted liquid or nasal, tambel, lombel, lambeau (ML. reflex labellus, labella, labellus, labellus), a rag, tatter, shred, F. lambean, shred, piece, strip, flap, with dim. suffix, < OHG. lappa, MIIG. lappe, G. lappen, a rag, shred, = AS. læppa, lappa, a lap, flap, fold: see *lap*². Cf. lapel, ult. = label.]

It. A small loosely hanging flap; specifically, a pendant like a broad ribbon hanging from a head-dress; a lappet.

And a knit night-cap made of coarsest twine,

With two long labels button'd to his chin.

Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. il. 24.

The Priests' habits.—Long robes of white taffeta; long white heads of hair; the High-Priest a cap of white silk shag close to his head, with two labels at the ears.

Beaumont, Masque of Inner-Temple.

2. In her.: (a) One of the ribbons that hang down from a miter or the electoral crown. See infula, 3 (b). (b) A fillet resembling a barrulet with three or more pendent drops or points, which were originally straight with parallel sides, but are now usually shaped like a dovetail. It is used as a bearing, but especially as a difference, as in cadency, to indicate the oldest son. Some authorities say that the label when used for cadency should have seven points while the great-grandfather of the bearer is alive, five while his grandfather is alive, and three while the father lives. In nearly all cases the label, whether a bearing or a difference, has an odd number of points. These points are also called lambeaux. In a very few cases the label is borne bendwise. A label of three (or more) points crossed has, instead of the ordinary lambeaux, small crosses pointing downward, which may be Latin crosses reversed or Greek crosses. A label of three (or more) pomegranates pendent has, instead of lambeaux, rounded fruit represented as burst open. A label of three (or more) tays pendent has, instead of lambeaux, strips intended to represent the parchment ribbons to which seals are affixed in ancient documents. A label with the points erect, or a label reversed, is seldom used by itself, but in connection with an ordinary label, in which case the blazon is a label counterpoised with another, the points erect, or two labels indorsed, or more rarely bars-gemel patté. See lambeau. Also called file and lambel.

Label of three points.

The said Sir William said on his oath, in the tenth year of Henrie the fourth, that before the times of Edward the third the labell of three points was the different appropriate and spurtenant for the cognizance of the next heir.

Holtshed, Rich. II., an. 1390.

3. A slip of paper or any other material, bearing a name, title, address, or the like, affixed to something to indicate its nature, contents, ownership, destination, or other particulars.

Post. When I waked, I found

This label on my bosom.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5, 430.

4. A narrow slip of parchment or paper, or a ribbon of silk, affixed to a diploma, deed, or other formal writing, to hold the appended seal.

Ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed.

Shak., R. and J., iv. 1, 57.

5. In law, a paper annexed to a will by way of addition, as a codicil.—6. A small reserved space in a work of art, or the like, forming a panel or cartouche, used for containing a name, monogram, or other mark for identification.—7. In medicinal arch., a projecting tablet or molding over a door or window. See dripstone, 1. Also called label-molding.—8. A long, thin brass rule, with a small sight at one end and a center-hole at the other, commonly used with a tangent line on the edge of a circumferentor, to take altitudes, etc.

Then haste thou a labell, that is shapen like a rule, saue that it is strait and hath no plates on either ende.

Chaucer, Astrolabe.

9†. Border; verge; marge.

On Ascension Eve, May 15th, being in the town of Dover (standing as it were on tip-toes, on the utmost edge, brink, and label of that land which he was about to surrender), King John, by an instrument or charter, . . . granted to God, and the church of Rome, . . . the whole kingdom of England and Ireland.

Fuller, Ch. Hist., III. iv. 13.

label¹ (lā'bel), v. t.; pret. and pp. labeled or labelled, ppr. labeling or labelling. [< *label*¹, n.] 1. To affix a label to; mark with a label: as, to label a package to be despatched by express.—2. To designate or describe by or on a label; characterize by inscription: as, the bottle was labeled poison.—3†. To set forth or describe in a label (in the legal sense).

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty; it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will: as, item, two lips, indifferent red.

Shak., T. N., i. 5, 265.

4. In arch., to furnish with labels or hood-moldings. See *label*¹, n., 7.

If a castle appear in the distance, with its donjon keep, its towers, and labelled windows, its mullions and corbels.

R. P. Ward, De Clifford, xii.

label² (lā'bel), n. [< L. labellum, a little lip: see labellum.] In bot., same as labellum, 1.

labeler, labeller (lā'bel-ēr), n. One who affixes labels to anything.

labeling-machine (lā'bel-ing-mā-shēn'), n. A machine for affixing paper labels, advertisements, or covers to cans, bottles, boxes, or packages.

labellum (lā-bel'um), n.; pl. labella (-ā). [L., dim. of labrum, a lip: see labrum.] 1. In bot., one of the three divisions of an orchidaceous corolla, differing from the others in shape or direction, and not seldom spurred; the lip. Theoretically it is the petal nearest the axis, but by a half-twist of the ovary it becomes the outer petal, nearest the bract. The term is applicable to similar petals in other flowers. Also label.

L, Labellum of (1) Cyripedium pubescens and (2) Platantnera rotundifolia.

2. In entom., a part of the mouth of an insect, by some considered to be the epipharynx. In Diptera the labellum is one of a pair of tumid lobes terminating the theca of the proboscis.

label-machine (lā'bel-mā-shēn'), n. A machine for punching, printing, gumming, and cutting out labels for cans, bottles, boxes, etc., from a continuous roll of paper.

labent (lā'bent), a. [< L. laben(t)-s, ppr. of labi, fall, slide. Cf. labile, lapse.] Sliding; gliding.

[Rare.]

Labeo (lā'hē-ō), n. [NL., < L. labco, one who has large lips, < labium, lip: see labium.] 1. In Cuvier's system of classification, a genus of cyprinoid fishes.—2. In entom., a genus of hymenopterous parasites of the proctotrupid subfamily Dryinina, having the occiput deeply concave, and vertex and neck separated by a sharp angle. There are two species, one European and one North American. The genus was founded by Haliday in 1833.

Labia¹ (lā'bi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λαβή, a handle, or λαβίς, a handle, forceps, < λαβάνειν, λαβείν, take. Cf. labis.] A genus of earwigs of the family Forficulidae, having the body short and the antennæ with fewer than twelve joints. L. minor is the little earwig, a European species found in manure-heaps and hotbeds. Leach, 1815.

labia², n. Plural of labium.

labial (lā'bi-al), a. and n. [= F. labial = Sp. Pg. labial = It. labiale, < ML. labialis, pertaining to the lips, < L. labium, lip: see labium.] I. a. 1. In anat. and zool., pertaining to the lips or to a lip-like part; situated on or by a lip; having a lip-like character, as in shape, position, or office: as, a labial vessel or nerve; a labial fold or process.—2. In entom., pertaining to the labium, or lower lip of an insect.—3. Formed by the lips, as a sound. See Il, 1.

The Hebrews have been diligent in it, and have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, which guttural.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 198.

4. Giving forth tones produced by the impact of a stream of air upon a sharp edge or lip: applied to musical instruments such as the flute or the flue-pipes of an organ.—Labial appendages. Same as brachial appendages (which see, under brachial).—Labial glands. See gland.—Labial palpi, in entom., two organs, each consisting of from one to four joints, attached to basal lobes on the sides of the ligula or to the front margin of the mentum. See cuts under Hymenoptera, Insecta, and mouth-part.—Labial pipe, in music, an organ-pipe with lips; a flue-pipe.—Labial segment, that primary body-ring which in insects bears the labium or united second maxilla. The gene, occiput, and cervical sclerites have been variously supposed to represent this segment, which in spiders is transferred to the thorax. See postoral.

II. n. 1. A letter or character representing an articulate sound which in speaking is accompanied by a proximate or complete closure of the lips. The labials in English are the mutes p, b, the nasal m, and the fricative f, v (usually made between lips and teeth, and hence called more exactly labiodentals); and the semivowel w and vowels oo (o) and ou, as involving a rounding of the lips, are often ranked in the same class. 2. In herpet., one of a series of plates or scales which lie along the edge of the lips, especially in Ophidia, those of the upper lip being the superior labials, those of the lower lip the inferior labials.—3. In entom., one of the labial palpi.

Labiales (lā-bi-ā'lēz), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1833), pl. of ML. labialis, labial: see labial.] In Lindley's earlier system of botanical classification (1833), a group of plants in the cohort Persoonata, embracing the orders Labiate, Verbenaceæ, Myoporineæ, and Sclaginææ, in all of which the corolla is more or less labiate. In his later system the Labiales are embraced chiefly in his Echiales.

labialism (lā'bi-al-izm), n. [< labial + -ism.] A tendency to labial pronunciation — that is, to change articulate sounds to labials or to labiodentals; labialization.

In one set [of cognate words] we see the phenomenon of labialism, in the other assibilation, but no touch of labialism.

Encyc. Brit., XIII. 810.

labialization (lā'bi-al-i-zā'shon), n. [< labialize + -ation.] The act or process of labializing; conversion to a labial.

The phenomena of palatalization and labialization.

Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVI. 57.

labialize (lā'bi-al-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. labialized, ppr. labializing. [< labial + -ize.] To make labial; give a labial character to; change to utterance with the lips.

A tendency to labialize back vowels.

Amer. Jour. Philol., V. 515.

There is reason for believing that this labializing tendency is very old — as old indeed as the Indo-European language itself.

Encyc. Brit., XIII. 810.

labially (lā'bi-al-ī), adv. In a labial manner; by means of the lips.

Labiatæ (lā-bi-ā'tē), n. pl. [NL. (A. L. Jus-sieu, 1789), fem. pl. of labiatus, lipped: see labiate.] The mint family, a very important and extensive natural order of dicotyledonous gamopetalous plants, with a labiate corolla, and a four-lobed ovary, changing to four seed-like monospermous fruits. This order contains about 2,600 species, mostly herbs, undershrubs, or shrubs, rarely arborescent, with opposite or whorled leaves, usually square stems, and a thyrsoid or whorled inflorescence. They are spread throughout the world, being most strongly represented in the Mediterranean and eastern regions, but abounding in all temperate latitudes. Many of the species are valued for their fragrance, as lavender and thyme; others for their stimulating qualities, as mint and peppermint; others as aromatics, as savory, basil, and marjoram; several are used as febrifuges, as the Ocimum viride of Sierra Leone. Rosemary is used in the manufacture of Hungary water, and its oil is that which gives the green color to bear's grease and like pomtums. Betony, ground-ivy, hearhound, and others have bitter tonic qualities. Numerous species possess great beauty, as various kinds of sage, Gardogia, and Dracocephalum.

labiate (lā'bi-āt), a. and n. [= F. labié = Sp. Pg. labiado = It. labiato, < NL. labiatus, lipped, < L. labium, lip: see labium.] I. a. Lipped; having parts which are shaped or arranged like lips.

(a) In bot.: (1) Lipped; nearly always, two-lipped: the same as bilabiate: said of a gamopetalous corolla or gamosepalous calyx. Compare labiose. (2) Pertaining to the Labiateæ. (b) In anat. and zool., formed like a lip; labial in shape, office, or appearance. (c) In entom., having thickened, fleshy margins: applied to an orifice, as the end of the proboscis of a house-fly.

Labiate Corolla of Brunella vulgaris. a, corolla, seen from the side; b, same laid open, front view.

II. n. A plant of the natural order Labiateæ. labiated (lā'bi-ā-ted), a. [< labiate + -ed.] Same as labiate.

Labiatifloræ (lā-bi-ā-ti-flō'rē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of labiatiflorus: see labiatiflorous.] In bot., according to De Candolle, Gray, and others, a series of the natural order Compositæ. The flowers are mostly hermaphrodite, and the corolla is divided into two lips. It was regarded by Lindley and Endlicher as a suborder, and is coextensive with the tribe Mutisiaceæ.

labiatiflorous (lā-bi-ā-ti-flō'rus), a. [< NL. labiatiflorus, < labiatus, labiate, + L. flos (flor), flower.] Having the flowers with labiate corollas: said only of the Labiatifloræ.

labidometer (lab-i-dom'e-tēr), n. [< Gr. λαβίς (labís), a forceps (see labis), + μέτρον, a measure.] In obstet., a scale adapted to the handles of the forceps, which indicates the distance of the blades from each other when applied to the head of the child. Dunghison.

Labidura (lab-i-dū'rā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of labidurus*, < Gr. λαβίς (labís), a holder, forceps, + οὐρά, tail.] A suborder of Orthoptera, distinguishing the Forficulidæ alone from other orthopterous insects: a synonym of Euplexoptera and of Dermaptera in a limited sense.

labiella (lā-bi-el'ā), n.; pl. labiellæ (-ē). [NL., dim. of L. labium, a lip: see labium.] In Myriapoda, a median single or multiple piece of the deutomala, situated between the malulellæ. A. S. Packard, Proc. Amer. Philos. Soc., June, 1883, p. 200.

labile (lab'il), a. [= OF. and F. labile, < L. labilis, apt to slip, transient, < labi, fall, slip: see labent.] Unstable; liable to err, fall, or apostatize. [Rare.]

But sensibility and intelligence, being by their nature and essence free, must be labile, and by their ability may actually lapse, degenerate, and by habit acquire a second nature.

Cheyne, Regimen, v.

lability (lā-bil'i-ti), n. [= OF. labileté, < ML. labilita(t)-s, instability, < L. labilis, apt to slip: see labite.] The quality of being labile; liability to lapse or err. Coleridge. See quotation under labile. [Rare.]

labimeter (lā-bim'e-tēr), n. An erroneous form of labidometer.

labiodental (lā'bi-ō-den'tal), a. and n. [< L. labium, lip, + den(t)-s, tooth: see dental.] I. a. Formed or pronounced by the coöperation of the lips and the teeth.

II. n. An articulate sound produced by the coöperation of the lips and the teeth, or the letter or character representing such sound. The labiodentals are f and v.

labiose (lā'bi-ōs), a. [L. labium, lip, + -osc.] In bot., having the (distinct) petals so arranged as to imitate a labiate corolla.

labipalp (lā'bi-palp), n. [NL. labipalpus, L. labium, lip, + NL. palpus, a feeler: see palp.] A labial palp or feeler of an insect or a mollusk.

labipalpus (lā-bi-pal'pus), n.; pl. labipalpi (-pī). [NL.] Same as labipalp.

labis (lā'bis), n. [MGr. LGr. λαβίς, a spoon, Gr. a holder, handle, forceps, tongs, < λαβίβαιν, λαβίβιν, take.] In the Greek and other Oriental churches, a small spoon, usually of silver, and with a cruciform handle, used to administer the eucharistic elements (the species of bread dipped in that of wine: see intinction) to the laity. The name is derived from the fact that the Greek word labia (λαβίς) is used in the Septuagint in the passage Isa. vi. 6 for the tongs with which the angel took the live coal from off the altar and gave it to the prophet, the 'live coal' being a frequent name in early Christian times for the eucharist. Before it was applied to the spoon, this name was given to the hand or fingers of the communicant. The labis is not in ordinary use in the Armenian Church. Also called cochlear and eucharistic spoon. See spoon.

labium (lā'bi-um), n.; pl. labia (-i). [L., a lip, also labrum, a lip, prob. akin to E. lip: see lip.]

1. In anat. and zool., a lip or lip-like part. Specifically—(a) In anat.: (1) Either lip, upper or under, of the mouth, respectively called labium superiorem and labium inferiorem. (2) Either lip, inner or outer, on each side of the vulva, respectively called labium internum and labium externum; generally named in the plural—the former, right and left, being the labia minora or nymphæ; the latter, right and left, being the labia majora. (3) Either lip, upper or lower, of the grooved border of the spiral lamina of the cochlea: the upper is called labium vestibulare, from its relation to the scala vestibuli; the latter, labium tympanicum, from its relation with the scala tympani. (b) In entom., specifically, the lower lip of an insect, the upper being called the labrum. It is morphologically the third pair of gnathites united together on the median line, and believed to correspond to the second pair of maxillæ of a crustacean. The labium is a composite organ, whose composition varies much in different groups of insects. Hence there is great confusion in the names of the parts of which it is composed. The term is now applied to the whole under lip, which may or does consist of parts named (1) stipes, mentum, and palpi; the palpi themselves bearing the lingua, paraglossæ, and palpi labiales; or (2) submentum, mentum, and ligula, the last bearing the glossa, paraglossæ, and labial palps. See these terms, and cuts under mouth-part.

It is hardly open to doubt that the mandibles, the maxillæ, and the labium answer to the mandibles and the two pairs of maxillæ of the crustacean mouth.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 343.

(c) In Arachnida, the shield forming the floor of the mouth, which in spiders is very conspicuous, and is often, but incorrectly, called the labrum. (d) In Arthropoda generally, the lower lip, attached to the mentum; a coalesced second pair of maxillæ, forming the lower part of the mouth; the metastoma, as of a crustacean. See cut under Atacidae.

The resemblance between the labium and a pair of maxillæ which have coalesced is obvious.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 347.

(e) One of the lips or labiate prolongations of the neuropodium of a polychæton worm, between which is the aperture of the trichophore. (f) In conch., the inner or columellar lip of a univalve shell, the outer lip being called the labrum. See cut under univalve. (g) The lip of an organ-pipe. See lip.

2. In bot.: (a) The lower or anterior lip of a bilabiate corolla. (b) In Isoetes, a lip-like structure formed by the lower margin of the foveola.

—3. [cap.] A genus of ichneumon-flies, with one small New Guinean species, L. bicolor. Brullé, 1846.—Labia cerebri, the lips of the brain; the margins of the inner surface of the two hemispheres, overlapping the corpus callosum like lips, each forming the border of the gyrus fornicatus.

lablab (lab'lab), n. The Egyptian or black bean, Dolichos Lablab, a native of India, widely cultivated, and naturalized in most warm countries. The species as named includes several varieties, formerly treated as species of a genus Lablab, as L. vulgaris and L. cultratus; also L. perennans, the white China lablab, and D. or L. lignosus, the horse-eye bean.

labor, labour (lā'bor), n. [The second spelling is still prevalent in England; early mod. E. labour, < ME. labour, laboure, labor (?), < OF. labor, labur, labour, labour, F. labour = Sp. labor = Pg. laor = It. labore, < L. labor, labos (labōr), labor, toil, work, exertion; perhaps remotely akin to robur, strength: see robust.]

1. Work done by a human being or an animal; exertion of body or mind, or both, for the accomplishment of an end; effort made to attain useful results, in distinction from exercise for the sake of recreation or amusement.

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath.

Shak., Macbeth, II. 2, 38.

What is obtained by labour will of right be the property of him by whose labour it is gained. Johnson, Rambler.

Death is the end of life; ah, why Should life all labour be?

Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters, Choric Song.

Labour, I should say, is any painful exertion of mind or body undergone partly or wholly with a view to future good. Jevons, Pol. Econ., v.

2. Specifically, bodily toil; physical exertion for the sake of gain or reward; the use of muscular strength for the satisfaction of wants, in distinction from purely mental exertion and from the productive use of capital. Skilled labor is that employed in arts and handicrafts which have to be learned by apprenticeship or study and practice; unskilled labor is that requiring no preparatory training. Nearly all work of both classes is included in the phrase manual labor.

A habit of labor in the people is as essential to the health and vigor of their minds and bodies as it is conducive to the welfare of the state. A. Hamilton, Works, I. 257.

3. Work done or to be done; that which requires exertion or effort; a work; a performance; an achievement: as, the twelve labors of Hercules.

By one labour, he left to posterity three notable bookes. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 128.

Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them. Rev. xiv. 13.

These brought back

A present, a great labour of the loom.

Tennyson, Princess, i.

4. The laboring class; productive work as represented by those devoted to it: as, the claims or rights of labor; the labor-market.

When labor quarrels with capital, or capital neglects the interests of labor, it is like the hand thinking it does not need the eye, the ear, or the brain.

J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 268.

5. The pangs and efforts of childbirth; parturition; travail. The first stage of labor is from the beginning to the complete dilatation of the os uteri; the second stage consists in the expulsion of the child, and the third in that of the afterbirth.

Rachel travailed, and she had hard labour.

Gen. xxxv. 16.

6 (Sp. pron. lā-bōr'). In the quicksilver-mines of California, any place where work has been or is going on; especially, in the plural, those parts of the mine from which ore is being extracted in some quantity; workings.—Commissioner of Labor. See commissioner.—Division of labor. See division.—Hard labor, in law, compulsory mechanical employment, or other work requiring continuous physical exertion, imposed on some criminals in addition to imprisonment.—Hard-labor Bill. See Blackstone's Hard-labor Bill, under bill.—Knights of Labor. See knights.—Labor of love. See love.—Premature labor, labor which takes place before the normal date of termination of pregnancy, but late enough to make possible the survival of the child. Sometimes defined as labor in the last three months of pregnancy.—Statute labor, in Scotland, the amount of work appointed by law to be furnished annually for the repair of highways. = Syn. 1. Toil, Drudgery, etc. (see work); effort, pains.

labor, labour (lā'bor), v. [ME. labouren, laboren, labren, < OF. laborer, laburer, labourer, F. labourer = Pr. laborar, laorar, lavar = Sp. labrar = Pg. lavar = It. laborare, lavorare, < L. laborare, intr. labor, strive, exert oneself, suffer, be in distress, tr. work out, elaborate, < labor, labor: see labor, n. Cf. collaborate, elaborate.] I. intrans. 1. To make a physical or mental effort to accomplish some end; exert the powers of body or mind for the attainment of some result; work; strive. The word often implies painful or strenuous effort.

Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work.

Ex. xx. 9.

Against my soul's pure truth, why labour you

To make it wander in an unknown field?

Shak., C. of E., iii. 2, 37.

How much soever I laboured to keep them company,
I could not possibly perform it. Coryat, Cruicities, I. 77.

Oh, my heart

Labours a double motion to impart

So heavy tidings!

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, v. 3.

Ever will I labor as I can

To make my ill forebodings come to nought.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 107.

2. Specifically, to exert the muscular power of the body for the attainment of some end; engage in physical or manual toil.

In sudore et swynk thou schalt thi mete tillic,

And labore for thi lyfode, for so vr lord bigte.

Piers Plowman (A), vii. 219.

Thei maken the Ox to labour 6 zeer or 7, and than thei etc him.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 170.

Adam, well may we labour still to dress

This garden, still to tend plant, herb, and flower,

Our pleasant task enjoind.

Milton, P. L., ix. 205.

3. To be burdened; be oppressed with difficulties; proceed or act with difficulty: used absolutely, or followed by under or (formerly) of.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Mat. xi. 28.

The vulgar labour under a high degree of superstitition.

Bacon, Fable of the Blowpipe.

If we labour of a bodily disease, we send for a physician. Burton, Anat. of Med., To the Reader, p. 46.

Absolute monarchy labours under the worst of all disadvantages. Brougham.

4. To suffer the pangs of childbirth; be in travail.

My Muse labours,

And thus she is deliver'd.

Shak., Othello, ii. 1, 128.

5. To move forward heavily and with difficulty; specifically, of a ship, to roll and pitch heavily in a seaway, or in such a manner as to bring a dangerous strain upon the masts, rigging, and hull.

And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas

Olympus-high, and duck again as low

As hell's from heaven! Shak., Othello, ii. 1, 189.

To labor on the way, to go on; plod on.—To labor with, to argue or plead earnestly with: as, we labored with him for hours, but could not persuade him.—To take the laboring oar, to undertake the most toilsome or efficient part in an employment or enterprise.—Syn. 1. To struggle, plod, drudge, slave, suffer.

II. trans. 1. To cause to work; exercise.

Labour not either your mind or body presently after meals. Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

2. To work at; specifically, to till; cultivate. [Now rare.]

Concerning the tillage of the Island they made answer, moreover, that no part of it was plowed or laboured.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 129.

Labouring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop.

Milton, P. L., xii. 18.

Diodorus Siculus states that the Celtiberians divided their land annually among individuals, to be laboured for the use of the public.

Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 310.

3. To produce by labor; make or work out with effort; expend labor on; strive for. [Archaic.]

The artificer and art you might command,

To labour arms for Troy. Dryden, Æneid, viii. 525.

The largest mantle her rich wardrobes hold,

Most priz'd for art, and labour'd o'er with gold.

Pope, Iliad, vi. 114.

No time will be lost to labour your return.

Walpole, Letters, II. 432.

4. To urge; labor with.

He hath been laboured by his nearest kinsfolk and friends in Germany to have left the States, . . . but he would not.

Quoted in Motley's United Netherlands, I.

5. To beat; belabor.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,

And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.

Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iii. 668.

labor² (lā-bōr'), n. [Sp., lit. labor: see *labor*¹, n.] A Mexican land-measure, equal to 177 acres.

A labor, in Mexican law, is composed of one million square varas, that is to say one thousand varas on each side. Hall, Mexican Law, p. 104.

laborant (lab'ō-rant), n. [L. laboran(t)-, pp. of laborare, labor, work: see *labor*¹, v.] One who labors; a workman; specifically, a working chemist.

Then we caused the laborant with an iron rod dexterously to stir the kindled part of the nitre.

Boyle, Works, I. 604.

laboratory (lab'ō-rā-tō-ri), n.; pl. laboratories (-riz). [= F. laboratoire = Sp. Pg. It. laboratorio, < ML. laboratorium, a place for labor or work, < L. laborare, labor, work: see *labor*¹, v.]

1. A room, building, or workshop especially fitted with suitable apparatus for conducting investigations in any department of science or art, or for elaborating or manufacturing chemical, medicinal, or any similar products: as, a chemical or pharmaceutical laboratory; hence, also, figuratively, any place where or in which similar processes are carried on by natural forces.

Why does the juice which flows into the stomach contain powers which make that bowel the great laboratory, as it is by its situation the recipient of the materials of future nutrition? Paley, Nat. Theol., vii.

The roots of many of these ancient volcanoes have been laid bare. We have been, as it were, admitted into the secrets of these subterranean laboratories of nature.

Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii. 36.

Medical investigation was carried on actively and successfully in all the [Medical] School laboratories, four out of the fifteen subjects relating to human food.

Rep. of Pres. of Harvard College, 1887-8, p. 16.

2. Milit., an establishment for the manufacture of rockets, port-fires, fuses, percussion-caps, quick- and slow-matches, friction-primers, electric primers, etc., designed for military operations. In Great Britain laboratories are in charge of officers of the Royal Artillery; in the United States they are under the officers of the Ordnance Department.

laboratory-forge (lab'ō-rā-tō-ri-fōrj), n. A small and compact forge adapted to laboratory use, as for operations with the blowpipe.

laboratory-furnace (lab'ō-rā-tō-ri-fēr' nās), n. A small and compact form of furnace for the laboratory or workshop, such as the Bunsen-burner furnace or the blast gas-furnace.

labored, laboured (lā'bōrd), p. a. [< labor¹, labour, + -ed².] 1. Laboriously formed; made or done with laborious pains or care.

The third Georgic seems to be the most laboured of them all; there is a wonderful vigour and spirit in the description of the horse and chariot race.

Adisson, Virgil's Georgics.

2. Bearing the marks of constrained or forced effort; not easy, natural, or spontaneous: as, a labored style of composition; a labored painting.

The Curling Hair in tortured Ringlets flows,

Or round the Face in labour'd Order grows.

Gay, The Fan.

laborer, labourer (lā'bōr-ēr), n. [< ME. laborer, labourer, < OF. (a) laboreor, laboreour, laboureur, F. laboureur = Sp. laborador = Pg. lavrador = It. lavoratore, < ML. laborator, a laborer, < L. laborare, labor; (b) OF. also laborier, labourier, < ML. laborarius, a laborer, < L. labor, labor; see labor¹, v.] One who labors or works with body or mind, or both; specifically, one who is engaged in some toilsome physical occupation; in a more restricted sense, one who performs work which requires little skill or special training, as distinguished from a skilled workman; in the narrowest sense, such an unskilled workman engaged in labor other than that of a domestic servant, particularly in husbandry.

And right anon he changede his aray,

And cladde him as a poure labourer.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 551.

When down he came like an old o'ergrown oak,

His huge root hewn up by the labourer's stroke.

Drayton, David and Goliath.

The number of useful and productive laborers is everywhere in proportion to the quantity of capital stock which is employed in setting them to work, and to the particular way in which it is so employed.

Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations, I, Int.

As year by year the labourer tills

His wonted glebe, or lops the glades.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, ci.

laboring, labouring (lā'bōr-ing), n. [Verbal n. of labor¹, v.] 1. Toil; exertion; effort.

Mr. Winthrop was chosen governour again, though some laboring had been, by some of the elders and others, to have changed. Winthrop, Hist. New England, l. 360.

2t. Tillage; cultivation.

In labouring of lands, is hys [Virgil's] Bucoliques [fig- ured].

Spenser, Shep. Cal., October, Glosse.

laboringly, labouringly (lā'bōr-ing-li), adv. In a laboring manner; with difficulty: as, to breathe laboringly.

laborious (lā-bō'ri-us), a. [= F. laborieux = Pr. laborios = Sp. Pg. It. laborioso, < L. laboriosus (LL. also labosus), full of labor, toilsome, < labor, labor; see labor¹, n.] 1. Requiring much labor, exertion, or perseverance; toilsome; not easy: as, laborious duties; a laborious undertaking.

With what compulsion and laborious flight

We sunk thus low. Milton, P. L., ii. 80.

2. Using exertion; practising labor; diligent in work or service; assiduous: as, a laborious husbandman or mechanic; a laborious minister or pastor.

Shall these amend thee, who are themselves laborious in evil doings? Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

3. Characterized by labor or effort; marked by or manifesting labor.

Their very abstinence and laborious excuses confess it was foul and faulty. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), p. 875.

Laborious orient ivory sphere in sphere.

Tennyson, Princess, Prol.

=Syn. 1. Difficult, arduous, wearisome, fatiguing, onerous.—2. Industrious, painstaking, active, hard-working.

laboriously (lā-bō'ri-us-li), adv. In a laborious manner; with labor, toil, or difficulty.

laboriousness (lā-bō'ri-us-nes), n. 1. The quality of being laborious or attended with toil; toilsomeness; difficulty.—2. Diligence; habitual assiduity.

Labour or pain is commonly reckoned an ingredient of industry; and laboriousness is a name signifying it.

Barrow, Works, III. xviii.

laborless, labourless (lā'bōr-less), a. [< labor¹, n., + -less.] Not requiring arduous effort; not laborious; easily done. [Rare.]

They intend not your precise abstinence from any light and labourless work.

Brerewood, On the Sabbath (1630), p. 48.

labor-market (lā'bōr-mār'ket), n. The supply of unemployed labor considered with reference to the demand for it.

laborous (lā'bōr-us), a. [< labor¹, n., + -ous.] An obsolete variant of laborious.

With very trael, and with laborous paines,

Alwaies in trouble and in tediousness.

Wyatt, Complaint upon Lone.

laborously (lā'bōr-us-li), adv. Laboriously.

He [Julius Cæsar] laborously and studiously discussed controversies. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 10.

labor-pains (lā'bōr-pānz), n. pl. The pains of childbirth.

labor-saving (lā'bōr-sā'ving), a. Saving labor; adapted to supersede or diminish the labor of men: as, a labor-saving machine.—Labor-saving furniture, in printing. See furniture.

laborsome, laboursome (lā'bōr-sum), a. [< labor¹, n., + -some.] 1t. Made with great labor and diligence.

He hath . . . wrung from me my slow leave,

By laboursome petition. Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 59.

2. Apt to labor or to pitch and roll, as a ship in a heavy sea. Hamersly.

labor-time (lā'bōr-tim), n. A quantity of labor reckoned in units of time.

The labor-time which we take as the measure of value is the time required to produce a commodity under the normal social conditions of production with the average degree of skill and intensity of labour. Thus labour is both the source and the measure of value.

Encyc. Brit., XXII. 212.

labor-union (lā'bōr-ū'nyon), n. A union or society of workmen for the purpose of mutual support and encouragement; a trades-union.

labor-yard (lā'bōr-yārd), n. An adjunct to a charitable lodging-house, or to a workhouse, where wood-sawing or other labor is done.

labra¹, n. An incorrect form of labrum. Shak., M. W. of W., i. 1. 166.

labra², n. Plural of labrum.

Labracidæ (lā-bras'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Labrax (Labrac-) + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Labrax: by most ichthyologists regarded as a subfamily of Serranidæ. See Labracine.

Labracinæ (lab-rā-si'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Labrax (Labrac-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Serranidæ, typified by the genus Labrax, having 2 dorsal fins, the first with 9 spines, and a short anal with 3 spines. It includes the common bass of Europe, the striped-bass of North America, and related species. See cut under Labrax.

Labracine (lab'rā-sin), a. and n. [< Labrax (Labrac-) + -inæ.] I. a. Pertaining to the Labracinæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the subfamily Labracinæ.

Labrador duck, falcon, etc. See duck, etc.

Labrador feldspar. Same as labradorite.

Labrador hornblende. Same as hypersthene.

Labradorite (lab'rā-dōr-it), n. [< Labrador (see def.) + -ite².] A lime-soda feldspar (see feldspar), one of the species intermediate between the lime feldspar, anorthite, and the soda feldspar, albite, but more closely allied to the former. It is a common constituent of igneous rocks, especially of those of the basaltic type. It is rarely found crystallized, but usually in masses, and these often show a brilliant change of colors; on this account it is sometimes used as an ornamental stone. The finest specimens come from the coast of Labrador, whence the name.

labradoritic (lab'rā-dōr-it'ik), a. [< labradorite + -ic.] Pertaining to or containing labradorite.

labral (lā'brāl), a. [< labrum + -al.] In entom., of or pertaining to the labrum.

Labrax (lā'braks), n. [NL., < Gr. λάβραξ, a fish, the sea-wolf, < λάβρος, furious, fierce, greedy.] 1. The typical genus of Labracinæ and of La- bracidæ, including the labrax of the ancient Greeks, and the lupus of the ancient Romans or the sea-bass of the English, L. lupus, also called sea-dace and sea-perch. Some related fishes of the United States, as the rockfish or striped-bass and the common white perch, formerly placed in this genus, are now referred to other genera. Also called Dicentrarchus.

2. [l. c.] A fish of this genus.

labret (lā'bret), n. [< L. labrum, lip, + -et.] A piece of stone, bone, shell, or other material, inserted into the lip or into the cheek near the mouth, which is pierced for the purpose: an ornament or conventional symbol used by many savage races. It is sometimes held fast by the retraction of the edges of the wound, and is sometimes easily removable. Such ornaments often have a religious significance. They have been or are still used in western America, from Peru to the Arctic ocean, and also in Brazil and in central Africa.

labretifery (lā-bre-tif'e-ri), n. [< labret + L. ferre = E. bear¹.] The practice of wearing labrets. [Rare.]

Dr. W. H. Dall then read a paper on . . . "The Geographical Distribution of Labretifery." Science, IV. 345.

labrid (lā'brid), n. A fish of the family Labridæ. Also labridan.

Labridæ (lab'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Labrus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Labrus. Various limits have been assigned to this family. (a) Same as Labroides of Cuvier. (b) In Günther's system of classification, a family of Acanthopterygii pharyngognathæ, having pseudobranchie, three and one half gills, and cycloid scales. Also called Cyclotolidæ. (c) In other systems, fishes of the same type as the last, excepting those without ventral fins (Siphonognathidæ) and those with teeth imbricated upon and coalesced with the jaws (Scaridæ). It includes more than 400 marine fishes, its representatives being very numerous in the tropical and warm seas. The best-known are the wrasses of England, the tautog or blackfish and cunner of the eastern United States, and the fathead of California. Also called Labroideæ, Labroidæ. See cut under Labrus.

labridan (lab'ri-dan), n. Same as labrid.

labrinthi, n. A former spelling of labryinth.

labroid (lā'broid), a. and n. [< Labrus + -oid.]

I. a. Pertaining to the Labridæ or Labroidæ, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the family Labridæ or of the superfamily Labroidæ.

Labroidæ (lā-broi'dē-jī), n. pl. [NL., < Labrus + -oidæ.] A superfamily of acanthopterygian fishes, equivalent to the Labroides of Cuvier and Labridæ of Günther, comprising the families Labridæ (c), Siphonognathidæ, and Scaridæ.

Labroides (lā-broi'dēz), n. pl. [NL., < Labrus + Gr. εἶδος, form.] In Cuvier's ichthyological system, the fourteenth family of acanthopterygian fishes, with oblong and scaly body, a single dorsal supported in front by spines (each of which is generally furnished with membranous appendages), jaws covered with fleshy lips, the lower pharyngeals united, and the intestinal canal with only two very small cæca, or none.

Labrosauridæ (lab-rō-sā'ri-dē), n. pl. [< Labrosaurus + -idæ.] A family of carnivorous dinosaurs, typified by the genus Labrosaurus, with cavernous opisthocelous anterior vertebrae, slender pubes, of which the anterior margins are united, and elongated metatarsal bones.

Labrosaurus (lab-rō-sā'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. λαβρός, furious, fierce, greedy, + σαῦρος, a lizard.] The typical genus of Labrosauridæ.

labrose (lā'brōs or lā-brōs'), a. [< L. labrosus, with large lips, < labrum, lip; see labrum.] Having thick lips.

labrum (lā'brum), n.; pl. labra (-brā). [L., a lip, edge, margin, akin to labium, a lip; see labium.] In zool., a lip or lip-like part. Specifically—

(a) In entom., the so-called upper lip of an insect (the lower being the labium): a plate lying in front of the clypeus, and terminating the upper part of the head anteriorly. It generally has a vertical motion, but may be immovably attached. The labrum covers and partly conceals the organs of the mouth; it is found in most insects, but in Diptera it is partly or wholly aborted. Illiger called this organ the clypeus, applying the term labrum to a narrow posterior division of the upper lip generally known as the appendicula. See cuts under Hymenoptera and Insecta. (b) In Crustacea and Arachnida, a lobe forming the upper border of the mouth. In the spiders this lobe is very small, and the term labrum is often applied incorrectly to the labium, or large shield forming the floor of the mouth. See cut under Daphnia. (c) In conch., the outer lip of a univalve shell, the inner lip being called the labium. See cut under univalve.—Forcipate labrum. See forcipate.

Labrus (lā'brus), n. [NL. (Artemi), < L. labrum, lip; see labrum.] The typical genus of Labridæ: so called from the thick fleshy lips. Very different limits have been assigned to it. The old ichthyologists referred many very diversiform species to it, but it has been successively restricted till it is now limited to the wrasses of Europe and contiguous coasts of Africa.

laburnine (lā-bēr'nin), n. [< Laburnum + -ine².] A poisonous alkaloid found together with cytisin in the seeds of the common laburnum, to which their medicinal properties are partly due.

Wrasse-fish (Labrus maculatus).

laburnum (lā-bēr'num), n. [< L. laburnum, the laburnum.] 1. A small leguminous tree, Cytisus Laburnum, a native of the Alps and neighboring mountains, much cultivated for the beauty of its pendulous racemes of yellow pea-shaped flowers. Its seeds contain two poisonous alkaloids, cytisin and laburnine. The heart-wood is dark-colored, coarse-grained, but hard and durable, and much in demand among cabinet-makers and turners, whence the names ebony of the Alps and false ebony given to it. Also called goldchain and bean trefoil.

Laburnum, dropping-wells of fire.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxiii.

2. One of numerous other species of the same genus, or of some similar plants of other genera. The Scotch laburnum of the gardens, with larger leaves and flowers, is Cytisus alpinus. The evergreen or Nepál laburnum is Piptanthus Nepalensis. The New Zealand laburnum is either of the two varieties of Sophora tetraptera.

labyrinth (lab'i-rinth), n. [Formerly also labirinth; = F. labirynth = Sp. labirinto = Pg. labirintho, labyrintho = It. labirinto, < L. labyrinthus, < Gr. λαβύρινθος, a structure having many intricate passages, a maze, prob. < λαίρα (also written, less prop., λάβρα), an alley, lane: see laura.] 1. An intricate combination of passages running into one another from different directions, in which it is difficult or impossible to find the way from point to point, or to reach the place of exit from the interior, without a clue or guide; a maze. The name was anciently given to an edifice with a complicated system of passages connecting a great number of chambers. At the present day it is used especially of a geometrical arrangement of paths or alleys between high hedges in a park or garden, which lead confusedly back and forth, many of them ending in a cul-de-sac, but, when correctly followed, terminating in a central space, often occupied by a pavilion or the like. The most authentic and celebrated ancient labyrinth was that in Egypt near Arsinoë or Crocodilopolis on Lake Mæris, having 3,000 rooms in two tiers, one of which was subterranean. The Cretan labyrinth, ascribed to Dædalus, was the abode of the fabled monster Minotaur. In medieval churches the labyrinth, formed of tiles or slabs of different colors in the pavement usually of the nave, was a frequent feature. Such labyrinths were formed on a square, circular, or octagonal plan, and were sometimes of such extent that it required 2,000 steps or more to follow their course. These labyrinths were considered emblematic of Christ's progress from Jerusalem to Calvary, and were followed with certain forms of prayer by the pious on their knees, either as a penance or in lieu of a pilgrimage. A number of them survive, as in the cathedrals of Chartrea and Bayeux, France; but many of the most important have been destroyed, for the reason that, having become mere objects of curiosity, they furnished occasion for disturbance of the religious services. The best-known modern labyrinths are that of the garden of Versailles in France and "the maze" of Hampton Court near London.

Labyrinth.

He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles; The many mazes through the which he goes Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 684.

Hence—2. Any confused complication of objects, lines, ideas, etc.; any thing or subject characterized by intricate turnings or windings; a perplexity.

No thread is left else To guide us from this labyrinth of mischief. Fletcher, Double Marriage, II. 3.

Whereby men wander in the darke, and in labyrinthes of error. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 32.

The ingenuous Reader, without further amusing himselfe in the labyrinth of controversall antiquity, may come the speediest way to see the truth vindicated. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst., Pref.

Though you cannot see when you take one step what will be the next, yet follow truth, justice, and plain dealing, and never fear their leading you out of the labyrinth. Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 286.

In the elephant, the porpoise, the higher apes, and man, the cerebral surface appears a perfect labyrinth of tortuous foldings. Huxley, Man's Place in Nature, p. 114.

3. The internal ear; the essential organ of hearing. It consists of a series of communicating cavities in the petrous portion of the temporal bone, called the osseous labyrinth, and of the membranous labyrinth contained in it. The osseous labyrinth consists of the cavity known as the vestibule, the three semicircular canals, and the cochlea. The vestibule communicates with the tympanum by the fenestra ovalis, which is closed by a membrane and the foot of the stapes. The fenestra rotunda opens from the beginning of the cochlea into the tympanum. It is closed by a membrane. See ear, cochlea.

4. In ornith., same as tympanum, 4.—5. In mining, a form of apparatus used in concentrating or dressing slimes. It consists of a series of troughs through which the muddy water from the dressing-floors is made to flow, the particles of ore held in suspension in the water settling themselves according to size and specific gravity. This form of apparatus was formerly much more important than it now is.

6. A long chamber filled with deflectors or diaphragms placed alternately, used to cool and condense the fumes of mercury, other vapors, or smoke.—Labyrinth fret, or labyrinth ornament, in arch. See fret.—Membranous labyrinth, a complex membranous sac contained in the osseous labyrinth, to the walls of which it is loosely attached. It consists of the utriculus with the three semicircular canals, the ductus and saccus endolymphaticus, the sacculus, canalis reuniens, and canalis cochleæ. It contains endolymph, and is surrounded by perilymph. To it are distributed the fibers of the auditory nerve.

labyrinth (lab'i-rinth), v. t. [< labyrinth, n.] To shut up, inclose, or entangle in or as in a maze or labyrinth. [Rare.]

To entangle, trammel up, and snare Your soul in mine, and labyrinth you there. Keats, Lamia, II.

labyrinthal (lab-i-rin'thal), a. [< labyrinth + -al.] Same as labyrinthian.

The labyrinthal ice mazes of the Arctic. Arc. Cruise of the Corwin, 1881, p. 30.

labyrinthi, n. Plural of labyrinthus, 1. labyrinthian, labyrinthean (lab-i-rin'thi-an, -thē-an), a. [< L. labyrinthēus, *< Gr. λαβύρινθεος, pertaining to a labyrinth, < λαβύρινθος, labyrinth: see labyrinth.] Winding; intricate; perplexed. Now generally labyrinthine.

Instrument to his Labyrinthian projects. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 25.

Mark how the labyrinthian turns they take, The circles intricate, and mystic maze. Faung, Night Thoughts, ix. 1181.

labyrinthibranchiate (lab-i-rin'thi-brang'ki-āt), a. [< Gr. λαβύρινθος, labyrinth, + βράγχια, gills, + -ate.] Having labyrinthine gills; specifically, of or pertaining to the Labyrinthibranchii.

Labyrinthibranchii (lab-i-rin'thi-brang'ki-i), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λαβύρινθος, labyrinth, + βράγχια, gills.] 1. In Sir John Richardson's ichthyological system, a family of acanthopterygian fishes: same as Labyrinthici or Anabantidae.—2. In Günther's ichthyological system, the sixteenth division of Acanthopterygii: fishes having the body compressed, oblong or elevated, scales of moderate size, and a superbranchial organ in a cavity accessory to the gill-cavity for the purpose of retaining water. It includes the Labyrinthici or Anabantidae and the Luciocephalidae.

labyrinthic (lab-i-rin'thik), a. [= F. labyrinthique, < L. labyrinthicus, < labyrinthus, labyrinth: see labyrinth.] 1. Like a labyrinth.—2. Specifically, in zool., same as labyrinthodont. Mivart, Elem. Anat., p. 275.

labyrinthical (lab-i-rin'thi-kal), a. [< labyrinth + -al.] Same as labyrinthic.

Labyrinthici (lab-i-rin'thi-si), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. labyrinthicus: see labyrinthic.] In Günther's ichthyological system, a family of Acanthopterygii labyrinthibranchii, having dorsal or anal spines present, sometimes in great numbers. It is equivalent to the family Anabantidae.

labyrinthiform (lab-i-rin'thi-fōrm), a. [< L. labyrinthus, labyrinth, + forma, form.] 1. Having the form of a labyrinth; intricate.—2. In ichth., having labyrinthine gills.—3. In bot., characterized by intricate and sinuous lines, as in Dadalia.

labyrinthine (lab-i-rin'thin), a. [< labyrinth + -ine.] Pertaining to or like a labyrinth; intricate; involved.

Labyrinthodon (lab-i-rin'thō-don), n. [NL., < Gr. λαβύρινθος, labyrinth, + ὄδους (ὄδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. The typical genus of Labyrintho- dontida, containing certain fossil amphibians whose teeth have the enamel folded and sunk inward and are labyrinthine in structure, whence the name. Remains referred to this genus have been found in the Carboniferous, Permian, and Triassic formations. The name has been used with much latitude.

Footprints of Labyrinthodon.

2. [l. c.] A member of the genus Labyrinthodon or order Labyrinthodontia; any labyrinthodont.

labyrinthodont (lab-i-rin'thō-dont), a. and n.

[< Gr. λαβύρινθος, labyrinth, + ὄδους (ὄδοντ-) = E. tooth.] 1. a. 1. Having an intricate or labyrinthic structure, as a tooth.—2.

Having teeth of labyrinthic structure; specifically, pertaining to the Labyrinthodontia, or having their characters.

II. n. 1. A labyrinthodont animal; a member of the order Labyrinthodontia.

Labyrinthodonta (lab-i-rin'thō-don'tā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Labyrinthodon, q. v.] Same as Labyrinthodontia.

Labyrinthodontia (lab-i-rin'thō-don'shi-ā), n. pl. [NL.: see Labyrinthodonta.] In Owen's classification, the thirteenth order of the fourth subclass of Hamatocrya, named from the genus Labyrinthodon, containing fossil amphibians having "teeth rendered complex by undulation and side branches of the converging folds of enamel, whence the name." These animals had the head defended, as in Ganocephala, by a sculptured casque; two occipital condyles; divided dentigerous vomer; and ossified amphicoelous vertebral centra. The order has been divided into ten suborders, and is now broken up, its components being referred to several separate orders of the class Amphibia. The labyrinthodonts were large, sometimes huge, aquatic animals, some exceeding 6 feet in length, with four limbs, belonging to the same class as toads, frogs, and salamanders, of very diverse lizard-like forms, and incapable of leaping. By some modern herpetologists, as Cope, the name is restricted to a suborder, referred to the order Stegocephali, and containing the families Baphetidae and Anthrocoeuridae. Also Labyrinthodonta, Labyrinthontes.

labyrinthodontian (lab-i-rin'thō-don'shi-an), a. [< Labyrinthodontia + -an.] Of or pertaining to the Labyrinthodontia; labyrinthodont.

labyrinthodontid (lab-i-rin'thō-don'tid), n. One of the Labyrinthodontidae.

Labyrinthodontidae (lab-i-rin'thō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Labyrinthodon(t) + -idae.] A family of Labyrinthodontia, exemplified by the genus Labyrinthodon in a restricted sense.

Labyrinthula (lab-i-rin'thū-lī), n. [NL. (Cienkowski, 1867), dim. of L. labyrinthus: see labyrinth.] 1. The typical genus of Labyrinthulida, containing such species as L. vitellina, a marine form found on algae, growing in patches visible to the naked eye.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Labyrinthulidae (lab'i-rin'thū'li-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Labyrinthula + -idae.] A family of low filose protozoans, represented by the genus Labyrinthula, and to which the genus Chlamydomyxa is also referred. These organisms consist of irregular heaps of ovoid nucleated cells, the protoplasm of which extends itself as a branching network or labyrinth of fine threads. Also called Labyrinthulidea, and variously rated.

labyrinthus (lab-i-rin'thus), n. [NL. use of L. labyrinthus, a labyrinth: see labyrinth.] 1. Pl. labyrinthi (-thi). The labyrinth of the ear.—2. [cap.] In zool., a genus of heliceid mollusks.

lac¹, n. A Middle English form of *lack*¹. lac², lakh (lak), n. [Formerly also laque, after F., and laca, as NL., sometimes lak, or lack; = F. laque = Sp. Pg. laca = It. lacca; NL. lacca = NGr. λάκη; = D. lak = G. lack = Sw. lack = Dan. lak; < Pers. lak, luk = Hind. lākḥ = Canarese lāk, lac, sealing-wax, < Skt. lākshā, the lac-insect, so called in ref. to the assumed number of insects in a nest, < laksha, a hundred thousand: see *lac*³. Cf. *lake*², *lucker*², lacquer.]

Labyrinthodon salamandroides (restored).

1. A resinous incrustation deposited on the twigs of various trees in India and southern Asia by the lac-insect, Carteria lacca. The substance is formed by the mature female, from which it exudes, inclosing the eggs and keeping them attached to the branch. At the proper time the twigs are broken off by the native collectors, and exposed to the sun to kill the insect and to dry the lac. These twigs, with the attached resin, inclosed insects, and ova, constitute the stick-lac. Lac is a dark-red transparent resin, with a crystalline fracture, and bitter in taste. It yields only a part of its coloring matter to water, but borax solution exercises a special solvent power upon it. It is still much used in the East for dyeing woolen goods and leather, producing scarlet shades, not so brilliant as cochineal, but somewhat faster. Seed-lac is obtained from stick-lac by removing the resinous concretions from the twigs and triturating with water. The greater part of the coloring matter is dissolved, and the granular portion which remains after drying is the seed-lac. Shell-lac or shellac is obtained by melting the seed-lac in cotton-cloth bags, straining, and allowing it to drop on to sticks or leaves. In this way the resin spreads into thin plates, in which state it is found in commerce. It is used in the manufacture of spirit-varnishes and sealing-wax, and as a stiffening for hats. Button-lac differs from shellac only in form. In its melted state it is dropped into disk forms three inches in diameter and one sixth of an inch thick. Lac-dye is imported from India, and is probably prepared by extracting the coloring matter from stick-lac with a weak alkali to which alumina has been added. It is used like cochineal for dyeing scarlet on woolsens, but has only half as much tinctorial strength. Lac-lake is obtained by treating stick-lac with caustic soda and alum. It has a limited use as an artists' color, producing results similar to cochineal carmines, though less brilliant. The extraction of the color from the resin leaves the shellac of commerce. The general term lac is extended to the similar secretion of any lac-insect.

2†. Lacquer.

Alum and lacque, and clouded tortolshell.

Dyer, The Fleece, iv.

Coral lac, gold lac, etc. See the adjectives.—Lac varnish. Same as lacquer.—Lac water-varnish, a varnish made by dissolving pale shellac in hot water, with a little borax. It combines well as a menstruum with water-colors and inks, and forms an excellent varnish for prints. It dries transparent and impervious to moisture.

lac³, lakh (lak), n. [Also written lak; < Hind. lak, also lakh, lakh, < Skt. laksha, a hundred thousand, a mark, token.] The sum of 100,000, usually of rupees. The usual pointing for sums of Indian money rising above a lac is with a comma after the number of lacs: thus, Rs. 39,52,000 (i. e. thirty lacs and fifty-two thousand) or Rs. 49,98,810, instead of the equivalent 3,952,000 and 4,998,810 rupees.

lac argenti (lak är-gen'ti), n. [L., milk of silver: lac, milk; argenti, gen. of argentum, silver.] In alchemy, freshly precipitated silver chlorid.

laccat, n. [NL.] Same as lac². Hakluyt.

laccate (lak'at), a. [As if from NL. laccatus, < lacca, lac: see lac².] In bot., appearing as if varnished; covered with a coat resembling sealing-wax.

lacchet, v. and n. A Middle English form of latch.

laccic (lak'sik), a. [lac² (NL. lacca) + -ic.] Pertaining to lac, or produced from it. [Rare.]

laccine (lak'sin), n. [lac² (NL. lacca) + -ine.] A peculiar substance obtainable from lac, insoluble in water, alcohol, or ether.

laccinic (lak-sin'ik), a. [lac² + -ic.] Related to or derived from lac. Also laccanic.—Laccinic acid, a crystallizable dibasic acid which is essentially the coloring matter of lac-dye and closely resembles carminic acid in its reactions.

laccolith (lak'ō-lith), n. [Gr. λάκκος, a pit (with ref. to crater) (see lake¹), + λίθος, stone.] A name given by G. K. Gilbert to masses of lava which, when rising from below, have not found their way to the surface, but have spread out laterally, and formed a lenticular aggregation, thereby lifting the rocks above into dome-shaped forms.

laccolithic (lak'ō-lith'ik), a. [lac² + -ic.] Pertaining to, or resembling in form, a laccolith.

Lacopteris (la-kop'te-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. λάκκος, a pit, + πτερίς, a fern, < πτερόν = E. feather.] A genus of fossil ferns established by Presl in 1838, and occurring through the whole range of the Jurassic in Europe. It is distinguished by its digitately pinnate frond, ovate or linear-lanceolate pinnules, well-marked median nerve, and dichotomous secondary nervation. It is closely related to Selenocarpus, but in that genus the sori are semilunar in form, while in Lacopteris they are circular, with a depressed center. The digitate frond of Lacopteris resembles that of the genus Mattonia, and its mode of fructification is similar to that of Mertensia.

lac-dye (lak'di), n. See lac², 1.

lace (lās), n. [ME. las, laas, < OF. las, laz, lags, F. lacs = Pr. lac, laz; Latz = Sp. lazo = Pg. lago = It. laccio, noose, snare, string, < L. laqueus, noose, snare; perhaps < lacere, allure: see allect, elicit, illect. From the L. laqueus are also ult. E. latchet and lasso.] †. A noose; snare; net.

Lo, alle these folk laught were in hire [Venus's] las,
Til they for wo ful often sayde allas!
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1093.

2. A cord or string used in binding or fastening; specifically, a cord or string used for drawing together opposite edges, as of a corset, a bodice, a shoe, or the like, by being passed out and in through holes and fastened.

For, striving more, the more in laces strong Himselfe he tide. Spenser, Muioptomos, l. 427.

O cut my lace in sunder, that my pent heart
May have some scope to beat.

Shak., Rich. III., iv. 1, 34.

3. Hence, any ornamental cord or braid used as an edging or trimming, especially when made of gold or silver thread. See gold lace, below.—4. A fabric of fine threads of linen, silk, or cotton, whether twisted or plaited together or worked like embroidery, or made by a combination of these processes, or (as at the present time) by machinery. Pillow- or bobbin-lace is made, by a process intermediate between weaving and plaiting, from a number of threads which are kept in their places by the weight of the bobbins attached to them, and are woven and plaited together by hand. Needle-point lace is really embroidery, but is done upon loose threads which the worker has laid upon a drawn pattern, and which have no connection with each other and no stability until the needlework holds them together. (See bobbin-lace, needle-point lace, below.) Laces is known, according to kind, by many different names. See phrases below.

No! let a charming chintz and Brussels lace Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.

Pope, Moral Essays, i. 243.

5†. Spirits added to coffee or other beverage.

He is forced every morning to drink his dish of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than lace to it. Spectator, No. 488.

6†. A stringer; beam. Halliwel.—Albisola lace, bobbin-lace made at Albisola, near Savona, in Italy, usually in free designs of scrollwork.—Alençon lace, a needle-point lace named from the city of Alençon in France. It is the only important French lace, except the Argentan, which is not made with bobbins. The fine lace of the eighteenth century was made entirely in small pieces, which were sewed together afterward by a stitch called assemblage, and not by that known as point de raccroc, the seam following the outlines of the pattern for the sake of concealment. This lace sometimes has horse-hairs worked in along the edge to give firmness to the coronnet: this was made necessary by the use of it for the towering head-dresses of the eighteenth century.

Alençon lace is usually considered as indistinguishable from Argentan; but it has more commonly a needle-made réseau or net. See Argentan lace.—Antwerp lace, a bobbin-lace resembling early Alençon, having a so-called pot introduced into the design—that is, a semblance of a vase or basket constantly repeated. See pot-lace, below.—Application-lace, a lace made by sewing flowers or sprigs, which may be needle-made or bobbin-made, upon a bobbin-lace ground; especially, a Brussels lace of this kind, the most commonly made and the most important of all the Brussels laces.—Appliqué lace. Same as application-lace.—Argentan lace, a needle-point lace usually considered as indistinguishable from Alençon lace, but often bolder and larger in pattern, with the solid parts or toilé flatter and more compact. It is also distinguished in some cases by a ground of hexagonally arranged brides.—Arras lace, a white bobbin-lace made at Arras in France, very strong, and inexpensive because of the simplicity of the pattern. The ground is that known as Lisle ground.—Aurillac lace, a bobbin-lace made at Aurillac, department of Cantal, France. It was originally a close-woven solid lace, having much toilé, and resembling the guipure of Genoa and Flanders; later it resembled point d'Angleterre.—Auvergne lace, lace made in Auvergne. It is most commonly pure bobbin-lace, but of many different makes and patterns, as nearly all celebrated laces are imitated in this region.—Ave Maria lace, narrow lace used for edging. See Dieppe lace.—Baby lace, a narrow lace used for edging, especially that made in Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire, England, in very simple patterns.—Basket-lace, a lace mentioned in inventories of 1580, probably a braid or la-cing so woven or plaited as to resemble basketwork.—Bayeux lace. (a) A modern bobbin-lace made at Bayeux in Normandy, especially that made in close imitation of rose-point. (b) A black-silk lace, in demand because made in unusually large pieces, as for shawls, fichus, etc.—Beaded lace. See beaded.—Beggar's lace. Same as guipure lace. Mrs. Bury Paltiser. [Eng.]—Biliment lace. See biliment.—Bisette lace, a French peasant-lace made in narrow pieces, coarse and simple in design. The name has now become identified with narrow bordering-lace of small value.—Bobbin-lace, lace of which the threads are twisted or plaited together, without the use of the needle. (See def. 3.) When the whole width of a large piece of lace is carried on together, the number of bobbins and of pins is very great and the work very expensive; but it is customary to work each branch or scroll separately, these being then tacked together on the ground by crocheting.—Bobbin-net lace, a kind of application-lace in which the pattern is applied upon a ground of bobbin-net or tulle.—Bone point-lace, lace that has no regular ground of meshes. The name is of no definite significance, and has no connection with bone-lace.—Border lace, lace of any sort made in long narrow pieces having a footing on one side, the other edge being usually vandyked, purled, or the like.—Bourg-Argental lace, a blond-lace made in the latter part of the eighteenth century in Dauphiny, and considered of exceptional beauty, the silk used being especially fitted for the purpose.—Bride-lace, lace of which the ground is wholly composed of brides or bars, without a réseau or net.—Broad lace. See broad.—Brussels lace, lace made at and near Brussels in Belgium; especially, a lace of great fineness, of which the pattern has less relief than Alençon, and the very fine net ground never has picots. At the present time Brussels lace is especially an application-lace, having needle-point sprigs and flowers sewed to a bobbin-ground, or in some cases bobbin-made or flat flowers applied to a needle-made ground or to tulle. In trade the name is often given to fine laces, no matter where made or of what pattern. Compare point de gaze.—Buckingham lace, a lace made originally in England, and of two kinds: (a) Buckingham trolley (which see, under truly), and (b) a lace having a point ground, which is peculiar in having the pattern outlined with thicker threads, these threads being weighted by bobbins larger and heavier than the rest.—Cadiz lace, a kind of needle-point lace, considered as a variety of Brussels lace.—Carnival lace. See carnival.—Cartisane lace, guipure or passement made with cartisane, which is parchment or vellum in thin strips or small rolls, covered with silk, gold thread, or the like. See guipure.—Caterpillar point-lace. See caterpillar.—Chain-lace, a braid or passement so worked as to suggest links of a chain, used in the seventeenth century. It was made of colored silk, and also of gold and silver thread.—Chantilly lace, a kind of blond-lace of which the typical sort has a ground of Alençon réseau or net and the flowers in openwork instead of solid or mat. It is made of one kind of silk throughout, which is always grenadine or non-lustrous silk, so that black lace of this kind is often taken for thread-lace. Much Chantilly lace is made in the department of Calvados in France.—Chenille lace. See chenille.—Cluny lace, a kind of net-lace in which the stitch is darned upon a square-net background. The patterns used are generally antique and quaint, conventionalized birds, animals, and flowers; and the modern work of the kind is quite similar to that of the seventeenth century. A glazed thread is sometimes introduced in the pattern as an outline or center line.—Cordover lace, a kind of filling used in the pattern of ancient and modern point-lace.—Cork lace, Irish lace in general, especially of the older sorts, made principally in the city of Cork before the recent extension of this industry in Ireland.—Cretan lace. See Cretan.—Crewel lace. See crewel.—Crochet lace, lace made with the crochet-hook, or of which the pattern is made in this way but applied to a bobbin- or machine-made net. It resembles needle-point, although not equalling its finest kinds.—Crown lace, early lace, guipure, cut-work, and the like, in which royal crowns are introduced as part of the pattern. It appears first in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.—Dalecarlian lace. See Dalecarlian.—Damascene lace. See damascene.—Darned lace, a name given to lace of any kind which has a netted ground upon which the pattern is applied in needlework. Also called ilet guipure. (See def. 3, *ground*¹, n., 10 (f), guipure, and spider-work.—Devonshire lace, lace made in Devonshire, England, especially that made in close imitation of Honiton.—Diamond lace, passement and gimp often mentioned in texts of the seventeenth century, apparently a silver or gold passement having lozenges for the chief element in the design.—Dieppe lace, a fine point-lace resembling Valenciennes, made at Dieppe in France. In the eighteenth century there were several varieties of Dieppe lace, bearing the popular names of Ave Maria lace and dentelle à la Vierge, the latter of which had a regular ground of squares composed of small meshes alternating with open squares, upon which ground the pattern, usually very simple, was applied in close-stitch or close-work.—Dresden point-lace. Same as Saxony lace.—Duchesse lace, a variety of pillow-lace, originally made in Belgium, and containing a great deal of the raised work, volants, and the like, which are used in the somewhat similar Honiton lace.—Dunkirk lace, a pillow-lace made in the seventeenth century, of which the more important kind was a close imitation of Mechlin, and was perhaps sold as such.—Dutch lace. See Dutch.—Ecu lace. See ecu.—English point-lace. (a) A bobbin-lace very much admired in the eighteenth century, often mentioned in French documents of the time under the name of point d'Angleterre. It is generally said to have been of Flemish make, and to have been called "English" by English dealers in order to evade the law. Some writers, however, affirm its English origin. (b) At the present day, the finest Brussels lace, where needle-point sprigs are applied to Brussels bobbin-ground. See application-lace, above.—False Valenciennes lace, (a) Lace resembling Valenciennes, but without the true Valenciennes réseau. The surface and general character of the pattern closely resemble those of the true Valenciennes. (b) A general name for Valenciennes made in Belgium.—Flat point-lace, point-lace which has no raised work or embroidery in relief upon it.—Flemish point-lace, needle-point lace made in Flanders, especially the delicate sprigs used in Brussels lace.—Fuseau lace. [F. fuseau, a bobbin.] Same as bobbin-lace.—Genoa lace, originally, gold and silver lace, for which Genoa was celebrated in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; at the present time, especially, lace made from vegetable fibers such as the rice, and also macramé lace.—Gold lace, a kind of network, braid, or gimp, made anciently of gold or silver-gilt wire, and in modern times of silk, thread, or cord covered by thin flat ribbons of gold wound around it. Gold lace is used chiefly as a decoration for uniforms, liveries, and some church costumes.—Grammont lace, one of two kinds of lace, usually inexpensive and used for shawls and the like: (a) A white pillow-lace, originally made at Grammont in Belgium. (b) A black-silk lace like blond-lace.—Gueuse lace, a thread pillow-lace made in France during the seventeenth century. Also called beggar's lace.—Henriquet lace, a fine stitch or point, used alike in old and in modern needle-point work.—Hollie-point lace. See hollie-point.—Honiton lace, a lace made at Honiton in Devonshire, England, remarkable for the beauty of its figures and sprigs. Honiton application is a lace made by working sprays, flowers, and other parts of a pattern on the lace-pillow and securing them to a net ground made separately. In modern manufacture, hand-made sprays are often sewed upon a machine-made ground. Honiton guipure is a lace of large flower-patterns, with a very open ground, which is generally sold under the name of Honiton lace.—Imitation lace, machine-made lace of any kind. In fineness the imitation often rivals real lace; its chief defect is its mechanical regularity of pattern, which makes the design lifeless and uninteresting.—Jesuit lace, a modern needle-point lace made in Ireland; so called from a tradition concerning the introduction of this manufacture since the famine of 1846.—Knotted lace. See knotted.—Lille lace, lace made at Lille in France, remarkable for its clear and light ground, which is known as fond clair, and is the most beautiful of the single-thread grounds, sometimes ornamented with points d'esprit. Old Lille lace has a peculiarly stiff and formal pattern.—Limerick lace, a kind of needlework upon machine-made net, worked in a tambour-frame.—Macklin lace. Same as Mechlin lace.—Mechlin lace, a bobbin-lace which has the pattern outlined by a flat cord or band, narrow but very distinct. It is usually made in one piece, pattern and ground together. The ground is sometimes a réseau, or net, and when of this character is very varied in pattern, and sometimes formed of brides.—Mignonette lace, a light bobbin-lace with an open ground resembling tulpe, made in narrow strips. Arras and Lille were famous for this in the eighteenth century. Also called menue lace.—Mirecourt lace, lace made in the departments of Vosges and Meurthe-et-Moselle, France. (a) In the seventeenth century, a guipure, more delicate in texture and varied in design than other guipures. (b) At the present day, an application-lace, made of sprigs of bobbin-lace sewed upon grounds often made elsewhere, especially of the Alençon réseau.—Needle-point lace, lace made wholly with the needle. A pattern is first drawn, usually upon parchment; to this parchment is stitched a double piece of linen, and threads are then laid along the main lines of the pattern and sewed lightly down. Then the whole design is carried out, both solid filling and openwork, with delicate stitching, chiefly in the buttonhole-stitch.—Oyah lace, a sort of guipure lace or openwork embroidery made by means of a hook in a fashion similar to crochet. The pattern is often elaborate and in silks of many colors, representing flowers, foliage, etc. It is sometimes in relief.—Parchment-lace, lace in the manufacture of which parchment has been used, whether for the pattern used to guide the worker, as in needle-point lace, or for stiffening the fabric, as in cartisane lace. See point de satin, under point.—Pillow-lace, lace made on a cushion, both pattern and mesh being formed by hand.—Plaited lace, a kind of pillow-lace of simple geometrical design, often made of stout and rigid strands, such as gold thread or even fine braid.—Point-lace. Same as needle-point lace. Many laces and grounds of lace are spoken of as point, but are not necessarily point-lace. See point.—Pot-lace, lace into the pattern of which a sort of vase or deep dish is introduced, or sometimes rather a basket, often having flowers in it. Compare pot-plate.—Powdered lace. (a) Lace of which the ground is strewn with small separate ornaments, whether flowers, or simple sprigs, or mere squares like points d'esprit. (b) Lace which has been whitened. See poister, v. t.—Saxony lace, fine-drawn work embroidered with the needle, greatly in favor in the eighteenth century; in modern times, lace of many kinds made in Saxony, especially an imitation of old Brussels.—Seaming-lace, a narrow openwork braiding, gimp, or insertion, with parallel sides, used for uniting two breadths of linen, instead of sewing them directly the one to the other; a device employed for curtains, cupboard-cloths, etc., and even for some garments, especially in the seventeenth century. The name is applied to a similar fabric when used in other ways, as for edgings.—Silver lace, passement or gimpure a large part or the whole of which is in silver wire, or thread wound with a thin flat ribbon of silver. Compare gold lace.—Spanish lace. (a) Needle-point lace brought from Spanish convents since their dissolution, but thought by some authorities to be of Flemish origin. (b) Cut and drawn work made in convents in Spain, of patterns usually confined to simple sprigs and flowers. (c) A modern black-silk lace with large flower-patterns, mostly of Flemish make. (d) A modern needle-made fabric, the pattern usually in large squares.—Statute lace, a fabric named in inventories of 1581, apparently gimp or passement made in conformity with sumptuary laws as to width and material.—Tambour-lace, a modern kind of lace made with needle-embroidery on machine-made net. It has been made especially in Ireland, and is generally included among Limerick laces.—Tape lace, a lace made with the needle except that a tape or narrow piece of linen is incorporated in the work and forms the chief patterns, the edges of it being often rolled up and stitched so as to form a sort of cordonet. It is in imitation of the reliefs of rose-point.—Thread lace, lace made of linen thread, as distinguished from silk laces, such as blond, and modern cotton lace.—Torchon lace, coarse bobbin-lace, made of stout and rather soft and loosely twisted thread. Most peasant-lace is of this sort, and an imitation of it is largely made by machinery.—Trolley lace. See trolley.—Valenciennes lace, a very durable bobbin-lace having the same kind of thread throughout for both ground and pattern. The pattern and ground are made together by the same hand; and as this involves the use of a great number of threads and bobbins, the price is very high. It is the dearest of all bobbin-laces. During the French revolution the manufacture was almost wholly removed to Belgium, where it still remains.—Ypres lace, a bobbin-lace resembling Valenciennes, sometimes having bolder designs and a rather large lozenge mesh in the ground. (See also blond-lace, bone-lace.)

lace (lās, v.; pret. and pp. laced, ppr. lacing. [< ME. laccen, < OF. lacer, F. lacer = Pr. lassar, lachar = Sp. lazar = Pg. laçar = It. lacciare, < L. lacere, entice, allure; see lace, n. >] I. trans. 1†. To catch, as in a net or gin; entrap; insnare.

I trowe nevere man wiste of peyne,
But he were laced in Loves cheyne.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 3178.

2. To secure by means of a lace or laces; especially, to draw tight and close by a lace, the ends of which are then tied; as, to lace a shoe. Make cleane your shoes, & combe your head, and your clothes button or lace.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 73.

She maun lace on her robe sae fluyr,
And braid her yellow hair.
Fair Annie (Child's Ballads, III. 193).

3. To adorn with lace, braid, or galloon: as, a laced waistcoat.

The edge whereof is laced with bone-lace.
Coryat, Crudities, l. 214.

I saw the King, now out of mourning, in a suit laced with gold and silver.
Pepys, Diary, l. 278.

4. To cover with intersecting streaks; streak.

Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin laced with his golden blood.
Shak., Macbeth, II. 3. 118.

5. To mark with the lash; beat; lash. [Colloq.]

I looked into a certain corner near, half expecting to see the slim outline of a once-dreaded switch, which used to hark there waiting to leap out imp-like and lace my quivering palm or shrinking neck.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xli.

6†. To intermix, as coffee or other beverage, with spirits: as, a cup of coffee laced with a drop of brandy.

Prithce, Captain, let's go drink a Dish of lac'd Coffee, and talk of the Times.
Wycherley, Plain Dealer, III. 1.

7. To interlace; intertwine.

The caller and payer of the forfeit standing up, and joining their hands with the fingers laced.
Macmillan's Mag., Jan., 1868, p. 248.

Laced mutton. See mutton.—Laced plumage, in poultry, etc. See lacing, 8.—To lace one's coat, to beat one. [Slang.]

I'll lace your coat for ye.
Sir R. L'Estrange.

II. intrans. 1. To be fastened or tied by a lace; have a lace: as, shoes or a bandage made to lace in front.—2. To practise tight lacing. [Colloq.] lacebark (lās'bārk), n. 1. A small tree of the West Indies, the Lagetta lintearia, natural order Thymelaeaceae, so called from the texture of its inner bark, which consists of numerous concentric layers of fibers interlacing in all directions. It is made into sleeves, collars, purses, etc.—2. In New South Wales, Sterculia acerifolia, the flame-tree.—3. In New Zealand, a malvaceous tree, Plagianthus betulinus.

lace-boot (lās'bōt), n. A boot which is fastened by a lace.

laceborder (lās'bōr'dēr), n. A geometrid moth, Acidulia ornata, of small size and silvery-white color, with a broad border like lace to the wings, common on chalky soils in England: an English collectors' name.

lace-coral (lās'kor'al), n. A fossil polyzoan of the family Fenestellidae.

Lacedæmonian (lās'e-lē-mō'ni-an), a. and n. [< L. Lacedæmonius, < Gr. Λακεδαιμόνιος, of Lacedæmon, < Λακεδαίμων, > L. Lacedæmon, Lacedæmo, Lacedæmon, Sparta, Laconia. Cf. Laconian.] I. a. Pertaining to the city of Lacedæmon or Sparta in Greece, or to the country of Lacedæmon or Laconia; Spartan; Laconian.

II. n. A native of Lacedæmon; a Spartan or Laconian.

lace-embossing (lās'em-bos'ing), n. The ornamentation or pattern of needle-point lace worked in relief.

lace-fern (lās'fēr'n), n. 1. A small elegant fern, Cheilanthes gracillima, in which the under side of the bipinnate frond is densely covered with matted wool. It is found in California, Oregon, and British Columbia.—2. Any of the several species of the genus Hymenophyllum.

lace-fly (lās'fli), n. Any neuropterous insect; a member of the order Neuroptera.

lace-frame (lās'frām), n. Any one of a variety of machines used in the manufacture of lace. The construction of these machines is ingenious and complicated in the extreme. They are also called by other names, as bobbin-net machine, point-net frame, and varrnet frame. The older stocking-frame is the parent of these machines, and also of the numerous kinds of knitting-machine now in use.

laceleaf (lās'lēf), n. Same as latticeleaf.

lace-leather (lās'lēth'ēr), n. Leather used for laces and thongs.

lace-lizard (lās'liz'zārd), n. An Australian lizard, Hydrosaurus giganteus.

laceman (lās'mān), n.; pl. lacemen (-men). A man who deals in lace.

I met with a Nonjuror, engaged very warmly with a laceman who was the great support of a neighbouring conventicle.
Addison, Coffee House Politicians.

lace-mender (lās'men'dēr), n. One who mends or repairs lace; specifically, in lace-making, one who restores damaged meshes in machine-made net.

All the Brussels ladies have old lace—very precious—which must be mended all the times it is washed; . . . but . . . those who know I have been a lace-mender will despise me.
Charlotte Brontë, The Professor, xvii.

lace-paper (lās'pā'pēr), n. Paper stamped or cut by hand with an openwork pattern resembling some variety of lace.

lace-piece (lās'pēs), n. In ship-building, same as lacing, 6.

lace-pillow (lās'pil'ō), n. A round or oval board with a stuffed covering, held on the knees to support the fabric in the process of making pillow-lace.

lacerable (lās'e-rā-bl), a. [= F. lacérable, < LL. lacerrabilis, that can be lacerated, < L. lacerrare, lacerate; see lacerate.] Capable of being lacerated or torn; liable to laceration.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure.
Harvey, Consumptions.

lacerant (lās'e-rānt), a. [< L. lacerant(-t)s, ppr. of lacerrare, lacerate; see lacerate.] Of a lacerating character; tearing; harrowing. [Rare.]

The bell on the orthodox church called the members of Mr. Peck's society together for the business meeting with the same plangent, lacerant note that summoned them to worship on Sundays.
Howell, Annie Kilburn, xxv.

lacerate (lās'e-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. lacerated, ppr. lacerating. [*< L. lacerratus, pp. of lacerrare (> It. lacerrare = Sp. Pg. lacerar = F. lacérer), tear to pieces, mangle, lacerate, < laecer, torn, mangled, = Gr. λακέρω, torn; cf. Skt. √ vracch, trak, hew, cut, tear, > varka = E. wolf; see wolf.] 1. To tear roughly; mangle in rending or violently tearing apart; as, to lacerate the flesh; a lacerated wound.

Sprain or strain, in which the ligamentous and tendinous structures around the joint are stretched and even lacerated.
Encyc. Brit., XXII. 682.

2. Figuratively, to torture; harrow: as, to lacerate one's feelings.

This second weaning, needless as it is,
How does it lac'rate both your heart and his!
Cowper, Tirocinium, l. 558.

lacerate (lās'e-rāt), a. [= F. laceré, < L. lacerratus, pp.: see the verb.] Rent; torn; specifically applied (from natural appearance) in botany (also lacerated) to a leaf having the edge variously cut into irregular segments, and in anatomy to three foramina at the base of the cranium. See below.—Anterior lacerate foramen. Same as foramen lacerum anterius (which see, under foramen).—Middle lacerate foramen. Same as foramen lacerum medium (which see, under foramen).—Posterior lacerate foramen. Same as foramen lacerum posterius (which see, under foramen).

lacerately (lās'e-rāt-lī), adv. With laceration.

laceration (las-er-ā'shŏn), n. [= F. laceration = Sp. laceración = Pg. laceração = It. lacerazione, < L. laceratio (n.), a tearing, mangling, < lacerare, tear, mangle; see lacerate.] 1. The act of lacerating or tearing or rending.—2. A rough or jagged breach made by rending.—3. A wounding or harrowing, as of the feelings or sensibility.

lacerative (las-er-ā-tiv), a. [< It. lacerativo; as lacerate + -ivē.] Tearing; having the power to lacerate or tear.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part lacerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours.
Harvey, Consumptions.

lacertī, n. [< ME. lacerte, < L. lacertus, the muscular part of the arm from the shoulder to the elbow (likened to a lizard, from its tapering to the tendon), the arm, muscle, < lacerta, lacertus, a lizard; see lizard. Cf. muscle, as ult. connected with mouse.] A muscle.

Every lacerte in his breast adoun
Is schent with venym and corrupcion.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1395.

Lacerta (lā-sēr'tā), n. [L.; also lacertus, a lizard; cf. lizard and alligator, ult. < L. lacerta, lacertus, lizard.] 1. In zool., a genus of lizards, typical of the family Lacertidae. The name has been used in senses almost as broad as those of Lacertæ or Lacertilia. As now restricted, it covers a large number of common harmless lizards of the Old World, and chiefly of its warmer parts, of active diurnal habits, living on the ground chiefly, with four well-developed limbs and movable eyelids. They are of slender form, with long slim tail and non-imbriated scales. L. agilis is the common gray lizard or sand-lizard of England. L. viridis is the green lizard of southern Europe.

Green Lizard of Europe (Lacerta viridis).

2. A small constellation which first appears in the "Prodromus Astronomiæ" of Hevelius, published in 1690. It is bounded by Cepheus, Cygnus, Pegasus, and Andromeda. Its brightest star is of the fourth magnitude.—3†. [l. e.] A fathom. Doomsday Book.

Lacertæ (lā-sēr'tē), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Lacerta.] An order of reptiles, the Lacertilia. It corresponds to the order Sauria exclusive of the crocodiles. Wagler, 1830; R. Owen.

lacertian (lā-sēr'shi-an), a. and n. [< L. lacerta, a lizard, + -ian.] I. a. Lizard-like; lacertilian; or of pertaining to the Lacertæ or Lacertilia; saurian, in a narrow sense.

II. n. A lacertilian; a lizard.

lacertid (lā-sēr'tid), n. A lizard of the restricted family Lacertidae.

Lacertidæ (lā-sēr'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lacerta + -idæ.] The typical lizards, a family of true eriglossate lacertilians, exemplified by the genus Lacerta, belonging to the superfamily Lacertoidea and order Lacertilia. They have clavicles not dilated proximally, parietal bones confluent, supratemporal fosse roofed over, premaxillary single, and no osteodermal plates. The Lacertidæ are confined to the Old World, and are found chiefly in the warmer parts of Europe and Asia. They have a slender scaly body, with a long, fragile, tapering tail, well-developed limbs with 4 or 5 toes bearing claws, bright eyes with movable lids, slender forked protrusile tongue, and often brilliant or varied colors. The family includes, within the limits thus given, about 100 species belonging to 17 genera, most abundantly represented in Africa and by a few forms in India. None occur in America. Lacerta agilis and L. (Zootoca) vivipara are the British representatives of the family.

lacertiform (lā-sēr'ti-fŏrm), a. [< L. lacerta, lacertus, a lizard, + forma, form.] Having the form of a lizard; lacertilian in structure.

Lacertilia (las-er-til'i-ā), n. pl. [NL., < L. lacerta, lacertus, a lizard; see Lacerta.] An order of reptiles, including the saurians proper or lizards, as the monitors, iguanas, geckos, chameleons, etc., and excluding the crocodiles. The order thus agrees with the old order Sauria divested of its non-conformable types. The Lacertilia have a scaly body mostly elongate, and usually 4 well-developed limbs, which, however, may be reduced to 2, or apparently to none, in which case there may be rudiments of a shoulder-girdle or hip-girdle. The vertebrae are biconcave in the Geckoidea and Uroplatoidea, but generally procoelous, and have but one facet on each side for the articulation of the ribs, which are usually few in number, some of them being always attached to the sternum. The heart is tripartite, with two auricles and one ventricle. The anal cleft is transverse. The mouth is not dilatible, as it usually is in Ophidia or serpents, and the usually simple teeth are generally acrodont or pleurodont, not fixed in distinct sockets. The eyes are normally furnished with two or three movable lids. The animals are oviparous or ovoviviparous, mostly diurnal in habits, and agile in movement; they average but a few inches in length, with some signal exceptions, as among the monitors or varanoids and the iguanas. Only the Helodermatidæ are known to be poisonous. The Lacertilia have been variously subdivided. An old division is into 3 snuborders, Fissilingua, Brevilingua, and Vermilingua, according to the characters of the tongue. Another obsolete classification was into 8 snuborders, Cyclosauria, Fissilingua, Strobilosauria, Nyctisauria, Dendrosauria, Rhynchocephala, Amphibænoidea, and Geissosauria. In the latest classification, after throwing out Sphenodon or Hatteria, as the type of a separate order Rhynchocephalia, the Lacertilia are divided into two groups—(1) the Lacertilia vera or Eriglossa containing all the Lacertilia except (2) the Rhoptoglossa, a division comprising the chameleons alone, also called Dendrosauria or Vermilingua. The Lacertilia vera consist of 20 families, representing 10 superfamilies, Geckoidea, Eublepharoidæ, Uroplatoidea, Pygopodoidæ, Agamoidæ, Anolisoidæ, Helodermatoidæ, Varanoidæ, Lacertoidæ, and Aneleptropidæ.

lacertilian (las-er-til'i-an), a. and n. [< Lacertilia + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to the Lacertilia, or having their characters; lacertiform; saurian.

II. n. One of the Lacertilia; a saurian.

lacertilioid (las-er-til'i-oid), a. [< Lacertilia + -oid.] Lizard-like; lacertiform; resembling a lacertilian.

Lacertina (las-er-ti'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lacerta + -ina.] A small group of the order Lacertilia, including the most ordinary lizards, closely related to the Scincoidæ and Chalcidæ.

lacertine (lā-sēr'tin), a. [< L. lacerta, lizard, + -ine.] Same as lacertian or lacertilioid.—Lacertine work, ornament consisting in part of intertwined lizards or serpents. It is used in ancient Celtic manuscript decoration, and occurs in Romanesque illumination and later, as well as in metal-work and carving.

Lacertine Work, from a French manuscript of the 13th century.

Lacertinidæ (las-er-tin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lacerta + -inus + -idæ.] Same as Lacertidæ. J. E. Gray, 1825.

lacertoid (lā-sēr'toid), a. Lizard-like; specifically, pertaining to the Lacertoidea, or having their characters.

Lacertoidea (las-er-toi'dē-ō), n. pl. [NL., < Lacerta + -oidea.] A superfamily of eriglossate lacertilians, having concavo-convex vertebrae, clavicles undilated proximally, and developed postorbital and postfronto-squamosal arches. The group embraces five families of ordinary lizards, the Xantusiidæ, Ameividæ (or Teiuidæ), Lacertidæ, Gerrhosauridæ, and Scincidæ. T. Gill, Smithsonian Report, 1885, p. 800.

lace-runner (lās'run'ēr), n. A person who runs with the needle the design imprinted upon machine-made net. This operation is called lace-running.

lace-tree (lās'trē), n. Same as lacebark.

lace-winged (lās'wingd), a. Having gauzy wings veined or netted like lace.—Lace-winged fly, a neuropterous insect of the family Hemerobidæ, and especially of the genus Chrysopa, whose larvae are called aphis-lions from their habit of preying upon plant-lice. The eggs are laid in groups, each at the end of a long footstalk. The larvae are entirely carnivorous, sucking the juices of plant-lice through their long jaws. They transform to pupæ within dense whitish globular cocoons, from which the imago escapes through a circular hole cut by the pupa. See cut under Chrysopa.

lace-woman (lās'wūm'ān), n. A woman who deals in laces.

Let in
No lace-woman . . . that brings French masks,
And out-works . . . B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, ll. 1.

lache² (lach), n. A Middle English form of *latch*³.

lache³, a. An obsolete form of *lash*².

laches¹ (lach'ez), n. [< ME. lachesse, lachesse, < OF. lachesse, laxness, remissness, < lache, lax, remiss; see *lache*², *lash*².] 1. Negligence; remissness; inexcusable delay; neglect to do a thing at the proper time.

Than cometh Lachesse, that is he that when he beginneth any good work, anon he wol foriete it and stinte.
Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

In his heart he [Mr. Farebrother] felt rather ashamed that his conduct had shown laches which others who did not get benefices were free from.

George Eliot, Middlemarch, III.

2. In law, remissness in asserting or enforcing a right, or neglect prejudicing some right of the person chargeable with it.

The law also determines that in the king can be no negligence, or laches, and therefore no delay will bar his right.
Blackstone, Com., I. vii.

Laches of entry, a neglect of the heir to enter.

Laches² (lā'kōz), n. [NL. (Thorell, 1869).] A genus of spiders: same as Lachesis, a name preoccupied in herpetology.

Lachesis (lak'e-sis), n. [L., < Gr. λάχεσις, lit. lot, destiny, < λαχάμεν, λαχέιν, obtain, obtain by lot or destiny, fall by lot.] 1. In classical myth., that one of the three Fates whose duty it was to assign to each individual his destiny; the disposer of lots. She spun the thread or course of life from the distaff held by Clotho.—2. In zool.: (a) A genus of very venomous American serpents of the pit-viper or rattlesnake family (Crotalidæ), having a rudimentary rattle in the form of a spine. L. mutus is the deadly bushmaster of South America. Daudin, 1802. (b) A genus of spiders now called Laches. Savigny and Audouin, 1825-27. (c) A genus of gastropods of the family Pleurotomidæ, of buccinoid figure with mammillated spire, as L. minima. Risso, 1826. (d) A genus of pseudoneuropterous insects of the family Psocidæ. Hagen, 1861. (e) A genus of buprestid beetles, erected by Saunders in 1871 upon the African L. abyssa, which had been placed in Edistermon.

Lachninae (lak-ni'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lachnus + -inae.] A subfamily of Aphididæ, typified by the genus Lachnus, having six-jointed antennae, and a winged form with twice-forked cubital veins of the fore wings. There are about 6 genera. The subfamily was framed by Passerini in 1857. By some it is considered a tribe of the subfamily Aphidinae, under the name Lachnini.

Lachnosterna (lak-nō-stēr'nā), n. [NL., < Gr. λάχνος, λάχνη, soft woolly hair, down, + στέρνον, the breast, chest.] A genus of scarabæoid beetles of the subfamily Mcclouthinae, characterized by the transverse, not prominent anterior coxæ, narrow side-pieces of the metasternum, and claws not serrate but with a single tooth. The species are especially numerous in North America, where they are popularly known as June-bugs, dor-bugs, and May-beetles; they are crepuscular or nocturnal in habits, feeding upon the foliage of deciduous trees. The larvæ, known as white grubs, feed underground on the roots of grasses and allied plants. The species are difficult to distinguish; the most abundant are L. fusca and several near relatives, all of a brown color, with pale legs and antennae, the upper side not hairy and rather finely punctured. See cuts under June-bug and dor-bug.

Lachnus (lak'nus), n. [NL. (Burmeister, 1835, after Illiger), < Gr. λάχνος, λάχνη, soft woolly hair, down.] A large and wide-spread genus of aphids or plant-lice, typical of the subfamily Lachninae. They are characterized by the linear stigmata and nearly straight fourth vein of the fore wing. Nearly all the many species have a woolly-looking wax exudation, whence the name; they mostly live on trees, feeding in summer on the leaves and twigs. L. strobil, a common form, affects the white pine in the United States. Many fossil species are described, from the Florissant shales in Colorado, from the Tertiary beds of Eningen in the Rhine valley, and at Kadoboj in Croatia. They often occur in amber.

lachrymable, lachrymal, etc. See lachrymable, etc.

lacing (lā'sing), n. [Verbal n. of lace, v.] 1. The act of binding or fastening with a cord or thong passed backward and forward through holes or around buttons or hooks.—2. A method of fastening the adjoining ends of a belt by the use of a thong or lace.—3. In bookbinding, the fastening of the boards of a book to its back by cords which pass around the sewed threads of the signatures and through holes pierced in the boards.—4. A cord used in drawing tight or fastening; laces in general.—5. Naut., the cord or rope used to lace a sail to a gaff, yard, or boom, or to fasten two parts of a sail or an awning together.—6. In ship-building, a piece of compass- or knee-timber fitted and bolted to the back of the figurehead and to its supporting piece, called the knee of the head. Also called lace-piece.—7. In mining, same as lagging, 3.—8. In the plumage of birds, especially in descriptions of standard or pure-bred poultry: (a) A border or edging of a different color from the center, completely surrounding the web of a feather. (b) The coloration of plumage resulting from feathers marked as above, considered collectively.—9. In math., a complex of three or more closed bands, so that no two are interlinked, yet so that they cannot be separated without breaking.

lacing-cutter (lā'sing-kut'ēr), n. In leather-manuf., a gaged knife by which strips of any required width may be cut.

Lachesis minima.

lacinia (lā-sin'ī-ā), n.; pl. laciniæ (-ē). [L., a lappet, flap, as of a garment, dewrap, a small piece or part; cf. Gr. lakis, a rent, rending: see lacerate.] 1. In bot., a long slash or incision in a leaf, petal, or similar organ; also, one of the narrow lobes or segments resulting from such incisions.—2. In entom., the apex of the maxilla, especially when it is slender and blade-like, as in many Coleoptera. See galca, I (b). Kirby applied this term to the paraglossae and labial palpi of bees, distinguishing the former as laciniæ interiores, and the latter as laciniæ exteriores.

3. [cap.] A genus of mollusks: same as Chama. Humphreys.—4. [cap.] A genus of protozoans.

laciniate (lā-sin'ī-āt), a. [*< NL. laciniatus, < L. lacinia, a flap, etc.: see laciniu.] 1. Adorned with fringes.—2. In bot., irregularly cut into narrow lobes; jagged: said of leaves, petals, bracts, etc.—3. In zool., laeerate; slashed or jagged at the end or along the edge; incised as if frayed out; fringe-like.

Lacinate Leaf of Verbena officinalis.

laciniated (lā-sin'ī-āt-ed), a. Same as laciniate.

laciniform (lā-sin'ī-fōrm), a. [< L. lacinia, a flap, + forma, form.] In zool. and bot., fringe-like; laciniate in form: applied by Kirby to the tegulae of insects when they are long, irregular, and like a fringe on each side of the body, as in Lithostia.

laciniola (las-i-nī'ō-lā), n.; pl. laciniolæ (-lē). [NL., dim. of lacinia.] A minute lacinia.

laciniolate (lā-sin'ī-ō-lāt), a. [*< NL. *laciniolatus, a dim. form of laciniatus: see laciniate.] In bot., finely fringed; marked with minute laciniæ.

laciniöse (lā-sin'ī-ōs), a. Same as laciniate.

lac-insect (lak'in'sekt), n. One of several eocids, or homopterous insects of the family Coccidae, which produce the substance called lac. Ordinary commercial lac is the product of Carteria lacca, an Asiatic species. C. larrea, C. mexicana, and Cerococcus quercus are North American species whose lac has not become commercial. After long dispute, most chemists and entomologists are agreed that lac is a secretion of the insect, and not of the plant which the insect punctures.

lacinula (lā-sin'ī-ū-lā), n.; pl. lacinulæ (-lē). [NL., dim. of L. lacinia, a flap: see lacinia.] In bot.: (a) A small lacinia. (b) The abruptly inflexed acumen or point of each of the petals of an umbelliferous flower.

Lacinularia (lā-sin-ū-lā'ri-ā), n. [NL., < lacinula + -aria.] A genus of tubicolous rotifers or tube-inhabiting wheel-animalcules. They have the intestine bent upon itself and opening upon the side of the body opposite to that on which the ganglion is placed, and the horseshoe-shaped trochal disk furnished with two cilia, one before and the other behind the mouth. See cut under trochal.

lacinulate (lā-sin'ū-lāt), a. In bot.: (a) Having small laciniæ. (b) Provided with lacinulæ: said of umbelliferous flowers.

Lacistema (las-i-stē'mā), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1788), < Gr. lakis, a rent, + stēma, a stamen.] A genus of tropical American shrubs, constituting an order by itself, the Lacistema, having monoehlamydeous hermaphrodite flowers in slender spikes which are sessile and usually fasciated in the axils of the alternate, short-petioled, entire leaves. Sixteen species have been described, ranging from Mexico and the West Indies to Brazil and Peru.

Lacistemaceæ (las'ī-stē-mā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1846), < Lacistema + -acæ.] A small natural order of dicotyledonous apetalous shrubs, allied to the Euphorbiaceæ. The flowers are in catkin-like spikes; the fruit is a 3-valved capsule. Only a single genus, Lacistema, is known, with about 16 species; they are natives of tropical America.

Lacistemæ (las-i-stē'mā-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Martius, 1824), < Lacistema + -æ.] Same as Lacistemaceæ.

lack¹ (lak), n. [Early mod. E. also lake; < ME. lak, lac, lake, lakke, defect, failing, fault (not in AS.); of LG. or Scand. origin: cf. MLG. lak = MD. lack, D. lak, blemish, stain; Icel. lakr, defective, lacking. Relations uncertain: see the verb. Prob. not connected with leak. Cf. lag¹.] 1. Want or deficiency of something requisite or desirable; defect; failure; need.

I made some excuse by lacke of habilitie, and weakness of bodie. Aecham, The Scholemaster, p. 20.

And of his friends he had no lacke. Sir Hugh of the Grime (Child's Ballads, VI. 250).

What I have done for lacke o' wit I never never can rec^a.

The Last Guid Night (Buchan's Ballads of North of Scotland, II. 127).

He that gathered little had no lacke. Ex. xvi. 18.
Let his lacke of years be no impediment. Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 162.

2†. Want of presence; a state of being away; absence.

Whilst we here, wretches! wail his private lacke [personal absence].
And with vain vows do often call him back. Lady Pembroke (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 264).

3†. A want; defect; a blemish; especially, a moral defect; a fault in character.

God in the gospel grymly reprehenth
Alle that lakken [blame] any lyf, and lakkes han hensem^u.
Piers Plowman (B), x. 262.

4†. A fault committed; an offense; a censurable act.

If I do that lakke,
Do strepe me, and put me in a sakke,
And in the nexte ryver do me drenchen.
Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 955.

5†. Blame; reproach; rebuke; censure.

He did not stayne ne put to lacke or rebuke his royall autoritie in gening sentence.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 197.

lack¹ (lak), v. [< ME. lakken, lack, blame; cf. OD. laccken, fail, decrease, D. laken, blame; Dan. lakke, draw nigh, approach: see lack¹, n.] I. intrans. 1. To be wanting or deficient; come short; fail.

Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous. Gen. xviii. 28.

Ham. What hour now?
Hor. I think it lacks of twelve. Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 4.

2†. To be absent or away; be missing.

Welle come, Edwards, oure son of high degre!
Many yeeris hast thou lakyd owe to this londe.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 5.

3. To be in want; suffer need.

The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger. Ps. xxxiv. 10.

II. trans. 1†. To be wanting to; fail. [Originally intransitive, the object being in the dative.]

Hem [Iagar and Ishmael] gan that water laken.
Gen. and Exod., l. 1231.

2. To be in want of; stand in need of; want; be without; be destitute of; fail to have or to possess. The direct object in this construction was formerly the subject, what is now the subject (nominative) being originally in the dative.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God. Jas. i. 5.

Good counsellors lack no clients. Shak., M. for M., i. 2. 110.

"What d' ye lack?" he cried, using his solicitations.
"Mirrors for your toilette, my pretty madam. . . . What d' ye lack?—a watch, Master Sergeant?"
Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, l.

3†. To suffer the absence of; feel the deprivation of; miss.

Thereat the feend his gnashing teeth did grate,
And griev'd, so long to lacke his greedie pray.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 34.

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.
Ros. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours. Shak., As you Like it, iv. 1. 182.

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Shak., Cor., iv. 1. 15.

4. To blame; reproach; speak in detraction of. [Prov. Eng.]

No devocioun
Hadde he to non to reven him his reste,
But gan to preyse and lakken whom him leste.
Chaucer, Troilus, l. 189.

5. To beat. Also lacky. [Prov. Eng.]=Syn. 2. Lack, Need, Want. These words have come to overlap each other a good deal by figurative extension, and have considerable variety of peculiar idiomatic use. To lack is primarily and generally to be without, that which is lacked being generally some one thing, and a thing which is desirable, although generally not necessary or very important.

lack² (lak), v. t. [Perhaps another use of *lack*¹, v. t., 5.] To pierce the hull of with shot. [Rare.]

Alongside ran bold Captain John [Hawkins], and with his next shot, says his son, an eye-witness, "lacked the admiral through and through."
Kingsley, Westward Ho, xxviii.

lack³ (lak), n. See *lac*².

lack³ (lak), v. t. [< lack³, lac², n.] To lacquer; treat with lac. [A trade use.] lack⁴. [Cf. alack, lackaday.] Used in the exclamatory phrase Good lack. See good.

lackadaisical (lak-a-dā'zi-kal), a. [< lackadaisy + -ical.] Sentimentally woebegone; languid; listless; affected. See extract under lack-thought.

lackall (lak'âl), n. [< lack¹, v., + obj. all.] One who is entirely destitute; a needy fellow.

Lackalls, social nondescripts, with appetite of utmost keenness which there is no known method of satisfying. Carlyle, Cagliostro.

lackbeard (lak'bērd), n. [< lack¹, v., + obj. beard.] One who has not yet a beard.

For my Lord Lack-beard there, he and I shall meet; and, till then, peace be with him. Shak., Much Ado, v. 1. 195.

lackbrain (lak'brān), n. [< lack¹, v., + obj. brain.] One who lacks brains, or is deficient in understanding.

What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 17.

lacker¹ (lak'ēr), n. [< lack¹, v., + -er¹.] One who lacks.

The lack of one may cause the wrack of all;
Although the lackers were terrestrial gods,
Yet will they rufing reel, or reeling fall.
Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage.

lacker², n. and v. See lacquer.

lackey (lak'ī), n. [Formerly also lucky, lacquey, laquay, laquey; = D. lakkei = G. lakkei, lakei, lakai = Dan. lakci, < OF. laquay, F. laquais, earlier laquis, laquays, laquons, lacais, lacays, lacay, lacquet, also alacay, alucay, a soldier, a lackey, footman, < Sp. lacayo = Pg. lacajo, a lackey (Pg. lacaja, fem., a female servant; on the stage, a soubrette); origin uncertain; perhaps < Ar. luka, fem. lak'a, worthless, servile, a slave; cf. lakiv', lakiv', servile, lakiv', slovenly. 2. A lackey-moth.

lackey (lak'ī), v. [Formerly also lucky; < lackey, n.] I. trans. To wait on as or like a lackey; attend servilely; servo as a menial.

The artificial method [in poetry] proceeds from a principle the reverse [of the unconventional], making the spirit lackey the form. Lovell, Study Windows, p. 402.

II. intrans. To act as a lackey or footman; give servile attendance.

What cause could make him so dishonourable
To drive you so on foot, unfit to tread
And lackey by him, gainst all womanhead?
Spenser, F. Q., VI. ii. 15.

Youth and Health,
As slaves, shall lackey by thy chariot wheels.
Dekker and Ford, Sun's Darling, ii. 1.

lackey-moth (lak'ī-mōth), n. [So called from the color and appearance of its striped wings, compared to a footman's livery.] A bombycid moth of the genus Chisioampa, especially C. neustria, a common European species. The moths have the fore wings either yellow crossed with brown stripes, or brownish-red crossed with yellow stripes; the hind wings are paler and unstriped. The caterpillars are striped, and live in masses on treca under a web; whence corresponding American species are known as tent-caterpillars. The ground lackey-moth is C. castrensis. See cut under Chisioampa.

lack-Latin (lak'lat'in), n. [< lack¹, v., + obj. Latin.] One who is ignorant of Latin.

lacmoid (lak'moid), n. [< lacmus + -oid.] A coal-tar color used in dyeing; same as fluorescent resorcinol blue (which see, under blue).

lacmus (lak'mus), n. [< D. lakmoes (= G. lakmus, lacmuss = Dan. Sv. lakmus), lacmus, < luk, lac, + moes, pulp.] The word has been perverted to litmus, q. v. Same as litmus.

Laconian (lā-kō'nī-an), a. and n. [< L. Laconia, a country of the Peloponnesus, < Laco(n)-, Lacon, < Gr. Λάκων, an inhabitant of Lacedaemon, a Spartan. Cf. Lacedaemonian.] I. a. Pertaining to Laconia or its inhabitants; Lacedaemonian or Spartan.

II. n. An inhabitant of Laconia, a division of the Peloponnesus in Greece, anciently constituting the country of the Spartans or Lacedaemonians, now a nomarchy of the kingdom of Greece; a Lacedaemonian or Spartan. The Laconians were exceptionally distinguished for the peculiarities of character and manner which have made laconic and laconism terms of common speech in both ancient and modern times. In part of Laconia a distinct dialect of Greek, called the Tzakonian, is still spoken.

Laconic (lā-kon'ik), a. and n. [= F. laconique = Sp. lacónico = Pg. It. laconico, < L. Laconicus, < Gr. Λακωνικός, Laconian, Lacedaemonian, laconic, < Gr. Λάκων, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedaemon or Sparta.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to Laconia or its inhabitants; Lacedaemonian or Spartan. [Rare.]—2. [l. c.] Expressing much in few words, after the manner of the ancient Laconians; sententious; pithy; short; brief: as, a laconic phrase.

Why, if thou wilt needs know
How we are freed, I will discover it,
And with laconic brevity.

Beau. and Fl., Little French Lawyer, v. 1.

Boccalini, in his "Parnassus," indicts a laconic writer for speaking that in three words which he might have said in two. Steele, Tatler, No. 264.

King Agis, therefore, when a certain Athenian laughed at the Lacedaemonian short awards, . . . answered in his laconic way, "And yet we can reach our enemy's hearts with them." Langhorne, tr. of Plutarch's Lycurgus.

3. [l. c.] Characteristic of the Laconians; inexorable; stern; severe. [Rare.]

The latest revolution [among the Greeks] that we read of was conducted, at least on one side, in the Grecian style, with laconic energy. J. Adams, Government, IV. 287.

Laconic meter. Same as II. 3. = Syn. 2. Condensed, Succinct, etc. See concise.

II. n. [l. c.] 1. Conciseness of language; laconicism. [Rare.]

Shall we never again talk together in laconic? Addison.
2. A concise, pithy expression; something expressed in a concise, pithy manner; a laconism: chiefly used in the plural: as, to talk in laconics.

—3. In anc. pros., an anapestic tetrameter catalectic with a spondee instead of the penultimate anapest (— — — — — | — — — — — | — — — — — | — — — — —). So called as a variety of the tetrameter used in the Laconian or Spartan embateria.

laconica, n. Plural of laconicum.
laconical (lā-kon'ī-kāl), a. [< laconic + -al.] Same as laconic. [Rare.]

His head had now felt the razor, his back the rod:
All that laconical discipline pleased him well.
Ep. Hall, Epistles, i. 5.

laconically (lā-kon'ī-kāl'ī), adv. Briefly; concisely: as, a sentiment laconically expressed.

I write to you very laconically.
Pope, To Warburton, xvii.

laconicism (lā-kon'ī-sizm), n. [< laconic + -ism.] 1. A laconic mode or style of expression; laconism.

I grow laconic even beyond laconicism, for sometimes I return only yea or no to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope, To Swift, Aug. 17, 1736.

2. A laconic phrase or expression; a laconism.

He [the theologian] then passes to its "Sharb." or commentary, generally the work of some other avant, who explains the difficulty of the text, amplifies its Laconicisms.
R. F. Burton, El-Medinalah, p. 81.

laconicum (lā-kon'ī-kum), n.; pl. laconica (-kū). [l. laconicum, a sweating-room, a sweating-bath, neut. (sc. balneum) of Laconicus, Spartan: see laconic.] In Rom. archeol., a vapor-bath;

a chamber in a bathing-establishment warmed by means of air artificially heated: so called because the Laconians used such a dry or sudorific bath, avoiding the use of warm water as enervating.

laconism (lak'ō-uizm), n. [= F. laconisme = Sp. Pg. It. laconismo, < Gr. Λακωνισμός, the imitation of Lacedaemonian manners, dress, etc., esp. of their short and pointed way of talking, < Λακωνίζεω, imitate Lacedaemonian manners, etc.: see laconice.] 1. Pointed brevity of speech or expression; sententiousness; conciseness; pithiness.—2. A concise or pithy expression; an utterance conveying much meaning in few words.

laconize (lak'ō-niz), v. i.; pret. and pp. laconized, ppr. laconizing. [< Gr. Λακωνίζεω, imitate Lacedaemonian manners, dress, etc., < Λάκων, a Lacedaemonian: see Laconic.] To imitate the Laconians, either in austerity of life or in shortness and pithiness of speech.

lac-painted (lak'pān'ted), a. Decorated with colored lacquer-work, as is much Japanese or Indian work.

lacquer, lacker² (lak'ër), n. [Formerly also leakar; < F. lacre (Cotgrave), < Sp. lacre = Pg. lacre, sealing-wax, < laca, gum lac: see lac².] The spelling lacquer, in supposed imitation of the F. (cf. F. laque, formerly also lacque, lac), is now commonly used instead of the more correct lacker.] 1†. Lac as used in dyeing. [Rare.]

Enquire of the price of leakar [read lacker?], and all other things belonging to dyeing. Hakluyt's Voyages, 1. 432.

2. An opaque varnish containing lac, properly so called. Especially a kind of varnish, consisting of shellac dissolved in alcohol, with the addition of other ingredients, particularly coloring matters. It is applied to different materials to protect them from tarnish and to give them luster, especially to brass.

3. Decorative work colored and then varnished so as to produce a hard, polished appearance like that of enamel.—4. A resinous varnish obtained from the Rhus verniciifera by making incisions in the bark. When dissolved in spring-water and mixed with other ingredients, such as gold, cinnabar, or some similar coloring matter, it is applied in successive coatings to wood-ware, imparting to it a highly polished lustrous surface.

5. Lacquer-ware; articles of wood which have been ornamented by coating with lacquer. The making of this ware is an extensive industry in China and Japan, especially in the latter country, which excels in the beauty and delicacy of the articles produced. The chief kinds are: black lacquer; gold lacquer, which is of many different shades, and, when fine, of brilliant metallic luster; and aventurin or sprinkled lacquer, in which the grains of gold are of various degrees of minuteness, and are put on sometimes in a uniform sprinkle, sometimes in cloudings. On many pieces decorated with lacquer, figures in relief of one of these kinds are applied upon a surface of another. A surface of lacquer is often adorned with pieces of gold- or silver-foil, and incrustated with small reliefs in bronze, mother-of-pearl, ivory, and other materials.—Aventurin lacquer. See def. 5.—Burmese lacquer, a lacquer yielded by the black-varnish tree, Melanorrhoea usitata.—Cashmere lacquer, a decoration applied to wood and to paper-maché in flat designs of flowers, etc., in vivid color, afterward covered with a thick, transparent varnish.—Cinnabar lacquer, a red lacquer prepared by mixing seshime lacquer with cinnabar or red sulphid of mercury.—Coral lacquer. See coral.—Foochow lacquer, a kind of lacquered ware made in China in imitation of the Japanese, but greatly inferior in make and finish. It is reputed to be the work of a family who had obtained some of the secrets of the Japanese workmen.—Gold lacquer. See gold.—Guri lacquer, a kind of lacquered ware in which layers of different colors are superimposed and a simple pattern of scrolls or the like is cut into the surface in a wedge-shaped groove, the sloping sides of which display the different layers up to the number of fifteen, or occasionally more.—Hira gold lacquer, gold lacquer which has a uniform smooth flat surface, the patterns, of whatever character, being in color in the surface itself, without relief.—Hyderabad lacquer, decoration of furniture and the like done in water-color on a ground usually of metal, such as tin-foil, and covering the whole with a thick, transparent varnish. The work is similar to that of Cashmere, but with a different chord of color; it is done chiefly in the Deccan.—Incrusted lacquer, lacquered ware the decoration of which is partly obtained by means of pieces of other material inlaid in the surface, as mother-of-pearl, ivory plate or colored, or small plaques of metal.—Iron lacquer, a Japanese lacquer in which the surface of the black lacquer is purposely roughened and stained to imitate the surface of wrought-iron.—Japan lacquer. See Japan, n.—Kamakura lacquer, an ancient lacquered ware named from the city of Kamakura in Japan, the old capital of the shoguns. The pieces thought to be of this ware are in red lacquer over black, the under coat showing through the upper one irregularly, as if from wear.—Peking lacquer, a kind of lacquered ware made in China, distinguished by flowers, sprays, and the like, in relief and in full color on a background usually of gold. Incrustations of ivory and other materials are also used. A Japanese imitation of it is made, which perhaps surpasses the Chinese in delicacy.—Scratched lacquer, lacquered ware in which the surface is scratched with a point, showing the layer of color below.—Seshime lacquer, a mixture of pure lacquer with finely powdered charred wood and a glaze made from seaweed: used in Japan for priming coats. A kind obtained from the lower branches of the lacquer-tree is called ki-seshime.—Transparent lacquer, a lacquer obtained from the older lacquer-trees and used for the final coat in any work in which transparency is required, as in inlayings, or to show the grain of the wood.—Tsui-shu lacquer, a carved or embossed cinnabar lacquer-ware originally made in China, whence the best specimens still come, but introduced into Japan in the reign of Go-Tsuchi (1465–1501). The lacquer is thickly laid on in successive coats to a depth of three sixteenths of an inch or more, and then deeply carved with arabesques, flowers, birds, etc., thus differing from Kamakura lacquer, in which the wood is carved and then lacquered. There is also a black embossed or carved lacquer called tsui-koku lacquer. Guri lacquer is another variety.—Vermilion lacquer. Same as coral lacquer (which see, under coral).—Wakasa lacquer, a remarkable lacquered ware made in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries in the province of Wakasa in Japan. It is clouded with many different colors, upon which as background foliage and the like in gold- or silver-leaf are added.—Yoshino lacquer, lacquered ware made at Yoshino in the province of Yamato in Japan, usually black, with patterns in different colors, especially red. It is a durable ware, and more common in articles of utility than in works of art.

lacquer, lacker² (lak'ër), v. l. [< lacquer, lacker², n.] To varnish; treat or decorate with lacquer.

What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker's d chair.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. 1. 337.

Lacquered leather. See leather.

lacquerer (lak'ër-ër), n. One who applies lacquer or produces lacquered ware.

lacquering (lak'ër-ing), n. Finish or decoration in lacquer, especially Japanese lacquer.

In some cases the lacquering is in relief.
Sir Rutherford Alcock, Art Journal, N. S., XVI. 162.

lacquering-stove (lak'ër-ing-stöv), n. A stove with a broad flat top, used in brasswork-factories to receive articles which are to be heated preparatory to lacquering.

lacquer-tree (lak'ër-trē), n. The Rhus verniciifera, a tree about 25 or 30 feet high, indigenous in Japan. The Japan lacquer or varnish is obtained from it by incisions in the bark. Its drupea yield a wax used in making candles, similar to that more largely obtained from R. succedanea, and bringing a higher price. Its wood is fine-grained and golden at the heart, and much used in Japan for cabinet-work.

lacquer-ware (lak'ër-wär), n. Ware treated or decorated with lacquer. See lacquer, 2.—Canon lacquer-ware, Chinese furniture, boxes, and the like, having a brilliant black varnished ground with landscapes or other designs in gold.

lacrimal, a. See lacrymal.

lacrimoso (lak-ri-mō'sō), a. [It., also lagrimoso = E. lacrymose.] See lagrimoso.

lacrosse (lā-krōs'), n. [< Canadian F. la crosse: la, the; crosse, a crook, crutch, hockey-stick, crosier, etc.: see cross².] A game of ball played by two parties of players, eleven on each side, on a level plot of ground, at each end of which is a goal through which the players strive to hurl the ball. The ball may not be touched by the hand, but is carried in a lacrosse-stick or crosse, which each player has, and with which he throws the ball toward the opponents' goal, or passes it to one of his own side when he is on the point of being caught. That side which succeeds in making the most goals within a certain time wins. The game is of Indian origin, and is much played in Canada.

lacrosse-stick (lā-krōs'stik), n. The implement with which the ball is carried or thrown in the game of lacrosse. It is a bent stick with a shallow net at the end. Also called crosse.

Lacrosse-stick.

lacrymable, lacrymable (lak'ri-mā-bl), a. [= OF. lacrimable, lacrymable = Sp. lacrimable = Pg. lacrimavel = It. lacrimabile, < L. lacrimabilis, worthy of tears, lamentable, < lacrimare, shed tears: see lacrymation. Cf. lacrymal.] Tearful; lamentable. [Rare.]

No time yields rest unto my dulcid throat,
But still I ply my lacrymable note.
M. Parker, The Nightingale.

lacrymæ Christi (lak'ri-mē kris'tī), [L. (NL.), prop. lacrimæ Christi: lacrima, pl. of lacrima, a tear (see lacrymal); Christi, gen. of Christus, Christ.] A strong and sweet red wine of southern Italy. Genuine lacrymæ Christi is produced only on the slopes of Mount Vesuvius, much of the wine sold under the name being factitious.

lacrymal, lacrymal (lak'ri-māl), a. and n. [= OF. lacrimale, lacrymal, F. lacrymal = Sp. Pg. lacrimale, lagrimale = It. lacrimale, lagrimale, < ML. lacrimalis, pertaining to tears (ML. lacrimale, n., a tear-bottle), < L. lacrima, also written lacryma, lacryma, and in ML. NL. also corruptly lacryma, in OL. lacrima (= Gr. δάκρυα), a tear, with suffix -ma, = Gr. δάκρυ = E. tear: see tear².] The proper spelling of this and the related words is lacrim-; but lacrym- and the corrupt form lacrym- are in prevalent use.]

I. a. In anat. and physiol., of or pertaining to tears; secreting tears; conveying tears: as, the lacrymal apparatus.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lacrymal glands, to wash and clean it. G. Cheyne, Philosophical Principles.

Lacrymal bone. See lacrymal, n., 1.—Lacrymal canal, caruncle, crest. See the nouns.—Lacrymal duct, the nasal duct, conveying tears from the eye to the nose.—Lacrymal fossa, gland, etc. See the nouns.

—Lacrymal sac, a dilatation of the upper extremity of the lacrymal duct.—Lacrymal sinus, the suborbital sinus or tear-bag of a ruminant, as a deer; a farruler.

LG, lacrymal gland; LD, lacrymal duct.

II. n. 1. One of the bones of the face in vertebrates; in man, the os unguis, or nail-bone, so called from its resemblance in size and shape to a human finger-nail. It is situated wholly within the orbit of the eye, on the inner side, in relation with the lacrymal or nasal duct, whence the name. In vertebrates other than man it is usually a much larger and stouter bone, situated externally upon the face, commonly forming a part of the bony brim of the orbit. It is essentially a membrane bone, forming one of a series which in some animals constitutes an outer arcade along the side of the skull, over the orbit, approximately parallel with the zygomatic arch. Also called lacrymale, or lacrymale, os unguis, and os tarsale. See cut under skull.

2. Same as lacrymatory.—3. pl. Tears; a fit of weeping. [Humorous.]

Something else I said that made her laugh in the midst of her lacrymals.

Richardson, Sir Charles Grandison, VI. 317.

II. n. In anat., one of numerous minute tubes which absorb or take up the chyle (a milk-like fluid) from the alimentary canal and convey it to the thoracic duct. The lacteals are the radicles of the lymphatic system of the alimentary canal, arising off the chyle or nutritive and assimilable material from the intestine where it is elaborated, and conveying it to larger tubes in which the lacteals unite in the mesentery, whence it is taken into the receptacle which forms the beginning of the thoracic duct, to be conveyed through the latter into the subclavian vein, and so mixed directly with the current of venous blood. The lacteals are so called from the name vasa lactea applied to these vessels by their discoverer Gasparo Aselli in 1622.

lacteally (lak'tē-āl-i), adv. In a lacteal manner; milky.

lactean (lak'tē-ān), a. [= OF. lactean; < L. lacteus, milky (see lacteous), + -an.] 1. Milky; resembling milk.

This lactean whiteness ariseth from a great number of little stars constipated in that part of heaven. J. Maxon, Astron. Cards, p. 13.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.

lactein (lak'tē-in), n. [< L. lacteus, milky (see lacteous), + -in².] A substance obtained by the evaporation of milk, concentrating its essential qualities; solidified milk. Thomas, Med. Diet.

lacteous (lak'tē-us), a. [= Sp. lacteó = Pg. lacteo = It. latteo, < L. lacteus, milky, < lac(-), milk: see lactate, v.] 1. Milky; resembling milk.—2. Lacteal; conveying chyle: as, a lacteous vessel.—3. In entom., white with a very slight bluish-gray tinge, like the color of milk: applied generally to white surfaces which are somewhat translucent.

lacteously (lak'tē-us-li), adv. In a lacteous manner; milky; lacteally.

lactescence (lak-tes'ens), n. [= F. lactescence = Sp. lactescencia; as lactescen(t) + -ce.] 1. The state of being lactescent; milkiness or milky coloration.

This lactescence, if I may so call it, does also commonly ensue when, spirit of wine being impregnated with those parts of gums or other vegetable concretions that are supposed to abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the tincture or solution. Boyle, Works, I. 219.

2. In bot., an abundant flow of juice or sap from a plant when wounded, commonly white, but sometimes yellow or red.

lactescent (lak-tes'ent), a. [= F. lactescent = Sp. Pg. lactesciente, containing milk, < L. lactescen(-), pp. of lactescere, turn to milk (cf. lactare, contain milk), < lac(-), milk: see lactate, v.] 1. Being or becoming milky; having a milky appearance or consistence.—2. In bot., abounding in a thick milky juice, as the milkweed.

Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescent papresent plants, as lettuce and endive. Arbuthnot, Aliments, iii. 4.

3. In entom., secreting a milky fluid, as the joints of certain Coleoptera.

lactic (lak'tik), a. [= F. lactique; < L. lac(-), milk, + -ic.] Pertaining to milk; procured from milk, or from something of a similar character.—Lactic acid, C₃H₅O₂, an acid which is known in four isomeric modifications, the most common one being that found in sour milk. In all four forms it is a syrupy, intensely sour liquid, forming well-defined salts. It is formed not only in milk when it becomes sour, but also in the fermentation of several vegetable juices, and in the putrefaction of some animal matters. The acid which is found in the fermented juice of beet-root, in sauer-kraut, in fermented rice-water, and in the infusion of bark used by tanners is for the most part lactic acid. It occurs also in the aqueous extract of the muscles.

lacticinium (lak-ti-sin'i-um), n.; pl. lacticia (-ā). [L., milk food, < lac(-), milk: see lactate.] A dish prepared from milk and eggs, which, in early times forbidden, was later, in the Latin Church, to some extent permitted as food on ecclesiastical fast-days. A recent papal dispensation has made its use in the Roman Catholic Church lawful in some countries on most fast-days.

lactide (lak'tid or -tid), n. [< L. lac(-), milk, + E. -ide¹.] A volatile substance, C₆H₈O₄, one of the anhydrides of lactic acid produced by the dry distillation of that acid. See lactone.

lactiferous (lak-tif'ē-rus), a. [= F. lactifère = Sp. lactifero = Pg. lactifero = It. lattifero, < L. L. lactifer, milk-bearing, < L. lac(-), milk (see lactate), + ferre = E. *bear*¹.] 1. Bearing or conveying milk or chyle; lacteal; galactophorous: as, a lactiferous duct. See duct.—2. Producing a thick milky juice, as a plant.

lactifical (lak-tif'ikal), a. [< lactific + -al.] Same as lactific. Coles, 1717.

lactiferous (lak-ti-flo'rus), a. [< L. lac(-), milk, + flor (flōr-), flower.] Having flowers white like milk. Thomas, Med. Diet.

lactifugal (lak-tif'ū-gal), a. [< lactifug(e) + -al.] Serving to check or stop the secretion of milk; having the property of a lactifuge.

lactifuge (lak'ti-fūj), n. [= F. lactifuge, < L. lac(-), milk, + fugare, expel, < fugere, flee: see fugitive.] A medicine which checks or diminishes the secretion of milk.

lactine (lak'tin), n. [= F. lactine; < L. lac(-), milk, + -inc².] Same as lactose.

lactobutyrometer (lak-tō-bū-ti-rom'e-tēr), n. [< L. lac(-), milk, + butyrum, = Gr. βούτυρον, butter, + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] A kind of lactometer for ascertaining the quantity of butyry matter any particular milk contains.

lactocele (lak'tō-sēl), n. [< L. lac(-), milk, + Gr. κήλη, tumor.] In pathol., a morbid collection of milk-like fluid. Also called galactocele.

lactocrite (lak'tō-krit), n. [< L. lac(-), milk, + κριτής, a judge: see critic.] An apparatus for testing the quantity of fatty substance or butter in a sample of milk, invented by Laval, and used in creameries in connection with his centrifugal separator. A mixture of the milk to be tested with an equal volume of a mixture of 95 parts of strong acetic acid and 5 parts of strong sulphuric acid is heated for eight minutes in a glass or porcelain vessel. This process sets free the fatty substance of the milk, which, however, still remains diffused throughout the mass. The lactocrite is a long narrow-necked tube, fitted to a holder on a disk attached to the centrifugal separator. The prepared milk is placed in this tube, and the rotation of the centrifugal separator acts, as in the separation of cream from milk, to aggregate the fat in the narrow neck of the tube, when its quantity can be determined by a scale. When all the steps of the process are performed with exactness, the value of the sample for butter-making can be determined with an average error of only one twentieth of one per cent.

lactodensimeter (lak'tō-den-sim'e-tēr), n. [L. lac(t-), milk, + densus, thick, dense, + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] A kind of lactometer furnished with scales intended to show what proportion of the cream, if any, has been removed from a sample of milk by skimming.

lactometer (lak-tom'e-tēr), n. [= F. lactomètre = Sp. lactómetro = Pg. lactometro, < L. lac(t-), milk, + Gr. μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for gaging the purity or richness of samples of milk. Specifically—(a) An instrument used in measuring the volume of cream in a sample of milk, and the probable amount of water, if any, which has been added to it. The simplest form is a graduated glass tube for measuring the amount of cream that rises from a sample of milk placed in it. A more complete instrument consists of a series of tubes each with a stop-cock at the bottom, arranged vertically in a suitable stand. The tubes are about an inch in diameter and 12 inches high, and are graduated to tenths of inches. The samples of milk to be tested are poured into separate tubes to a depth of 10 inches. The stand is then set aside and the cream allowed to rise. The thickness of the stratum of cream which rises is measured in tenths of an inch, or (as the depth is 10 inches) in hundredths of the volume tested. The separated milk is then drawn off through the stop-cock for further tests of richness in caseous matter, etc. (b) A kind of hydrometer for testing milk by its specific gravity; also called galactometer to distinguish it from the preceding, in connection with which it is commonly used. When this is called lactometer, the other instrument receives a different name, as creamometer (Encyc. Brit.), or per cent. tube (E. H. Knight). See hydrometer, and cut under galactometer. (c) Same as lactodensimeter.

lactone (lak'tōn), n. [L. lac(t-), milk, + -one.] A colorless volatile liquid possessing an aromatic smell, produced, along with lactide, by the dry distillation of lactic acid.

lactophosphate (lak-tō-fos'fāt), n. [laet(ie) + phosphate.] A phosphate combined with lactic acid.

lactoscope (lak'tō-skōp), n. [L. lac(t-), milk, + Gr. σκοπεῖν, see.] An instrument for testing the quality and richness of samples of milk, by their comparative opacity, constructed and operated upon the principle that the richer the milk is in fatty and caseous substances the greater will be its resistance to the passage of light through a stratum of any given thickness. The samples are tested by a light of equal intensity, usually the flame of a stearin candle. A common form of lactoscope may be described as a box with two vertical parallel and polished glass sides, one of which may be moved by a screw toward or away from, and always in parallel relation with, the other. The candle is placed at a specified distance from the fixed glass side of the box, and as the movable side recedes the stratum of milk increases in thickness to a point at which the candle-flame becomes invisible through it. The various thicknesses at which this occurs in different samples are indications of the richness of the samples, provided no adulteration other than watering has been attempted. There are also lactoscopes of simpler construction and operation. (Encyc. Brit.) lactose (lak'tōs), n. [L. lac(t-), milk, + -osc.] Sugar of milk, C₁₂H₂₂O₁₁, obtained by evaporating whey, filtering through animal charcoal, and crystallizing. It forms hard, white, semi-transparent trimetric crystals, which are less soluble than cane- or grape-sugar, have a slightly sweet taste, and grate between the teeth. It is dextrogyrate, and ferments slowly with yeast, but readily undergoes the lactic fermentation. It is convertible into glucose and galactose by boiling with dilute sulphuric acid. It is used for food and in medicine, and is prepared as an article of commerce in Switzerland and Bavaria. Also called galactine, lactine, and milk-sugar.

lactosuria (lak-tō-sū'ri-ā), n. [NL., < E. lactose + Gr. οὖρον, urine.] The presence of lactose in the urine.

Lactuca (lak-tū'kŭ), n. [L., lettuce, > ult. E. letuce, q. v.] A genus of liguliflorous composite plants, to which the lettuce belongs, type of the subtribe Lactuceæ of the tribe Cichoriaceæ, characterized botanically by a beaked achene and a pappus of delicate and copious bristles in many series. These plants are herbs with milky juice, usually with both radical and cauline leaves, which are generally more or less deeply cut, lobed, or pinnatifid, often with bristly ciliate margins, the cauline commonly with clasping or auriculate base. About 65 well-authenticated species are known, indigenous in Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. The garden-lettuce, L. sativa, is scarcely known except in cultivation, but is supposed to be a native of Asia. (See lettuce.) From the European species L. virosa principally is obtained the sedative known as lactucarium, or lettuce-opium. The species of this genus all possess narcotic and sedative properties. lactucarium (lak-tū-kā'ri-um), n. [NL., < L. lactuca, lettuce: see Lactuca.] A drug consisting of the inspissated milky juice of several species of Lactuca. The species are L. virosa, L. Scariola, L. sagittata (altissima), and L. sativa, the garden-lettuce. It is regarded as possessing (in an inferior degree) the properties of opium, and can be safely used where the latter cannot; but it is uncertain in action. It is produced in some quantity in several European countries.

Lactuceæ (lak-tū'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lessing, 1832), < Lactuca + -æ.] A subtribe of composite plants of the tribe Cichoriaceæ, of which the genus Lactuca is the type. It embraces 10 other genera, including Pyrrhopappus, Prenanthes, and Sonchus. They are chiefly glabrous herbs with beaked achene and copious bristly pappus. Also written Lactuceæ. lactucic (lak-tū'sik), a. [L. lactuca + -ic.] Pertaining to plants of the genus Lactuca.

lacuna (lā-kū'nā), n.; pl. lacunæ (-nē). [Also rarely lacune (< F.); = F. lacune = Sp. laguna, laguna = Pg. lacuna = It. lacuna, laguna, a pool, marsh, lake, gap, < L. lacuna, a pit, ditch, pond, hole, hollow, cavity, < lacus, a basin, cistern, lake: see *lake*¹. Cf. lagoon, a doublet of lacuna.] 1. A pit or hollow. Specifically—(a) In bot.: (1) One of the small hollows or pits on the upper surface of the thallus of lichens. (2) A name given occasionally to an internal organ, commonly called an air-cell, lying in the midst of the cellular tissue of plants. (b) In anat., a small pit or depression; a blind alley or cul-de-sac, as one of a multitude of follicles in the mucous membrane of the urethra; especially, a cavity in bone. See below. (c) In zool., one of the spaces left among the tissues of the lower animals which serve in place of vessels for the circulation of the fluids of the body.

2. A gap; a hiatus; especially, a vacancy caused by the omission, loss, or obliteration of something necessary to continuity or completeness.—3. [cap.] In conch., the typical genus of Lacunidae. L. rivata is a common New England species. This small shell resembles a periwinkle, but is thinner and of slenderer form; it is of a reddish or brownish horn-color, with two or more darker spiral bands. It is found on the sea-shore, where the animal feeds on algae.—Lacunæ of bone, the microscopic cavities in the bone occupied by the bone-cells, and communicating with one another and with the Haversian canals and surfaces of the bone through the canaliculi. See cut and quotation under bone.—Lacunæ of Howship, the foveolæ of Howship, minute pits in the border of bone undergoing absorption. They are excavated by the osteoclasts lying in them.

lacunal (lā-kū'nal), a. [= It. lacunale; as lacuna + -al.] Same as *lacunar*².

lacunar¹ (lā-kū'nār), n.; pl. lacunars, lacunaria (-nārz, lak-ū-nā'ri-ā). [L., a wainscoted or paneled ceiling, so called from the sunken or hollowed compartments, < lacuna, a pit, hollow: see lacuna.] 1. One of the coffers or sunk compartments in ceilings or soffits formed of beams crossing one another, or resembling in structural form or for purposes of decoration such a construction of beams, as the stone ceilings of the Grecian Doric, those (generally formed of wood and plaster, and profusely decorated with gilding and ornament) common in Renaissance buildings, etc. The lacunaria, or recesses of the roof [in the Ionic order], were also certainly painted. J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 253.

Hence—2. A ceiling or soffit having lacunars. lacunar² (lā-kū'nār), a. [L. lacuna + *-ar*³. Cf. *lacunar*¹, n., an older form.] 1. Of or pertaining to a lacuna.—2. Having lacunæ; lacunose. Also lacunal.

lacunaria, n. Latin plural of *lacunar*¹. lacunary (lak'ū-nār-ī), a. [L. lacuna + -ary.] Pertaining to a lacuna.—Lacunary function, a function having a lacunary space.—Lacunary space, in the theory of functions, an area in a plane every point of which is the affix of a value of the variable for which a given function has no determinate values. Thus, if $$Fz = \sum_{i=0}^{\infty} \sum_{j=0}^{\infty} \sum_{k=0}^{\infty} \frac{x^i y^j z^k}{i! j! k!} \frac{x^i y^j z^k}{\xi - ia + jb + kc}$$

$$\frac{1}{i + j + k}$$

then the space within the triangle whose vertices are the affixes of a, b, and c is a lacunary space.

lacune (lā-kū'n'), n. [F. lacune, < L. lacuna, a pit, hollow: see lacuna.] A lacuna; a small empty space; a gap; a hiatus; a defect. [Rare.]

A little wit, or, as that is not always at hand, a little impudence instead of it, throws its rampant briar over dry lacunæ. Landor.

lacunette (lak-ū-nēt'), n. [F. lacunette, dim. of lacune, a chasm: see lacuna.] In fort., a small foss or ditch.

lacunid (lak'ū-nid), n. Any member of the Lacunidae.

Lacunidae (lā-kū'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lacuna, 3, + -idae.] A family of tænioglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Lacuna, with shells resembling those of periwinkles (Littorinidae), but having a lacuna in the columella. There is no aliphonal fold, and behind the operculum are two processes, as in Rissoa. The family is usually included in the Littorinidae.

lacunose (lā-kū'nōs), a. [= Sp. lacunoso, lacunoso = Pg. It. lacunoso, < L. lacunosus, full of hollows, holes, ponds, etc., < lacuna, a pit, a hollow: see lacuna.] Having or full of lacunæ; furrowed or pitted; marked by gaps, cavities, or depressions; specifically, in bot. and entom., having scattered, irregular, broadish, but shallow excavations, as a surface. A lacunose leaf has the venation salient beneath, leaving the surface full of hollows. The pronota and elytra of many beetles are lacunose. Also lacunosus.

lacunosorugose (lak-ū-nō-sō-rō'gōs), a. [Lacunose + rugose.] In bot., marked by deep, broad, irregular wrinkles, as the shell of the walnut or the stone of the peach.

lacunose (lā-kū'nōs), a. Same as lacunose.

lacunulose (lā-kū'nū-lōs), a. [Dim. of lacunose.] In bot., diminutively lacunose. Truckerman, North American Lichens, I. 61.

lacus (lā'kus), n. [NL. use of L. lacus, a basin, lake: see *lake*¹.] 1. In anat., a place likened to a lake.—2. [cap.] In zool., a genus of beetles of the family Eucnemidae. The sole species is L. laticornis of Brazil. Bonvouloir, 1870.—Lacus lacrymalis, the lake of tears, the oval space between the eyelids at the inner corner of the eye, occupied by the caruncula lacrymalis.

lacustral (lā-kus'tral), a. [L. as if lacustris*, of a lake (see lacustrine), + -al.] Same as lacustrine.

lacustrian (lā-kus'tri-an), a. and n. [L. as if lacustris*, of a lake (see lacustrine), + -an.] 1. a. Same as lacustrine.

II. n. A lake-dweller; one whose habitation is built upon a lake.

Not the slightest clew appears as to the manner in which the lacustrians disposed of their dead. Amer. Cyc., X. 112.

Lacustridae (lā-kus'tri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < lacustris*, of a lake (see lacustrine), + -idae.] A so-called family of fresh-water sponges, including those forms of the genus Spongilla which inhabit lakes, as distinguished from the Fluviatilibidae. Though named as a family, the group has not the taxonomic value of a genus, and its name is not based upon that of any genus.

lacustrine (lā-kus'trin), a. [L. as if lacustris* (> It. Pg. Sp. F. lacustre), of a lake, < lacus, a lake: see *lake*¹.] 1. Of or pertaining to a lake or to lakes.—2. Living on or in lakes, as various animals.—3. In bot., growing in lakes or ponds. Also lacustral and lacustrian.

Lacustrine deposits, deposits formed at the bottom of lakes, which frequently consist of a series of strata disposed with great regularity one above another. From the study of these numerous fresh-water deposits geologists obtain a knowledge of the ancient condition of the land.—Lacustrine dwelling or habitation. Same as lake-dwelling.

lac-work (lak'wërk), n. Japanese lacquer.

lace (lā'si), a. [L. as if lacc* + *-y*¹.] Resembling lace; lace-like.

The skeleton [of the Hexactinellidae] comes out a lovely lace structure of the clearest glass.

Sir C. W. Thomson, Depths of the Sea, p. 418.

How exquisite she looked in her pale-tinted dress, with a lacey shawl wound carelessly round her head and shoulders. The Century, XXXVI. 197.

lad¹ (lad), n. [ME. ladde, prob. < Ir. lath, a youth, a champion, = W. llawd, a youth. It cannot be the same as ME. lede, < AS. leód, a man: see *led*³.] For the connection of the senses 'boy' and 'servant,' cf. *boy*¹ and knave in like uses. Cf. *lass*¹.] 1. A boy; a youth; a stripling: often used familiarly or affectionately in speaking of or to a man of any age.

The ladde whom long I lov'd so deare Nowe loves a lasse that all his love doth scorne. Spenser, Shep. Cal., April.

Joseph, being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock with his brethren; and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah. Gen. xxxvii. 2.

The ruffling Northern lads, and the stout Welshmen try'd it. Drayton, Polyolbion, xxii. 1069.

How now, old lad? Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1. 113.

2. A male sweetheart: correlative to lass. [Scotch.]

Ye royal lasses dainty,
Heav'n mak' ye guid as weel as braw,
An' gie you lads a plenty. Burns, A Dream.

3†. A servingman; a servant.

To make lordea of lades of londe that he wyneeth,
And fro men foule thrsles that felwen nat hua lawes.
Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 32.

lad². An obsolete preterit and past participle of *lead*¹.

lad³ (lad), n. [Origin obscure.] A thong of leather; a shoe-latchet. Hallivell. [Prov. Eug.]

lad-aget (lad'āj), n. Boyhood.

Heer I have past my Lad-age fair and good;

Heer first the soft Down on my chin did bud.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Vocation.

ladanum (lad'a-num), n. [L. ladanum, ledanum, < Gr. λάδανον, a resinous juice or gum from a certain shrub, < λάδον, > L. ledon, also lada, < Pers. lādan, a shrub (Cistus creticus) (> Ar. Hind. lādan, ladanum). Hence, with diff. form and sense, ladanum, q. v.] A resinous juice that exudes from the Cistus ladaniferus, a shrub which grows in Spain and Portugal, and from C. creticus and C. salvifolius, which grow in Crete, Syria, etc. The best sort occurs in commerce in dark-colored or black masses, of the consistence of a soft plaster. The other sort is in long rolls coiled up, harder than the former, and of a paler color. It was formerly much used medicinally in external applications and as a stomachic, but is now in little request. It is also used in perfumery and in fumigating-pastils. Also ladanum, ladanum, gum ladanum, gum ladanum, gum ledon.

ladany (lad'a-ni), n. [See ladanum.] An old name for Cistus ladaniferus, one of the plants yielding ladanum.

They make here Labdanum or Ladanum of a very small balsamic aromatic shrub called Ladany, and by botanists Cistus Ledon, or Cistus ladanifera.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. 231.

ladder (lad'ēr), n. [Also dial. ladder; < ME. laddere, laddre, < AS. hlāder, with short vowel hlāder (in declension syncopated hladr, hlēdr), a ladder, = OFries. hladder, hlēder = MD. ledere, D. ladder, leer = MLG. ladder, a ladder, the rails of a cart, = OHG. hleitar, hleitura, hleitra, leitra, leitra, MHG. G. leiter, a ladder; perhaps akin to L. elathri, a trellis, grate; cf. Goth. hleithra, a hut, tent, tabernacle (of wattles?) (cf. hlīja, a tent, tabernacle). By some referred to the same root as Gr. κλίμαξ, a ladder, namely the root of Gr. κλίμαξ = AS. hlīman, lean: see *lean*¹, clinic, climax, etc.] 1. A frame of wood, metal, or rope, usually portable, and consisting essentially of two side-pieces connected at suitable distances by cross-pieces, generally in the form of rounds or rungs, forming steps by which, when the frame is properly set, a person may ascend a height. A ladder differs from a stair in that it has treads, but no risers. There are many forms of ladders, adapted to different uses, as the step-ladder, standing-ladder, companion-ladder, collapsing-ladder, scaling-ladder, etc. A fireman's scaling-ladder is now used consisting of one pole only with steps on each side and a large barbed hook at the top. In use, the hook is caught in a window-sill, the fireman climbs to the window by the pole, and then raises it to the next window, and so on.

Fireman's Scaling-ladder.

The kyng by an laddere to the syp clam an hey.

Rob. of Gloucester, p. 333.

This ladder of ropes will lette thee downe.

The Child of Elle (Child's Ballads, III. 227).

Then they placed their scaling ladders,

And e'er the walls did scour amain.

Undaunted Londonderry (Child's Ballads, VII. 249).

2. Figuratively, any means of ascending; a means of rising to eminence.

Note that the Crosse becomes

A Ladder leading to Heav'n's glorious rooms.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 7.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,

Whereto the climber-upward turns his face.

Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 22.

Accommodation ladder. See accommodation.—Extension ladder, a ladder with a sliding or folding section which can be used to increase the length.—Jacob's ladder. (a) The ladder which, according to the account in Genesis (xxviii. 12), Jacob saw in a dream, stretching from earth to heaven, with the angels of God ascending and descending upon it. (b) In logic, a figure illustrating the theory of the old logic concerning the relations of genera, differences, and species. (c) Naut. See Jacob's-ladder, l.—Hook-and-ladder company. See hook.—Movable ladder, a miners' man-engine.

ladder-braid (lad'ēr-brād), n. A kind of braid made on the lace-pillow; a narrow bobbin-net: so named from its appearance.

ladder-carriage (lad'ēr-kar'āj), n. A hook-and-ladder truck; a vehicle on which fire-ladders are carried. In some forms the bed-frame serves as a brace for the ladder when it is raised, the sliding sections of the ladder being extended by a windlass which has its bearings at the foot of the frame. A basket may be secured by a rope to a pulley at the top of the ladder to serve as a fire-escape. E. H. Knight.

ladder-dredge (lad'ēr-drej), n. A dredge having buckets carried round on a ladder-like chain.

ladderman (lad'ēr-man), n.; pl. ladder-men. In a fire-brigade, a member of a hook-and-ladder company.

ladder-shell (lad'ēr-shel), n. Any species of Scalaria; a scalariid or ventilo-trap: so called from the conspicuous ribs, resembling the rounds of a ladder.

ladder-sollar (lad'ēr-sol'ār), n. In mining, a platform at the foot of each ladder in a ladder-way. The ladders are usually from 25 to 30 feet in length, and between each two is a solar or platform, where the miner changes to another ladder. The object of this arrangement is to lessen the danger, to both the miner himself and his companions below, which would attend a fall from one continuous ladder leading from the top to the bottom of the shaft. Ladders without sollars are forbidden by law in England.

ladder-stitch (lad'ēr-stich), n. 1. An embroidery-stitch in which cross-bars at equal distances are produced between two solid ridges of raised work. A variety of this has the cross-bars at different angles, producing a row of lozenges or hexagons; it is also carried around curves and in a circle, the cross-bars resembling the radiating spokes of a wheel.

2. A stitch by which a row of crosses is produced, the effect of the whole being a continuous line or ridge of the silk or thread, with short cross-bars at regular intervals projecting at both sides.

ladderway (lad'ēr-wā), n. A space or opening for ascending and descending by a ladder; specifically, in mining, a shaft arranged with a system of ladders by which the miners have access to the part of the mine in which their work is carried on. lady's-maid (lā'diz-mād), n. A female attendant upon a lady.

lady's-mantle (lā'diz-man'tl), n. An Old World rosaceous herb, Alechmilla vulgaris. It has a bitterish, astringent taste, and was formerly used in medicine as an astringent.

lady's-seal (lā'diz-sēl), n. 1. A plant, Tamus communis, of the natural order Dioscoreaceæ. It is a perennial climber, with greenish-white flowers and scarlet berries, and grows in hedges and woods in England. Also called black bryony.
 2. The Solomon's-seal of England, Polygonatum multiflorum.

lady's-slipper (lā'diz-slip'ēr), n. 1. Any orchid of the genus Cypripedium. In America the most conspicuous wild lady's-slippers are the larger yellow, C. pubescens; the smaller yellow, C. parviflorum; the showy, C. spectabile; and the stemless, C. acule. The roots of the first two yield an official remedy, regarded as a gentle nervous stimulant and antispasmodic.
 2. The garden-balsam, Impatiens balsamina. [U. S.] The name has also been given locally to other plants.

lady's-smock (lā'diz-smök), n. A cruciferous plant, Cardamine pratensis. Also called eucloo-flower. Commonly called lady-smock.
 Daisies pied and violets blue,
 And lady-smocks all silver-white.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 905.

That meadow, chequered with water-lilies and lady-smocks.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 58.

lady's-thistle (lā'diz-this'tl), n. 1. The blessed thistle, Cnicus benedictus.—2. The milk-thistle, Carduus Marianum.

lady's-thumb (lā'diz-thum), n. The common persicaria, Polygonum Persicaria: so called from its dense oblong reddish spike. [U. S.]

lady's-tresses (lā'diz-tres'ez), n. An orchid, Spiranthes autumnalis; also, any orchid of that genus. These orchids are low plants, notable for their spikes of white spirally arranged flowers. In the United States S. cernua is perhaps the best-known species.

Lælaps (lē'laps), n. [NL., < L. Lælaps, the name of a dog in Ovid's "Metamorphoses," < Gr. λαιλαψ, a dark, furious storm, a hurricane.]

1. In zool., a generic name used in various senses. (a) A genus of arachnidans. Koch, 1835. (b) A genus of hymenopterous parasites, of the chalcid subfamily Pteromalinae, with two West Indian species, L. sadules and L. pulchricornis. Usually Lælaps, as Walker, 1843. (c) A genus of gigantic dinosaurian reptiles, established by Cope in 1866. Some of the species stood 13 feet high, and they were shaped like kangaroos, progressing on their plantigrade hind feet with the assistance of the massive tail. The jaws were large and armed with sharp teeth. The animals were carnivorous and rapacious to a high degree.
 2. [I. c.] A species or an individual of the genus Lælaps (c).

When hunting, the lælaps probably wandered around the lowlands, or swam along the shore until it arrived within twenty-five or thirty feet of its victim, when with a spring it cleared the distance. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 467.

Lælia (lē'li-ā), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1830), named after Lælius, a Roman statesman.] A genus of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Epidendreae, type of the subtribe Lælieæ, having the sepals and petals flat, the lateral lobes of the lip broad and loosely investing the column, and the flowers large and showy. They are epiphytes furnished with pseudobulbs, which are often elongate and stem-like, and coriaceous or fleshy leaves. The flowers are borne on simple terminal racemes. About 20 species have been discovered, inhabiting tropical America from Brazil to Mexico. Several of them are common in collections of orchids.

Lælieæ (lē-li'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1833), < Lælia + -æ.] A subtribe of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Epidendreae, chiefly epiphytes with terminal inflorescence, the pollinia in one or two series of four. It embraces 15 genera besides Lælia, the type, including Epidendrum, Cattleya, etc. Written Læliææ by Lindley.

laemmergeier, laemmergeyer, n. See lammergeier.

læmodipod (lē-mōd'ipōd), a. and n. [As Læmodipoda.] 1. a. Pertaining to the Læmodipoda, or having their characters. Also læmodipodous.

II. n. A member of the order Læmodipoda. Also læmodipodan.

Læmodipoda (lē-mō-dip'ō-dā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of læmodipus, < Gr. λαμός, the throat, + δίπους (di-pūs), two-footed: see dipode, Dipus.]

An order of edriophthalmous crustaceans, related to the amphipods, by some made a group of Amphipoda. It is characterized by having the abdomen rudimentary, reduced to a mere papilla, the first two thoracic somites coalesced with the head, so that the corresponding pairs of limbs seem to be attached to this part, branchial vesicles on several thoracic somites, and in the femsje laminar oostegites for carrying the ova. The group consists of two families, Cyamidae and Caprellidae, or the whale-lice and the mantis- or spooter-shrimps. These animals are marine and parasitic. The Læmodipoda were at one time made a part of the Isopoda, corresponding to a section, Cyathobranchia, of that order. They were later raised to ordinal rank, and divided by Latreille into Filiiformia and Ovalia, which divisions correspond to the modern familia Caprellidae and Cyamidae. See these words. Also spelled Læmodipoda.

læmodipodan (lē-mō-dip'ō-dān), a. and n. Same as læmodipod.

læmodipodiform (lē-mō-dip'ō-di-fōrm), a. [< NL. læmodipus (see Læmodipoda) + L. forma, form.] In entom., resembling the Læmodipoda in shape: an epithet applied by Kirby to certain orthopterous larvæ with elongate, subcylindrical bodies, long antennæ, and the anterior legs distant from the intermediate ones, as the Phasmidae or walking-sticks.

læmodipodous (lē-mō-dip'ō-dūs), a. [< NL. læmodipus: see Læmodipoda.] Same as læmodipod.

læn†, n. [AS. læn, a loan, grant, fee, fief: see *loan*¹.] In anc. Eng. law, the tenure of land as a benefice, either by mere permission, as in the case of the ordinary ten, where the tenant was dependent on the will of the lord, and protected only by custom, or by a writing called a book (bōk), expressing the terms of the tenure and the right of the tenant. The tenant paid for the use either in money, in produce, or in labor, frequently in all. At the expiration of the tenancy, which was usually for life, the land reverted to the grantor.

læna (lē'nā), n.; pl. læne (-nē). [L., = Gr. χλαίνα, a cloak.] In anc. Rom. costume, a woollen cloak usually of two thicknesses of cloth, worn over the pallium or the toga as a protection from the weather. It occurred in an ornamented form as an early robe of state, and also formed part of the costume of office of the flamen. In late times it was worn to some extent as a substitute for the toga.

læn-land†, n. [AS., lænland, lænland, < læn, a grant (see læn), + land, land.] In Anglo-Saxon law, land held and occupied by virtue of a læn.

Either bookland or folkland could be let, lent, or leased out by its holders; and, under the name of lænland, held by free cultivators. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 36.

læotropic (lē-ō-trop'ik), a. [As laotropous + -ic.] Sinistral; turning or turned to the left, as the whorls of a spiral shell: opposed to dæxiotropic.

læt (AS. pron. lat), n. [AS. læt.] Among the Anglo-Saxons, one of a class inferior to that of a ceorl, but above that of a slave. See freeman, 3.

Lætare (lē-tā'rē), n. [So called from the first word of the introit of the mass on this day. L. lætare, 2d pers. sing. impv. of lætari, rejoice, < lætus, joyful, glad.] Eccles., the fourth Sunday in Lent. It is on this Sunday that the Pope blesses the golden rose. Also called Mid-Lent Sunday.

lævigate, lævigatous, a. See *levigate*¹.

lævoglucose, lævogryate, etc. See levoglucose, etc.

lafayette (lā-fā-yet'), n. [So named because it first became well known about the time of the last visit of Lafayette to the United States (1824-5).] 1. A scianoid fish of the northern Lafayette (Liostomus xanthurus).

United States, Liostomus xanthurus, of an oblong form, with the back elevated toward the front, a steep profile, and no teeth in the lower jaw. The sides are marked with about 16 dark bands tending obliquely forward, and a distinct spot on the shoulder. Although of small size, it is much esteemed for the savoriness of its flesh. Also known as goody, old-wife, and spot.

2. A stromateoid fish, Stromateus triacanthus; the butter-fish, dollar-fish, or harvest-fish. See cut under butter-fish.

lafer, n. A Middle English form of *lave*³.

laif, v. An obsolete or dialectal spelling of laugh.

laif² (laf), n. A fish of the family Synanceidae, Synanceia verrucosa, of an oblong form, with a monstrous cuboid head, warty skin, and a dorsal with 13 pungent spines and 6 rays. The dorsal spines are grooved and connected with an ovoid poison-gland. The fish is consequently much dreaded. It inhabits the Indian ocean, and is called laif or mud-laif at Mauritius. Also called fi-fi.

When a laif is discovered, the wary fisherman, knowing it to be a sluggish fish, not likely to move quickly, creeps slowly up to it, and stooping down lowers his hand gently till it is below the level of the mouth, when with a sudden jerk he clutches it by the lower jaw and draws it up.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LX, 227.

Lafitte (lä-fit'), n. See Château Lafitte, under château.

laft¹, n. A Middle English preterit and past participle of *leave*¹.

laft² (laft), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of loft.

I . . . observed a peeres from her seat in front of the laft opposite to me, speaking vehemently to a fat lord at the table below.

Galt, The Steam-Boat, p. 220.

lafter (läf'ter), n. [Also laiter, lawter, latter, lighter, Sc. lachter, lauchter, a number of eggs laid, < Icel. lätr, lätr, the place where animals, esp. seals, whales, etc., lay their young, < leggja (pret. lä), lie, > lag, a laying, etc., < leggja, lay: see *lie*¹, *lay*¹. Lafter stands for lauchter, for lauchter*, and is related to *lie*¹, *lay*¹, as slaughter to *slay*¹.] The number of eggs laid by a hen before she sits. Halliwel. [North. Eng.]

lag¹ (lag), a. and n. [Prob. < W. lag, slack, loose, sluggish, languid, = Corn. lac, loose, remiss, = Gael. lag, feeble; cf. L. laxus, loose, lax (see *lax*¹), languere, be weak or languid; see *slanguid*¹, languish. Icel. lakra, lag, is appar. connected with lakt, defective, and thus with *E. lack*¹: see *lack*¹.] I. † a. I. Slow; tardy; late; coming after or behind.

Some tardy cripple bore the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried.

Shak., Rich. III, ii. 1. 90.

2. Long delayed; last.

I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours. Shak., I Hen. IV., v. 1. 24.

We prevent

The loathsome misery of age, beguile
The gout and rheum, that in lag hours attend
For grey approachers.

Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 4.

II. n. I. †. One who or that which comes behind; the last comer; one who hangs back.

What makes my ram the lag of all the flock?
Pope, Odyssey, ix. 526.

2†. The lowest class; the rump; the lag-end.
The senators of Athens, together with the common lag of people. Shak., T. of A., iii. 6. 89.

3. In mech., the amount of retardation of some movement: as, the lag of the valve of a steam-engine.

No unexceptionable experimental proof has ever been given that there is any such thing as a true magnetic lag; the apparent magnetic sluggishness of thick masses of iron is demonstrably due to internal induced currents.

S. P. Thompson, Dynamo-Elect. Mach., p. 74.

4. In mach., one of the strips which form the periphery of a wooden drum, the casing of a carding-machine, or the lagging or covering of a steam-boiler or -cylinder.—5. An old convict. [Australia.]

At last he fell in with two old lags who had a deadly grudge against the captain.

C. Reade, Never too Late to Mend, ix.

Hang lag¹. See hang, v. †.

lag¹ (lag), v.; pret. and pp. lagged, ppr. lagging. [lag, a.] I. intrans. To move slowly; fall behind; hang back; loiter; linger.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his;
Fortune in favour makes him lag behind.

Shak., I Hen. VI., iii. 3. 34.

Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage.
Johnson, Vanity of Human Wishes.

To this, Idomeneus: The fields of fight
Have prov'd thy valour, and unconquer'd might;
And were some ambush for the foes design'd,
Ev'n there, thy courage would not lag behind.

Pope, Iliad, xiii.

II. trans. I. †. To slacken.

The hunter with an arrow wounded him in the leg, which made him to halt and lag his flight.

Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels (1635), p. 98.

2. To clothe, as a steam-boiler, to prevent radiation of heat.

One [cylinder] which is well lagged or covered with non-conducting material. Encyc. Brit., XXII, 488.

3. To bring into the hands of justice; or cause to be punished for a crime. [Low slang.]

"He is my brother on one side of the house, at least," said Lord Etherington, "and I should not much like to have him lagged for forgery."

Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xxxi.

They'll ask no questions after him, for fear they should be obliged to prosecute, and so get him lagged.

Dickens, Oliver Twist, xvi.

lag² (lag), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To take; steal. [Old slang.]

Some come away lag
In bottle and bag;
Some steels for a jest
Eggs out of the nest.

Tusser, Husbandrie, November's Abstract.

lagaman, lageman, n. [< ML. (AL.) lagamannus, lagemannus, < ME. lageman, lagamon, lahman, < AS. lahmann, a lawman; see lawman.] In old Eng. law, a man vested with or at least qualified for the exercise of jurisdiction, or sac and sec. See lawman.

lagam-balsam (lag'am-bäl'sam), n. The product of an unknown tree of Sumatra, closely resembling gurgun-balsam.

lagan (lä'gan), n. See ligan.

lagartot (lä-gär'tō), n. [Sp., a lizard, an alligator: see alligarta, alligator.] An alligator.

We saw in it [the Orinoco] divers sorts of strange fishes of marvellous bigness, but for lagartos it excelled.

Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana. (E. D.)

Lagascea (la-gas'ē-š), n. [NL. (Cavanilles, 1800), after Prof. M. Lagasca, director of the Botanical Garden at Madrid.] A genus of composite plants of the tribe Helianthoideae, type of the subtribe Lagasceae, remarkable in having only a single flower in a head, but the heads themselves aggregated into a subglobose glomerule, and the proper involucre united into a 5-cleft tube. They are hairy or scabrous herbs or shrubs with entire or dentate opposite leaves, or the upper alternate, and white, yellow, or red flowers. Eight species are known, all natives of Mexico and Central America, one of which (L. mollis), however, is also found throughout nearly the whole of tropical America, and has become naturalized in many tropical countries of the eastern hemisphere.

Lagasceae (lag-a-sē'ē-š), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1873), < Lagascea + -ae.] A subtribe of helianthoid composite plants, consisting of the anomalous genus Lagascea.

lag-bellied (lag'bel'id), a. Having a slack, drooping belly.

From the lag-bellied toad
To the mammoth. Hood, Lycus the Centaur.

laget, v. t. [Origin obscure.] To wash. [Old slang.]

laget, n. [< lage, v.] Poor, thin drink. [Old slang.]

I bowse no lage, but a whole gage
Of this I bowse to you. Brome, Jovial Crew, ii.

lageman, n. See lagaman.

lagena (lä-jé'nä), n.; pl. lagenae (-nē). [L., also written lagena, lagena, lagona; < Gr. λάγνος (in late writers also λάγνος, after L.), a flask, bottle.] 1. (a) In Rom. antiq., a wine-vase; an amphora. (b) A vase of bottle-shaped form, generally in unfamiliar wares, as Levantine, Persian, or the like.—2. The sacular extremity of the cochlea in some of the vertebrates below mammals, as a bird, where ramify the ultimate filaments of the auditory nerve.—3. [cap.] In zool.: (a) The typical genus of Lagenidae. Forms of foraminifera referred to this genus are found from the Carboniferous to the present period. (b) A genus or subgenus of molluscs of the family Fasciolaridae.

Lagenaria (lä-jé-nä'ri-š), n. [NL., < L. lagena, a flask, + -aria.] A genus of plants of the natural order Cucurbitaceae. There is only one species, L. vulgaris, which occurs throughout tropical and subtropical Asia and Africa, where it is commonly cultivated. It is a downy annual climbing herb, with broad leaves and large white flowers. The fruit is extremely variable in size and shape; it is known as the bottle, club, or trumpet-gourd. See gourd.

Lagenidae (lä-jen'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lagena + -idae.] A family of perforate foraminifera, typified by the genus Lagena. The test is calcareous, and either monothalamous or consisting of a number of chamberlets joined in a straight, curved, spiral, alternating, or (rarely) branching series. The aperture is terminal, and simple or radiate. There is no interseptal skeleton and no canal system. The Lagenidae are marine microscopic organisms, more or less lageniform in shape.

Lagenida (lä-jé-nid'ē-š), n. pl. [NL.] The Lagenida regarded as an order, and divided into Lagenina, Polymorphina, and Ramulinina.

lageniform (lä-jen'i-fōrm), a. [< L. lagena, a flask, + forma, form.] In bot. and zool., shaped like a Florence flask; much dilated or subglobose at base, but ending in a slender cylinder or neck.

Thus the shell of Nodosaria is obviously made up of a succession of lageniform chambers.

W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 479.

Lageninae (lä-jé-ni'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lagena + -inae.] A subfamily of Lagenidae, having a single-chambered test.

Lagenorhynchus (lä-jé-nō-ring'kus), n. [NL., < L. lagena, Gr. λάγνος, a bottle, + Gr. ῥυγχος, a snout.] A genus of bottle-nosed dolphins, belonging to the subfamily Delphininae, having 80 to 90 vertebrae, small teeth, and a comparatively short and broad snout, as the white-

Young Skunk-porpoise (Lagenorhynchus acutus).
(From Report of U. S. Fish Commission, 1894.)

beaked and white-sided dolphins, L. albirostris and L. acutus or leucopleurus. The characteristic coloration is blackish with white stripes, whence some of the species are called skunk-porpoises. The species are at least nine in number, but their synonymy is confused. The one here figured, properly called L. acutus, is also known as L. leucopleurus, L. gubernator, and by other names. J. E. Gray, 1846.

lager (lä'gēr), n. [< G. lager, an abbr. of lagerbier, lager-beer: see lager-beer.] Same as lager-beer (which see, under *beer*¹). [U. S.]

lager-beer (lä'gēr-bēr), n. [< G. lagerbier, lit. 'store-beer,' < lager, a storehouse, magazine, a place where things lie in store (= AS. leger, a bed, couch, E. lair: see *lair*¹ and *lauger*²), + bier = *E. beer*¹.] See *beer*¹.

Lagerströmia (lä-gēr-strē'mi-š), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after Magnus von Lagerström, a director of the East India Company at Gothenburg.] A genus of polypetalous trees and shrubs belonging to the natural order Lythraceae and tribe Lythreae. They have a campanulate 6-parted calyx, 6 petals, numerous stamens, a 3- to 6-celled, 3- to 6-valved capsule, and large winged seeds. The leaves are mostly opposite and in two rows, petioled, oblong or ovate, entire, and often glaucous underneath, and the flowers are in ample terminal and axillary branching panicles. About 21 species are known, natives of tropical eastern Asia, subtropical Australia, and Madagascar. Five or six species are cultivated, notably L. indica, the crape-myrtle or Indian lilac, a hardy shrub, native of China, with bright rose-colored flowers borne in great profusion and exceedingly beautiful. L. Flos-Reginae, native of India, is called bloodwood, jarrot, and queen's-flower. See these words. L. microcarpa is the ben-teak.

Lagerströmiæ (lä'gēr-strē-mi'ē-š), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1826), < Lagerströmia + -æ.] A tribe of plants of the order Lythraceae, founded on the genus Lagerströmia.

Lagetta (lä-jet'ä), n. [NL. (A. L. Jussieu, 1789), < lagetto, the native name of the tree in Jamaica.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous trees of the West Indies, belonging to the natural order Thymelæaceae and tribe Euthymelæceae. It is characterized by hermaphrodite tetramerous, loosely spiked or racemed flowers, and by having the four broad scales of the urceolate persistent perianth connivent under the stamens. These trees have beautifully reticulated bark, broad, oblong, alternate leaves, and white flowers. Only two species are known, both confined to the West Indies. L. tintaria is the lacebark-tree.

laggan (lag'an), n. [Hind.] In India, a basin with pierced cover into which water is poured from the lota to wash the hands after a meal.

laggard (lag'gärd), a. and n. [< *lag*¹ + -ard.] I. a. Slow; sluggish; backward.

Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age.

Collins, Odes, xii.

Weak minstrels of a laggard day,
Skilled but to imitate an elder page.

Scott, Don Roderick, Int., st. 3.

II. n. One who lags; a loiterer; a lazy, slack fellow.

A laggard in love, and a dastard in war.

Scott, Young Lochinvar.

Here comes a laggard hanging down his head,
Who seems no bolder than a beaten hound.

Tennyson, Geraint.

laggen (lag'en), n. [Origin obscure.] The angle between the side and the bottom of a wooden dish. [Scotch.]

But or the day was done, I trow,
The laggen they hae clautet Fu' clean that day. Burns, A Dream.

Whether you prove a lagger in the race,
Or with a vigorous ardour urge your pace,
I shall maintain my usual rate, no more.
Francis, tr. of Horace's Epistles, II., To Lollius.

lagger² (lag'ér), n. [Prob. a dial. var. of layer, as ligger of *hier*¹.] 1. A narrow strip of ground. — 2. A groin lane. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.]

lagging (lag'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *lag*¹, v.] 1. The act of walking or moving slowly, or of falling behind. — 2. In arch., the planking, consisting of narrow strips, extending from one rib of the centering of an arch, vault, or tunnel to another, and affording direct support to the voussoirs until the arch or vault is closed in. — 3. In mining, strips of wood or light timbers laid across the stulls in the drifts to prevent fragments of rock from falling through. In some coal-mines bars or rails of iron are used for this purpose, and give an important increment of strength to the construction. Sometimes called lacting. 4. In mach., same as deadling. — Lagging of the tides, the phenomenon of the lengthening of each tide-day, or interval between tides nearly twenty-four hours apart, which lengthening takes place during the time from new or full moon to quadrature, or from spring to neap tides: opposed to priming of the tides. It is due to the change of the relative directions of the solar and lunar attractions, and lengthens the average interval between daily tides from about 24h. 51m. to about 25h. 5m.

laggingly (lag'ing-li), adv. In a lagging manner; loiteringly.

lag-goose (lag'gös), n. 1. The graylag: more fully called gray lag-goose or graylag goose. See graylag. — 2. A laggard. Davies.

Beware of Gill Laggonse, disordering thy house,
No dainties who catcheth than crafty fed mouse!
Tusser, Husbandrie, Dinner Matters.

laght, n. A Middle English form of *law*¹.

Lagidium (lä-jid'i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγιδιον, dim. of λαγός, lagós, a hare.] A genus of alpine rodents of the family Chinchillidae; the South American chinchas or rabbit-squirrels. They are like chinchillas, but have long ears, long bushy tail, and 4 toes instead of 5 on the fore feet. Two species inhabit the Andes of Chili, Bolivia, and Peru; these are L. cuvieri and L. pallipes. Also called Lagotis. Bennett, 1833.

lag-link (lag'link), n. A link for holding a lag (a bar, plank, etc.), as one of the links in an endless chain through each link of which a bar is passed, used in a form of bark-conveyor for tan-bark.

lag-machine (lag'ma-shén'), n. A machine for shaping wooden lags or cleading for jack-oting steam-pipes or cylinders, or for covering drums.

lagnappe (lan-yap'), n. [Also lagnappe; cf. nappa.] A trifling article added gratis to a purchase in shops or markets to encourage custom; any complimentary present from a dealer to a customer: as, a turkey sent at Christmas for lagnappe. [Louisiana.]

The pleasant institution of napa—the petty gratuity added by the retailer to anything bought—grew the pleasanter, drawn out into Gallicized lagnappe.

G. W. Cable, Creoles of Louisiana, xvi.

Lagoa (lä-gö'ä), n. [NL. (Harris, 1841), irreg. < Gr. λαγός, Ionic λαγός, a hare.] A notable North American genus of bombycid moths, belonging to the Limaenidae. The larvae are of remarkable form, resembling oval bits of curly brown or yellowish hair. Beneath their long silky hairs are concealed sharp spines, which produce a severe nettling effect upon the skin of one handling them. The cocoons are mitle knots on twigs. Several species are known, the most abundant being L. opercularis.

Lagocephalus (lag-ö-sef'ä-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + κεφαλή, head.] A genus of gymnodont fishes of the family Tetrodontidae; the rabbit-fishes. L. lewigatus is one of the largest species of the family, attaining a length of 3 feet; it is common in the Gulf of Mexico and West Indian waters, and is known as the tambor or smooth puffer. See cut under Tetrodontidae.

Lagodon (lä-gö'dön), n. [< Gr. λαγός, a hare, + ὀδών (ōdōn-) = E. tooth.] A genus of spa-Pinfish, or Bream (Lagodon rhomboides).

roid fishes, related to the scup and sheephead. L. rhomboides is a United States species called pinfish, and also bream. The genus is often included in Diplodus.

Lagocia (lä-gö'shiä), n. [NL. (Linnæus), so called because the umbellets are fancifully likened to a hare's nest; < Gr. λαγός, lagós, a hare, + οἶκος, a house.] A genus of umbelliferous plants of the tribe Saniculeæ. They have but one style, setose fruit, pinnate leaves with awn-pointed teeth, and subglobose, many-flowered umbels with pectinate pinnatifid bracts. There is only one species, L. cuminoides, the wild cumlin, native of the Mediterranean region from Spain to Syria. It has white flowers, and is sometimes cultivated in gardens. See cumin.

Lagomorpha (lag-ö-mör'fä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + μορφή, form, shape.] The series or alliance of duplicidontate rodents, conterminous with the suborder Duplicidentata, and containing the two families Leporidae and Lagomyidae, or hares and pikas, which are thus together contrasted with Myomorpha, Sciuromorpha, and Hystriomorpha. The characters are the same as those of the suborder Duplicidentata.

lagomorphic (lag-ö-mör'fik), a. [< Lagomorpha + -ic.] Having the form or structure of a hare; leporine, in a broad sense; duplicidentate, as a rodent; of or pertaining to the Lagomorpha, as a hare or pika.

lagomyid (lä-gom'i-id), n. A rodent of the family Lagomyidae; a pika.

Lagomyiæ (lag-ö-mi'i-dö), n. pl. [NL., < Lagomys + -idæ.] A family of lagomorphic or duplicidentate rodents, of the order Glires or Rodentia; the pikas, conies, or calling-hares. The dental formula is: 1. $\bar{3}$, c. $\bar{3}$, pm. $\bar{3}$ (rarely 1), m. $\bar{3} \times 2 = 26$ (or 22) teeth. The incisors are grooved and notched. The fore and hind limbs are of proportionate lengths; the clavicles complete; the ears large and rounded; the eyes small; the whiskers copious; the fore paws have clawed digits; the hind feet are four-toed; the tail is rudimentary. The pelage is soft and dense. The general aspect is rather that of a guinea-pig than that of a hare. Lagomys is the only living genus. Titanomys is a fossil genus of the Miocene, with only 22 teeth.

Lagomyinæ (lä-gö-mi-i'nö), n. pl. [NL., < Lagomys + -inæ.] The Lagomyiæ rated as a subfamily of Leporidae.

Lagomys (lä-gö'mis), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, lagós, a hare, + μῦς = E. mouse.] The typical genus of Lagomyiæ. There are several species, all inhabiting boreal and alpine regions of the northern hemisphere, such as L. alpinus of Europe and Asia, L. ogotona of Asia, and L. princeps of America. The last is known as the little chief hare, cony, and starved rat. It inhabits the mountains of the West as far south as New Mexico and Arizona. In the lower latitudes it is found only at great altitudes. See pika.

Little Chief Hare (Lagomys princeps).

lagonit, n. An obsolete variant of ligan.

lagonite (lag-ö-nit), n. [< lagoon (It. lagone) + *-ite*².] A hydrous ferric borate occurring as an earthy incrustation, of a yellow color, in the Tuscan lagoons.

lagoon (lä-gön'), n. [Also lagune, two forms of same ult. origin being concerned: (1) Also written lagune (= F. lagune), < It. laguna = Sp. laguna, Pg. lagoa, < L. lacuna, a ditch, lake, < lacus, lake; (2) It. lagone, a pool, aug. of lago, a lake, < L. lacus, a lake: see lacuna, *lake*¹.] 1. An area of shallow water, or even of marshy land, bordering on the sea, and usually separated from the region of deeper water outside by a belt of sand or of sand-dunes, more or less changeable in position. Such areas are chiefly formed at the mouths of rivers which bring down considerable detrital material from adjacent elevated land—this detritus in course of time forming a complicated network of ridges separating tracts covered by shallow water, which, as the process of filling goes on, tend to become converted first into marshy and finally into dry land. The best-known lagoons are those near the head of the Adriatic, on its western side, on the outer edge of which is situated Venice, often called the "City of the Lagoons" (la città delle lagune). The tendency of the Brenta and other small streams coming from the Alps to fill up the Venetian lagoons is so powerful that it is only by persistent and costly works of hydraulic engineering that the city has to a certain extent retained its position unchanged. A somewhat similar condition prevails at the mouth of the Rhone, where, however, the lagoons are called étangs. On the southern coast of the Baltic considerable areas of the shallow sea (called Haffe) are closed in by long crescentiform sand-banks (Nehrungen); but the conditions here are quite different from those at the head of the Adriatic, since the streams flowing over the plains of North Germany are not torrential in character. Lagoons are found in great numbers along the coast of Brazil, formed there as elsewhere by the conflict of large detritus-bearing rivers with the ocean waves and tides. In regions where Spanish is or formerly was the current language, the word lagoon is likely to be used with more latitude of meaning, since in the Spanish language laguna is applied to ordinary lakes, to the bottoms of deep bays, especially when these are more or less closed in by a narrowing of the coast-lines, so as to give rise to lake-like areas, and also to shallow, swampy, or almost dried-up lakes inland as well as near the coast.

2. With reference to Tuscany and some other parts of Italy, the basin of a hot spring, especially one from which borax is obtained: from the Italian use of lagone in this sense.

The lagoons of Tuscany are basins into which the waters from Soffioni are discharged.

Geikie, Text-Book of Geol. (2d ed.), p. 218.

3. In occasional use, the area of still water enclosed within an atoll, which is often called a lagoon island. See atoll.

We passed through the Low or Dangerous Archipelago, and saw several of these most curious rings of coral land, just rising above the water's edge, which have been called Lagoon Islands. Darwin, Voyage of the Beagle, xviii.

lagoon-whaling (lä-gön'hwä'ling), n. The pursuit of or industry of killing the California gray whale in the lagoons. It is the most dangerous kind of gray-whaling.

lagophthalmia (lag-of-thal'mi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + ὄφθαλμός, the eye.] Inability to close the eye, resulting from paralysis, spasm, or local injury: so called from the supposition that in its natural condition the eye of the hare when asleep is affected with such inability. Also lagophthalmus.

lagophthalmic (lag-of-thal'mik), a. [< lagophthalmia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with lagophthalmia.

lagophthalmus (lag-of-thal'mus), n. [NL.: see Lagophthalmia.] Same as lagophthalmia.

lagopode (lag'ö-pöd), n. [< lagopod-ous.] A ptarmigan; a snow-grouse. See Lagopus.

lagopodous (lä-gop'ö-dus), a. [< Gr. λαγώπους (-πόδ-), hare-footed: see Lagopus.] In zoöl., hare-footed; having the feet densely furry or feathery, as a lemming or a ptarmigan. See first cut under grouse.

Lagopus (lä-gö'pus), n. [NL., < L. lagopus, < Gr. λαγώπους, a bird, prob. a kind of grouse, also a plant, hare's-foot; lit. 'hare-footed,' < λαγός, a hare, + πούς = E. foot.] 1. A genus of grouse, of the family Tetraonidae, having the feet and nasal fossæ densely feathered; the ptarmigans. There are several species, most of which turn white in winter. They inhabit alpine and boreal regions of the northern hemisphere. The red-game of Scotland is a peculiar insulated form which does not turn white in winter, known as L. scoticus. The willow-grouse is L. albus. The rock-ptarmigan is L. rupestris. The white-tailed ptarmigan of the Rocky Mountains is L. leucurus. There are other species. See first cut under grouse.

2. A former generic name of the plant hare's-foot, Ochroma Lagopus.

Lagorchestes (lag-ör-kes'těz), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + ὄρχηστis, a dancer: see orchestra.] A genus of Australian marsupial mammals of the family Macropodidae, having the muffle hairy as in Macropus; the hare-kangaroos. They are small, somewhat resembling hares, and live in open plains, making a form in the herbse. L. fasciatus is an example. See cut under hare-kangaroo.

lagostoma (lä-gos'tö-mä), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + στόμα, the mouth.] In teratol., hardlip.

Lagostomidæ (lag-os-tom'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lagostomus + -idæ.] A supposed family of rodents, typified by the genus Lagostomus. Also Lagostominae, as a subfamily of Chinchillidae.

Lagostomus (lä-gos'tö-mus), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + στόμα, the mouth.] A South American genus of hystriomorphic rodents of the family Chinchillidae, of comparatively large size and stout form, with the lip cleft, the fore feet 4-toed, the hind 3-toed, and bushy tail. The only species is the vicacha or hisacha, L. trichodactylus. Also erroneously Lagotomys. See cut under vicacha.

Lagothrix (lä-goth'riks), n. [NL., < Gr. λαγός, a hare, + θρίξ, the hair.] 1. A genus of South American monkeys, of the family Cebidae and subfamily Cebinae; the woolly monkeys. They have a long prehensile tail, which is naked on the under side near the end, well-developed thumbs, comparatively short limbs, and woolly black pelage. There are two species, L. humboldti, the caparra or caparre, and L. infamatus, the barrigudo. The latter is one of the largest of American monkeys, the body being upward of two feet in length. See cut on following page.

2. [l. c.] A monkey of this genus.

lagotic (lä-gö'tik), a. [< Gr. λαγός, a hare, + οἶος (ōiōs-) = E. carl, + -ic.] Rabbit-eared.

Woolly Monkey (Lagothrix humboldti).

Lagotis (lā-gō'tis), n. [Gr. λαγός, a hare, + ὄς (ōs) = E. ear.] A synonym of Lagidium. Bennett, 1833.

Lagrange's equation. See equation.

Lagrangian (la-gran'ji-an), a. [Gr. Λαγρανζ (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to Joseph Louis Lagrange (1736-1813), a great Piedmontese mathematician, who brought analytical mechanics to a regular method.—Lagrangian determinant, a determinant which is equated to zero in Lagrange's method of treating small oscillations.—Lagrangian equation. See equation.—Lagrangian formula of interpolation, the formula

$$U_x = U \frac{(x-b)(x-c)\dots + U_b \frac{(x-a)(x-c)\dots}{(b-a)(b-c)\dots} + \text{etc.}}{a(a-b)(a-c)\dots}$$

This formula really belongs to Euler.—Lagrangian function. See function.—Lagrangian method, in hydrodynamics, the method which uses the differential equation of the motion of a particle, instead of that of the velocity at a point in space. This method was used by Lagrange, but originated with Euler, like the so-called Eulerian method.

lagre (F. pron. lä'gr), n. [F.] In sheet-glass manuf., a sheet of glass laid over the flattening-stone to protect a cylinder to be flattened from any slight inequalities of the stone itself.

lagrimando (lag-ri-man'dō), a. [It., ppr. of lagrimare, weep, < L. lacrimare, weep; see lacrymation.] Same as lagrimoso.

lagrimoso (lag-ri-mō'sō), a. [It.: see lacrimoso.] In music, plaintive; noting passages to be so rendered. Also lacrimoso and lagrimando.

lag-screw (lag'skrō), n. 1. A flat-headed screw, used principally to attach lags to band-drums.—2. An iron bolt with a square or hexagonal head and cut with a wood-screw thread. It is cylindrical under the head, so as to admit of turning after it has entered the wood. In Great Britain called coach-screw. Car-Builders Dict.

lagthing (läg'ting), n. [Norw., < lag, law, + thing, parliament; see law and thing.] The upper house of the Norwegian Storting or parliament, consisting of one fourth of the members of the latter elected by the whole body. See Storting.

lag-tooth, n. One of the grinders, the hindmost molar or wisdom-tooth: so called because it is the last to be cut. Florio.

laguncula (lä-gung-kü-lä), n. [L., a dim. of lagona, lagena, a flagon; see lagena.] Same as lagena.

Laguncularia (lä-gung-kü-lä'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Gärtner, 1805), < L. laguncula, dim. of lagena, a bottle, in allusion to the form of the calyx.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Combretaceae and suborder Combretaceae, having the calyx-tube turbinate and not produced beyond the ovary, 10 included stamens, opposite leaves, and spiked flowers. Only one species is known, L. racemosa, the white buttonwood or white mangrove, a native of the immediate coast throughout the West Indies and semitropical Florida to Cape Canaveral, and also of tropical Africa. It is a small tree, usually only 20 or 30 feet in height, but in exceptional cases 60 or 70, with very heavy, hard, and strong close-grained wood, susceptible of a high polish.

lagune, n. See lagoon.

lahman, n. See lagaman.

Lahore cloth. [So called from Lahore in India.] A name given to cloth made in Great Britain from Cashmere wool.

laic (lä'ik), a. and n. [The older form is lay, q. v.; laic is directly from the LL.; = F. laïque = Sp. laico, lego = Pg. teigo = It. laico, < LL. laicus, < Gr. λαϊκός, of or from the people, < λαός, the people.] 1. a. Belonging to the laity or people, in distinction from the clergy or professionals.

An unprincipled, unedified, and laick rabble. Milton, Areopagitica, p. 35.

II. n. A layman, in distinction from a clergyman.

The privilege of teaching was anciently permitted to many worthy Laymen; And Cyrian in his Epistles professes he will do nothing without the advice and assent of his assistant Laicks. Milton, Church-Government, il. 3.

laical (lä'i-kal), a. [Gr. λαϊκός + -al.] Same as laic. [Rare.]

laicality (lä'i-kal'i-ti), n. [Gr. λαϊκός + -ality.] The condition or quality of being laic; the state of a layman. [Rare.]

laically (lä'i-kal-i), adv. After the manner of a layman or the laity.

laicization (lä'i-si-zä'shon), n. [Gr. λαϊκός + -ation.] The act of rendering lay, or of depriving of a clerical character; removal from clerical rank, influence, or control.

In France, the republic seemed bent on an entire division of church and state, and the laicization of the hospitals and schools still continued. Appleton's Ann. Cyc., 1886, p. 790.

laicize (lä'i-siz), v. t.; pret. and pp. laicized, ppr. laicizing. [Gr. λαϊκός + -ize.] To render lay; deprive of a clerical character or relation.

So it is M. Lavy, M. Joffrin, M. Navarre, M. Patenne, who guide the spirit of education, and choose the books for our libraries. You may be sure that they take care that laicizing should become a reality. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 710.

laid (läd), p. a. [Pp. of lay, v.] 1. Put or set down; thrown down; prostrate.

Such pleasure makes the Grasshopper so poore,
And ligge so laid, when Winter doth her straine.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., October.

They that have drunk "the cup of slumber" had need to be hidden "awake and stand up," for they are sluggish and laid. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 169.

2. Pressed down; pressed.—Laid paper, paper that shows in its fabric the marks of the close parallel wires on which the paper-pulp was laid in the process of its manufacture; distinguished from voore paper, which in the process of manufacture is laid on woven flannels or on felts.

laidly (läd'li), a. A dialectal variant of loathly.

laie¹, v. An obsolete form of *lay*¹.

laie², n. An obsolete preterit of *lie*¹.

laie³, n. An obsolete form of *lay*³.

laier, n. An obsolete form of *lair*¹, layer.

laigh (läch), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of *low*².

laik, v. and n. See *lake*².

lain¹ (län). Past participle of *lie*¹.

lain² (län), n. [Cf. *lain*¹, pp.; < *lay*¹, v. Cf. *lain*¹, layer.] 1. A layer. Harrison, Descrip. of England, p. 187. (Hallivell).—2. Plow-land lying at the foot of the downs. [Prov. Eng.]

Light falls the rain on link and laine.
Spectator, No. 2137, p. 574.

lain³ (län), n. [Gr. λαϊκός, lain, layen, layne, denial, concealment; partly < AS. layen = OS. lugina = D. logen = MLG. logene, loggene, logge = OHG. lugina, MHG. lügen, lügen, G. lüge = Dan. Sw. lögn = Goth. lügen, falsehood, and partly from a related noun represented by OHG. lounna, denial, = Icel. laun = Sw. Dan. lön, concealment (whence the verb *lain*³, q. v.); from the root of AS. leogan, etc., lie: see *lie*².] Denial; concealment.

A woman I sawe there at the last
That I first met, with-outyn layn,
Ful doofully on me here eyn sech cast.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 210.

lain⁴ (län), v. [Also dial. lean, ten; < ME. lainen, laynen, leynen, < AS. lūgnian, lūgnian (= OS. lūgnian = OHG. luginen, lounnen, MHG. lūgenen, lūgenen, G. läugnen, deny, = Icel. leyna, conceal; from the noun: see *lain*³, n. The ME. form is partly due to the Icel.] 1. trans. To deny; conceal.

For alle the lufez vpon lyue, layne not the sothe,
For gile.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), I. 1786.

II. intrans. To use concealment; speak falsely.

"Of my dissee," quod she, "yf I shuld layne
Only to yow, I wls I were to blame."
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), I. 717.

lainert, laineret, n. Same as lannier.

lair¹ (lä'r), n. [Also in some senses layer, which is partly differentiated; < ME. leir, < AS. leger, a couch, bed, lair (= D. leger, a couch, bed, lair, = OHG. legar, a couch, MHG. leger, lägar, läger, G. lager, a couch, bed, place of lying, storehouse (see lager-beer), = Goth. ligrs, a couch), < lūgan, lie: see *lie*¹.] Cf. layer, *lea-guer*².] 1. A place in which to lie or rest; a bed; a couch: now used only of, or with figurative reference to, the den or resting-place of a wild beast.

My love I lulled vppe in hys leir,
With cradel-bande I gan hym bynde,
Cros, he stiketh vppon thi steir,
Naked in the wyld wynde.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 200.
Out of the ground up rose,
As from his lair, the wild beast.
Milton, P. L., vii. 457.

2. A litter, as of rabbits; a stock.

His bride and hee were both rabbets of one lair.
Breton, Merry Wonders, p. 8.

3. An open pasture; a field.

More hard for hungry steed t' abstaine from pleasant lare.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. viii. 29.

It came to pass that born I was
Of lineage good, of gentle blood,
In Essex layer, in village fair,
That Rivenhall hight.
Tusser, Author's Life (ed. 1672), p. 140.

4. A portion of a burying-ground affording space sufficient for one or more graves; a burial-plot. [Scotch.] lair² (lä'r), n. A Scotch form of *lore*¹.

lair³ (lä'r), n. [Gr. λαϊκός, layre, lare, < Icel. leir = Sw. Dan. ler, clay, mire.] 1. Clay; earth.
Of water his body, is fieshe laire,
His heer of fuyr, his honde of ayre.
Cursor Mund. (Hallivell).

2. Mire; a bog; a quagmire. [Scotch.—3. Soil; land; ground: in this sense probably confused with *lair*¹, 3. [Provincial.] lair³ (lä'r), v. t. [Gr. λαϊκός, n.] To sink when wading in snow, mud, or quagmire. [Scotch.]

And thro' the drift, deep lairing, sprattle.
Burns, A Winter Night.

In Scotland, also, cattle venturing on a "quaking moss" are often mired, or laired, as it is termed.

Sir C. Lyell, Prin. of Geol., II. 510.

laird (lärd), n. [The Sc. form of lord.] In Scotland, a landed proprietor; especially, the owner of a hereditary estate; also, rarely, a house-owner; a landlord.

lairdship (lärd'ship), n. [Gr. λαϊκός + -ship; ult. a dial. form of lordship.] 1. The condition or quality of a laird.—2. An estate; landed property. [Scotch.]

My lairdship can yield me
As meikle a year
As had us in pottage
And gude knockit beer.
Ramsay, Poems, II. 313.

lairy (lä'r'i), a. [Gr. λαϊκός, layri, layery; < *lair*³ + -y.] 1. Miry. [Scotch.—2. Earthly.

For it es heghe, and alle that it duellis in it lyfzes abowne layery lutes, and vile covaytes.
MS. Lincoln A. I. 17, f. 196. (Hallivell).

laissez-faire (les'ä-fär'), n. [F.: laissez = It. lasciare, let, permit, < L. laxare, relax; faire, < L. facere, do: see fact.] A letting alone; a general non-interference with individual freedom of action; the let-alone principle or policy in government and political economy. The term was first used in France to designate that principle of political economy which would leave industry and trade absolutely free from taxation or restriction by government, except so far as required by public peace and order. It has since been extended to include non-interference by controlling authority with any guiltless exercise of individual will.

laissez-faire (les'ä-fär'), n. [F.: laissez, 2d pers. pl. impv. of laisser, let; faire, do: see laissez-faire.] Same as laissez-faire.

Nowadays, however, the worst punishment to be looked for by one who questions its [governmental authority's] omnipotence, is that he will be reviled as a reactionary who talks laissez-faire. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 55.

laistowel, n. Same as laystall.

lait¹, n. [ME. lait, layt, leit, leyt, < AS. liget, lēget, pl. lēgetu, lēgeta, lēgetu, lightning; cf. OHG. laigazan = Goth. lauhatan, lighten; from the root of lēht, light: see *light*¹, a. and n.] Lightning; flash.

And that ys not full moche wonder,
For that day cometh layte and thunder.
MS. Cantab. Fl. ii. 33, f. 43. (Hallivell).

lait² (lä't), v. t. and i. [Also late; < ME. laitén, layten, legten, < Icel. leita, seek, search, inquire, = AS. wātian, look at, = Goth. waiatōn, look around.] To seek; search for; inquire. [Prov. Eng.]

A! lorde, thou wote wele ilke a tyde,
The Jewes thei layte the ferre and nere,
To stone the vn-to dede,
Or putte to perles payne. York Plays, p. 197.

laiter (lä'tēr), n. Same as lafter.

laith (läth), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of loath.

laithie (läth'i), n. [Cf. lythe.] The pollack. [Prov. Eng.] laithfu' (läth'fü'), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of loathful.

laithly (läth'li), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of loathly.

laits (lâits), n. Same as laithc.
laity (lâ'i-ti), n. [< lay⁴ + -ty (cf. gaiety, < gay¹).] 1. The state of being a layman, or of not being in orders.

The more usual cause of this deprivation is a mere laity, or want of holy orders. Ayliffe, Paragon.

2. The people, as distinguished from the clergy; the body of the people not in orders; laymen collectively.

If personal defalcance be thought reasonable to disemploy the whole calling, then neither clergy nor laity should ever serve a prince. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 245.

3. The people outside of a particular profession, as distinguished from those belonging to it; persons unskilled in a particular art or science, as distinguished from those who are professionally conversant with it.

What . . . could be more absurd than for one of the laity to attempt to measure and weigh stars many millions of millions of miles removed from his grasp?

G. H. Leves, Proba. of Life and Mind, I. 1, § 20.

lakt, n. and v. A Middle English form of læk¹.
lake¹ (lâk), n. [< ME. lake, a lake, a stream, < AS. lacu, a lake, pool; merged in ME. with AF. lake, lak, OF. lac, F. lac = Sp. lag. It. lago; < L. lacus, a large body of water, a basin, tank, or eastern of water, pit, hollow, = Gr. lákkos, a hole, pit, pond; = Ir. Gael. loch (> AS. loh, E. lough, Sc. loch) = W. luch = Corn. lo = Bret. louch, a lake (see loch and lough, which are thus ult. identical with lake), = AS. lagu, lago (> ME. laic, laye, etc.: see lay³) = OS. lagu (in comp.) = Icel. lög, the sea, water; also in AS. lagu = OHG. lagu = Icel. lög = Goth. lagus, the name of the Runic form of the letter L. Cf. lactic², latch³, leach³, a pit, etc.] 1. A body of water surrounded by land, or not forming part of the ocean and occupying a depression below the ordinary drainage-level of the region. Lakes are depressions or basins filled by streams flowing into them, the water thus introduced generally accumulating until it runs over at the lowest point of the edge of the depression, and then flowing to the sea. But in some cases a river may fill a number of such depressions in succession before reaching the sea, as is very notably the case with the chain of lakes and rivers beginning with Lake Superior and ending in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The larger depressions which when filled with water become lakes are ordinarily orographic in character—that is, they owe their origin to movements of the earth's crust, in the same manner as mountain-ranges. Many smaller lakes, however, especially the shallower ones, fill depressions which have originated from local or less general causes, as when produced by unequal decay or erosion of rocks, or by irregular distribution of surface detritus. The existence of a depression being given, the question whether it shall be entirely filled with water is one of climate. In regions of small rainfall and large evaporation, depressions occur which do not become filled with water, and consequently do not furnish any surplus which shall overflow and run to the sea. Such regions, having no drainage to the sea, are called closed basins, and there are very large areas of this character in Asia and North America, and smaller ones elsewhere. The water in the lakes occupying the lowest portion of such depressions is always more or less saline, because that which is brought in leaves as it evaporates a constantly accumulating store of the saline matters which it holds in solution. The Caspian Sea is properly a salt lake; and some lakes are excessively salt, as the Great Salt Lake in Utah and the Dead Sea (also properly a lake). There are lakes of considerable size, as several in Canada, which have no visible inlets, being fed entirely from subterranean sources.

Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes and groves.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 33.

So stretch'd out huge in length the Arch-fiend lay Chain'd on the burning lake. Milton, P. L., l. 210.

2. A relatively small pond partly or wholly artificial, as an ornament of a park or of public or private grounds.

At Timon's villa let us pass a day. . . .
 Two Cupids squirt before; a lake behind Improves the keenness of the northern wind.
Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 111.

3. A stream; rivulet. [Prov. Eng.]—4. A pit; den.

And set hym in ye lake of lyons where Danyell the prophete was, and refreshed hym with mete and drynke.
Sir R. Guyfforde, Ylgyrmyage, p. 35.

Galilean lake. See Galilean¹.—Lady of the laket. See lady.—Lake School, in Eng. lit., a name given to a group of poets including Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Southey, from their residence in or connection with the lake country of England (Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire): first given in derision by the "Edinburgh Review."—The Great Lakes, specifically, the five North American lakes, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, which form the largest chain of lakes in the world. They discharge into the river St. Lawrence, in the basin of which they are included by geographers, and which is itself sometimes reckoned as beginning with the St. Louis, the head stream of Lake Superior.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), I. 1784.

2. A contest; a fight.

Thow sallo lose this layke, and thi lyfe aftyre!
 Thow has bytede in delyte and lordchippes inewe!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 3387.

lake³ (lâk), n. [< F. laque, lac, < Pers. lâk, lake, < lak, lac; see lac².] A pigment formed by absorbing animal, vegetable, or coal-tar coloring matter from an aqueous solution by means of metallic bases. The general method of preparation is to add an alkali solution to an infusion of the substance affording the desired color, as madder, cochineal, logwood, or quercitron. To this is added a solution of common alum, producing a precipitate of alumina, which in settling carries with it the coloring matter, thus forming the lake. As paints, lakes lack body, and are mostly used in glazing over other colors. From cochineal is prepared carmine, the finest of the red lakes. Crimson lake is a cochineal lake containing more aluminous base than carmine. Carmine lake is the cheaper and weaker lake made from cochineal after the carmine has been extracted. Scarlet lake is prepared by mixing vermilion with crimson lake. Purple lake is a species of crimson lake with a purple hue. Madder lakes are produced by precipitating the coloring matter of the madder root with an alumina base. They range in color from light pink through red to brown and purple. Indian lake is the same as lac-lake (which see, under lac²). Yellow lake is made from quercitron bark, sometimes from Persian or French Avignon berries. Green lake is compounded by adding Prussian blue to yellow lake. Citrine lake is an obsolete term for brown pink. Burnt lake is obtained by partially charring crimson lake. From logwood are obtained lakes of various shades of deep-bruwnish red, as rose lake, Florence lake, Florentine lake, etc. From certain of the coal-tar colors are obtained lakes almost identical in color with cochineal and madder and equal in permanency.

lake⁴ (lâk), n. [ME., < OD. laken, D. laken, linen, cloth, a sheet, = OS. lacan = MLG. laken, eloth, = OHG. lakan, lathan, MHG. lachen, G. laken = Icel. lakan = Dan. lagen = Sw. lakan, a sheet.] A kind of fine white linen.

Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 147.

lake⁵ (lâk), v. A dialectal form of leak.

lake⁶ (lâk), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of lark¹.

Ye've married een below our degree,
 A lake to a' our kin, O,
Laird of Drum (Child's Ballads, IV. 129).

lake-dweller (lâk'dwel'èr), n. A lacustrine; an inhabitant of a lake-dwelling or lacustrine village.

lake-dwelling (lâk'dwel'ing), n. A dwelling built on piles or other support over the water of a lake or other body of water. The name was first applied to remains of prehistoric dwellings discovered in recent times at the bottom of many lakes of Switzerland, and is now used for similar structures anywhere, whether ancient or modern. In the Swiss lakes, as in most other examples, a number of dwellings, forming a lacustrine village, were built together on a platform resting either upon piles or upon layers of fascines supported by stakes, and appear generally to have been connected with the shore by a bridge. Many implements of bone, flint, Piers Plouvaan (Cv), vil. 394.

lake-shad (lâk'shad), n. One of several different inferior fishes, as snuckers, etc.: a commercial name under which the prepared fish are sold. [Lake region, U. S.]

lake-sturgeon (lâk'stêr'jon), n. The common fresh-water sturgeon of North America, Acipenser rubicundus. Also called black sturgeon, Ohio sturgeon, rock-sturgeon, and stone-sturgeon.

lake-trout (lâk'trout), n. 1. The common salmon-trout of western North America, Salmo purpuratus; the Rocky Mountain brook-trout; the Yellowstone trout. It is one of the river-salmon, not anadromous, and belongs to the section Fario of the genus Salmo. It has a narrow band of small teeth on the hyoid bone. The caudal fin is slightly forked; the dorsal rather low. It is extremely variable in size, coloration, and character of the scales. It may be generally recognized by the profusion of small round black spots on most of the body, and a red blotch on the lower jaw. It is regarded as the parent stock of several varieties of black-spotted trout. It abounds in the rivers of Alaska, Oregon, and Washington, there descending to the sea, and sometimes attains a weight of 20 pounds; it is also found in the Yellowstone and upper Missouri regions, the Great Basin of Utah, in Colorado, and in the upper Rio Grande. The Waha lake-trout of Washington is a variety (bouvieri) of this species. Another variety, found from the Kansas to the upper Missouri, is called var. stomias. A third is var. henshawi, the silver or black trout of Lake Tahoe, Pyramid Lake, and the streams of the Sierra Nevada. The variations of this fish have given rise to many technical names, among them Salmo twayatch. See cut under salmon-trout.

2. The Mackinaw trout, Salvelinus namaycush, more fully called the great lake-trout; the longe of Vermont; the togue of Maine. This is an entirely different fish from the foregoing, being near a char.

Great Lake-trout, or Mackinaw Trout (Salvelinus namaycush).

The mouth is large, with very strong teeth; the caudal fin is well forked, the adipose small; the color is dark gray, sometimes pale, sometimes blackish, everywhere marked with rounded paler spots, often tinged with reddish. This fish sometimes attains a length of 3 feet; it abounds in the larger bodies of water of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, northern New York, and the Great Lake region, to Montana and northward. A variety of this, found only in Lake Superior, is known as the sicconet.

lakewaket, n. Same as likewake. Bourne's Pop. Antig. (1777), p. 21.

lake-weed (lâk'wêd), n. The water-pepper, Polygnum Hydropiper, a plant growing in still water. The name is also loosely applied to other lacustrine plants. [Eng.] lake-whiting (lâk'whi'ting), n. The Musquaw river whitefish, Coregonus labradoricus.

lakh, n. See lac³.

lakin¹ (lâ'kin), n. [< ME. lakynne, lakayn; appar. irreg. (for laking?) < lake², play: see lake².] A plaything; a toy. [Old and prov. Eng.]

He putt up in his bosome thes iij lakayns.
Gesta Romanorum, p. 105. (Halliwell.)

lakin² (lā'kin), n. [A contracted form of ladykin: formerly common in oaths, with reference to the Virgin Mary.] A diminutive of lady.—By our Lakin, by our Lady—that is, by the Virgin Mary.

By 'r lakin, I can go no further, sir;
My old bonea ache. Shak., Tempest, iii. 3. 1.

laking-place (lā'king-plās), n. [From laking, verbal n. of *lake*², v., + place.] A play-ground; especially, a place where birds, as grouse, resort to play the antics attendant upon mating. [Prov. Eng.]

These laking-places, as they are locally termed, are frequented by a great number of males, who fight for the possession of the females.

H. Seebohm, British Birds, II. 436.

lall² (lal), a. A dialectal variant of *lill*², contraction of little.

Lallan (lal'an), a. and n. [A dial. form of lawland, lowland.] 1. a. Belonging to the Lowlands of Scotland. [Scotch.]

Far aff our gentles for their poets flew,
And scorned to own that Lallan sangs they knew.
A. Wilson, Poems, p. 40.

II. n. The Lowland Scotch dialect.

I translate John's Lallan, for I cannot do it justice, being born Britannia.
R. L. Stevenson, Pastoral.

lallation (la-lā'shōn), n. [From F. lallation, imperfect pronunciation of the letter l, < L. lallare, sing lullaby; cf. Gr. λαλεῖν, talk, chatter.] An imperfect pronunciation of the letter r, whereby it is made to sound like l. See lambdacism.

lalo (lā'lō), n. See baobab.

lalopathy (lā-lop'ā-thi), n. [From Gr. λαλεῖν, talk, + πάθος, suffering.] Disturbance of the language-function, in the most extensive sense.

lamb¹ (lam), v. t.; and pp. lammed, ppr. *lamm*ing. [Also lamm; < Icel. lemja, beat (cf. *lamm*ing, a beating); cf. lama, bruise, appar. = E. *lame*¹, v.] To thrash; beat. [Now only provincial or colloquial.]

Marry, I say, sir, if I had been acquainted With *lamm*ing in my youth, as you have been,
With whipping and such benefits of nature, I should do better. Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, v. 2.

If Milwood were here, dash my wigs!
Quoth he, I would pummel and lam her well.
J. Smith, Rejected Addresses, xx.

lam², n. An obsolete spelling of lamb.

lam³ (lam), n. [From F. lame, a thin leaf: see *lame*³, lamina.] In weaving, a leaf or heddle.

The generality of weavers couple the first and third heads or shafts, and so are enabled to weave it with only two lams.
A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 317.

lama¹ (lā'mā), n. [Tibetan.] A celibate priest or ecclesiastic belonging to that variety of Buddhism known as Lamaism. There are several grades of lamas, both male and female. The dala-lamas and the tesho- or bogdo-lama are regarded as supreme pontiffs. They are of equal authority in their respective territories, but the former is much the more important, and is known to Europeans as the Grand Lama.

Lama² (lā'mā), n. [NL., < llama, q. v.] 1. A genus of Camelidae of South America, including the llama, vicugna, alpaca, and guanaco: now called Auchenia.—2. [l. e.] See llama.

lama³ (lā'mā), n. [Sp., gold or silver cloth, a particular use of lama, plate: see *lame*³, lamina.] 1. A rich material made in Spain in the fifteenth century, described as a cloth of silver shaded and watered.

A dress of silver lama, over French lilac.
Armitage, Old Court Customs, p. 36.

2. A similar stuff of modern manufacture. See lama d'oro, below. Spanish Arts (S. K. Handbook).—Lama d'oro, a silk stuff interwoven with threads or flat strips of gold, especially of a kind made in Italy.

lamaic (lā'mā-ik), a. Pertaining to a lama; relating to or consisting of lamas: as, the lamaic system; a lamaic hierarchy.

Lamaism (lā'mā-izm), n. [From *lama*¹ + -ism.] A corrupted form of Buddhism prevailing in Tibet and Mongolia, which combines the ethical and metaphysical ideas of Buddhism with an organized hierarchy under two semi-political sovereign pontiffs (see *lama*¹), an elaborate ritual, and the worship of a host of deities and saints.

Lamaist (lā'mā-ist), n. [From *lama*¹ + -ist.] One professing the religion called Lamaism. Also Lamaite.

On the occasion of the great annual festival of the Lamaists in July, a small image of one of the high gods is put into this shrine.
The Century, XXXVII. 657.

Lamaistic (lā-mā-is'tik), a. [From Lamaist + -ic.] Characteristic of a Lamaist; of or pertaining to Lamaism; lamaic.

Lamaite (lā'mā-it), n. [From *lama*¹ + *-ite*².] Same as Lamaist.

laminin (la-man'tin; F. pron. la-mōn-tān'), n. [F.: see manatee.] Same as manatee.

lamarcky (lā-mār'ki), n. [From *lama*¹ + Gr. ἀρχή, rule.] The lamaic hierarchy; the ecclesiastical system or priesthood of the lamas.

Lamarckian (la-mār'ki-an), a. [From Lamarck (see Lamarckism) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the French naturalist Lamarck. See Lamarckism.

Lamarckianism (la-mār'ki-an-izm), n. [From Lamarckian + -ism.] Same as Lamarckism.

Lamarckism (la-mār'kizm), n. [From Lamarck (see def.) + -ism.] In biol., the general body of doctrine propounded by the French naturalist J. B. P. A. de Monet de Lamarck (1744-1829); the theory of evolution as maintained by him at the beginning of the nineteenth century, to the effect that all plants and animals are descended from a common primitive form of life. In its fundamental principles and essential features, Lamarckism differs from Darwinism in assuming that changes resulted from appetency and the active exertion of the organism. See abiogenesis.

lamaserai (lā'mā-se-rī), n. See lamasery.

lamasery (lā'mā-se-rī), n.; pl. lamaseries (-riz). [Also lamaseraï; after F. lamaserie, < *lama*¹ + Pers. sarāi, an inn: see caravansary.] A Buddhist monastery or nunnery in Tibet or Mongolia, presided over by a chief lama, corresponding to a European abbot or abess. Lamaseries are very numerous, and some contain several thousand inmates.

At the present moment my body is quietly asleep in a lamasery [read lamasery] in Tibet.
F. M. Crawford, Mr. Isaacs, xiii.

lamasoolt, n. Same as lamb's-wool, 2.

lamb (lam), n. [From ME. lamb, lomb, pl. lamben, lambren, lambren, < AS. lamb, lomb (ONorth. also lomb), also lombor (pl. lamburu, lomburu, lomboru, lomboro) = OS. lamb = D. MLG. lam = OHG. lamb, MHG. lamb, lomp, lam, G. lamm = Icel. lamb = Sw. lamm = Dan. lam = Goth. lamb, a young sheep.

And men fynden with inne a lytlye Best, in Flessche, with outen Wolle. Mandeville, Travels, p. 264.

And in the fields all round I hear the beating of the lamb.
Tennyson, May Queen, Conclusion.

2. A person gentle or innocent as a lamb.

Outward lambren semen we,
Fulle of goodnesse and of pitee;
And inward we, withouten fable,
Ben gredey wolves ravysable.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 7013.

The very whitest lamb in all my fold Loves you: I know her: the worst thought she has
Is whiter even than her pretty haud.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

Hence—3. One easily beguiled or fleeced; an inexperienced speculator who is deceived into making losing investments. [Slang.]

When a young gentleman or apprentice comes into this school of virtue unskilled in the quibbles and devices there practised, they call him a lamb; then a rook (who is properly the wolf) follows him close and . . . gets all his money, and then they smile and say "The lamb is bitten."
The Nicker Nicker, 1669 (Hari Misc., II. 109).

4. Ironically, a ruffian or bully: as, Kirke's *lamb*s (a troop of British soldiers noted for their atrocities in suppressing Monmouth's rebellion in 1685).—Holy lamb, in the Gr. Ch., a square projection rising above the rest of the round, flat oblate of leavened bread. It is stamped with a cross, in the angles of which are the letters IC XC NI KA—that is, Ἰησοῦς Χριστός νικᾷ, "Jesus Christ conquers." The priest divides the holy lamb from the remainder of the oblate with the holy lance in the office of prothesis, and it is the part afterward used for consecration, the antidoron being taken from the remainder. Also called the holy loaf or the holy bread and the seal.—The Lamb, the Lamb of God, the Christ, as typified by the paschal lamb.

Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.
John i. 29.

lamb (lam), v. i. [From lamb, n.] To bring forth young, as sheep.

They [the sheep] lamb not so soon as with us, for at the end of May their lambs are not come in season.
Brand, Zetland, p. 75.

lamback¹, v. t. [Also lambeak; appar. < *lam*¹ + obj. *back*¹. Cf. lambaste.] To beat; cudgel. [Old slang.]

Happy may they call that die whereon they are not lambacked before night.
Discov. of New World, p. 115.

lamback², n. [Also lambeak: see the verb.] A beating; a cudgeling; a blow.

With that five or six wives started up and fell upon the collar, and gave unto him half a score of sound lambeaks with their cudgels. Greene, Discovery of Coosnage (1591).

lamb-ale (lam'āl), n. A country feast at lamb-shearing.

Lamb-ale is still [1781] used at the village of Kirtlington in Oxfordshire for an annual feast or celebrity at lamb-shearing.
T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, III. 129.

lamballe (lam-bal'), n. [So called after the Princess de Lamballe.] A fichu or scarf of surah or foulard, usually trimmed with lace: a fashion of about 1878.

lambaste (lam-bāst'), v. t.; pret. and pp. lambasted, ppr. lambasting. [Appar. < *lam*¹ + *baste*¹.] To beat severely; thrash; in sailors' use, to beat with a rope's end. [Slang.]

Whine not, my love; his fury straight will waste him;
Stand off awhile, and see how lie lambaste him.
Britannia Triumphant (1637). (Nares.)

lambative (lam'ba-tiv), a. and n. [More correctly lambitive*; < L. lambitus, pp. of lambere, lick, lap: see lambent.] 1. a. That may be licked up; to be taken by licking.

In affections both of lungs and weason, physicians make use of syrups and lambative medicines.
Sir T. Browne.

Upon the mantle-tree . . . stood a pot of lambative clectuary.
Steele, Tatler, No. 266.

II. n. A medicine taken by licking.

lambda (lam'dā), n. [From Gr. λάμβδα, < Heb. lā-medh.] 1. The name of the Greek letter λ, λ (equivalent to the Roman l, l).—2. In craniol., the junction of the sagittal and lambdoid sutures at the apex of the latter. See cut under craniometry.

lambdacism (lam'da-sizm), n. [From LL. lambdacismus, lambdacismus, < Gr. λαμβδακισμός, λαβδακισμός, a fault in pronunciation of the letter l, < λαβδακίζεω, pronounce l faultily, < λάμβδα, the letter l: see lambda.] 1. A too frequent use of words containing the letter l in speaking or writing. A Latin example appears in the following:

Sol et luna luce lucent alba, leni, lactea.
Martianus Capella.

2. An imperfect pronunciation of the letter r, making it sound like l; lallation. The defect is common among children, and also among the Chinese in speaking foreign languages, from the absence of the sound of r as an initial in their native tongue.

lambdaic (lam'dā-ik), n. [From Gr. λάμβδα, the letter λ, < (see lambda), + -ic.] In math., the result of subtracting the same indeterminate quantity, λ, from all the elements of the principal diagonal of a determinant, or of subtracting λ with numerical submultiples and alternating signs from the sinister diagonal. See latent root, under latent.

lambdoid (lam'doid), a. [From Gr. λαμβδοειδής, formed like a lambda (λ), < λάμβδα, the letter λ, + ειδής, shape.] Having the shape of the Greek capital lambda (Λ): specifically applied in anatomy to the suture between the supra-occipital and the two parietal bones of the skull, which has this form in man. See cut under cranium.

lambdoidal (lam-doi'dal), a. [From lambdoid + -al.] Same as lambdoid.

lambeak, v. and n. See lamback.

lambeau (lam'bō), n.; pl. lambeaux (-bōz). [F.: see label.] In her., one of the points or drops in a label.—Cross lambeaux. See *cross*¹.

lambeauxed (lam'bōd), a. In her., same as doretailed.

lambel (lam'bəl), n. [OF., a tag, label: see label.] 1. A part of the housings of a horse, having the form of a rectangular tablet or screen hanging at the breast or flank, evidently intended for defense, and probably of cuir-bouilli, or of gambouised work. J. Hewitt, — 2. pl. Same as lamboys, 2.—3. In her., same as label.

lambency (lam'ben-si), n.; pl. lambencies (-siz). [< lamben(t) + -cy.] The quality of being lambent; that which is lambent; a lambent gleam.

These were sacred lambencies, tongues of authentic flame from heaven. Carlyle, Reminiscences.

lambent (lam'bent), a. [< L. lamben(t)-s, ppr. of lambere, liek; cf. Gr. λάπτειν, lap: see lap¹.] 1. Licking. [Rare.]

To stroke his azure neck, or to receive
The lambent homage of his arrowy tongue.
Cowper, Task, vi. 782.

Hence — 2. Running along or over a surface, as if in the net of licking; flowing over or along; lapping or bathing; softly bright; gleaming.

The Star that did my Being frame
Was but a lambent Flame.
Cowley, Pindaric Odes, vi. 4.

Those [eyes] only are beautiful which, like the planets, have a steady, lambent light — are luminous, but not sparkling. Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 4.

Lambeth Articles. See article.

lambic, n. A Middle English form of limbec. Chaucer.

lambick (lam'bik), n. A kind of strong beer made in Belgium by the process called the self-fermentation of worts.

lambie (lam'i), n. [Dim. of lamb.] A little lamb; a lambkin. Also lammic. [Scotch.]

When finnets sang, and lambies play'd.
Burns, As on the Banks.

lambisht, a. [< ME. lambyssh; < lamb + -ish¹.] Lamblike.

The lambyssh people, voyded of al ysc,
Hadden no fantaysie to debate.
Chaucer, Former Age, i. 50.

lambkill (lam'kil), n. [< lamb + kill¹.] The sheep-laurel, Kalmia angustifolia.

lambkin (lam'kin), n. [= D. and Flem. lammcken; as lamb + -kin.] 1. A little lamb.

In the warm folds their tender lambkins lie.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xiii.

2. One treated as gently as a lamb; one fondly cherished.

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;
Barry the Fifth's the man.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 3. 122.

lamblike (lam'lik), a. [< lamb + like².] Like a lamb; gentle; humble; meek: as, a lamblike temper.

lambling (lam'ling), n. [< lamb + -ling¹.] A young or small lamb; hence, a stupidly or ignorantly innocent person.

It was over the black sheep [negroes] of the Castlewood flock that Mr. Ward somehow had the most influence. These woolly lamblings were immensely affected by his exhortations. Thackeray, Virginians, v.

lamboyst, n. pl. [< OF. lambcau, a shred, flap, etc.: see label.] 1. A skirt of tassets of the form worn in the sixteenth century. Compare tassett.—2. In the armor of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the base or skirt of ornamental stuff. Meyrick. Also lambels.

lambrent, n. An obsolete plural of lamb.

lambrequin (lam'bre-kin), n. [< F. lambrequin, the covering or trappings of a helmet, a mantle, scallop; origin uncertain.] 1. A piece of textile fabric, leather, or the like, hanging by one of its edges, and typically having the opposite edge dagged, slitted, scalloped, or otherwise cut in an ornamental manner: used in several ways. (a) In medieval armor, a piece of stuff worn over the helmet of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, especially at tournaments and jousts. This usage is figured in modern heraldry. See below. (b) In upholstery, a sort of curtain covering the upper part of an opening, as a door or window, and often forming a kind of cornice to the curtain proper. (c) A short curtain or a piece of drapery suspended for ornament from a mantel-shelf or the like. 2. In decorative art, painting on a surface more or less imitating or resembling a lambrequin, as in some Chinese vases, in which the upper part of the body is covered by solid decoration having a lower edge of jagged or ornamented outline.—3. In her., the mantelet, represented as floating from the helmet, and often forming an important part of the ornamental decoration of the achievement.

lambskin (lam'skin), n. 1. The furred or woolly skin of a lamb, either of natural color or dyed, prepared for use in dress or in the ornamenting of costume, for mats, etc.; also, collectively, material so prepared from lambs' skins. The finest lambskins are the Persian, which are either gray or black, and rank among costly furs. Hungarian and Spanish lambskins are used especially in the national costume for men, a jacket or short coat being made wholly of this material. Prussian lambskins are used for coat-cuffs and coat-collars. One of the best-known varieties is astrakhan.

A furred gown to keep him warm; and furred with fox and lamb-skins too. Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 9.

2. The skin of a lamb, or collectively the skins of lambs, freed from wool and dressed for making gloves, etc.—3. Woolen cloth made to resemble lambskin.—4. Anthracite coal of inferior quality (culm). [Swansea, Wales.] lambskin (lam'skin), v. t.; pret. and pp. lamb-skinned, ppr. lambskinning. [< lambskin, n.; not quite like the equiv. cochide, v., but a humorous use, alluding to lam¹, v.] To beat.

What think you of our countryman Hercules, that for love put on Amphale's apron and sat spinning amongst her wenches, while his mistress wore his lion's skin, and lamb-skinned him if he did not his business? Chapman, Widow's Tears, ii. 4.

lamb's-lettuce (lamz'let'is), n. Same as cornsalad.

lamb's-quarters (lamz'kwā' tērz), n. 1. A European weed, Atriplex patula, natural order Chenopodiaceae.—2. An American weed of the same order, Chenopodium album, naturalized from Europe; white goosefoot.

lamb's-tongue (lamz'tng), n. 1. The hoary plantain, Plantago media. See plantain.—2. A carpenter's plane having a deep and narrow bit, used for making quirks. E. H. Knight.

lamb's-wool (lamz'wūl), n. 1. The wool of lambs, used in manufacture; hence, delicate wool, as of certain breeds of sheep or of lambs, or of mixed varieties, used for the manufacture of hosiery.—2. [Prob. so called from its softness; cf. velvet, applied to fine old spirit; yard of flannel, a kind of flip.] Also mixed with sugar, nutmeg, and the pulp of roasted apples.

A cup of lamb's-wool they drank unto him then.
King and Miller of Mansfield (Child's Ballads, VIII. 37).

Next crowne the bowle full
With gentle lamb's-wool,
Adde sugar, and nutmeg, and ginger.
Herrick, Twelve Night.

Being come home, we to cards, till two in the morning, and drinking lamb's-wool.
Pepps, Diary, III. 7

Lamb's-wool yarn, a soft woolen yarn, slightly twisted, used for fancy work. Dict. of Needlework.

lame¹ (lām), a. [< ME. lame, < AS. lama = OS. lam = OFries. lom, lam = D. lam = MLG. lam, OHG. MIIG. lam, G. lahm = Icel. lami = Sw. Dan. lam, lame; perhaps orig. 'bruised, maimed': cf. lam¹, v.] 1. Crippled or disabled by injury to or defect of a limb or limbs; specifically, walking with difficulty; halting; limping: as, a lame man or horse.

I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.
Job xxix. 15.

2. Inefficient from injury or defect; unsound or impaired in strength; crippled: as, a lame leg or arm.

The golde hath made his wittes lame.
Gower, Conf. Amant., v.
Myself would work eye dim, and finger lame.
Tennyson, Geraint.

3. Figuratively, imperfect; lacking finish or completeness; defective in quality or quantity; halting; insufficient; hobbling: as, lame verse; lame rimes; a lame excuse.

O most lame and impotent conclusion!
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 162.

The sick man's sacrifice is but a lame oblation.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 4.

Santa Croce and the dome of St. Peter's are lame copies after a divine model. Emerson, History.

Lame duck, in commercial slang, one who is unable to meet his obligations; a bankrupt; especially, a defaulter on the stock-exchange.

I may be lame, but I shall never be a duck, nor deal in the garbage of the alley. Walpole, Letters (1771), III. 337.

lame² (lām), v. t.; pret. and pp. lamed, ppr. laming. [< ME. lamen, < AS. lemian (= OS. lamōn (in comp. bi-lamōn) = OFries. lema, lama = D. ver-lammen = MLG. lamen, lemen = OHG. lāmōn, lemjan, MHG. lamen, lemen, G. lähmen = Icel. lemja, thrash, flog, beat, lame, disable, = Dan. lamme = Sw. lamma), < lama, lame: see lam¹, a. Cf. lam¹, v.] To make lame; cripple or disable; render imperfect or unsound: as, to lame an antagonist; to lame an arm or a leg.

I cannot help it now;
Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
Of our design. Shak., Cor., iv. 7. 7.

A tender foot will be galled and lamed, if you set it going in rugged paths. Barrow, Works, III. iii.

A spear,
Down-glancing, lamed the charger.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

lame² (lām), n. and a. [Also layme; an old or dial. form of loam.] 1. n. Earthenware. [Now Scotch.]

2. flacons of layme, enamelled with blue and white and one all blue. Inventory (1578).

2. A broken piece of earthenware; a potsherd. [Scotch.]

II. a. Earthen: used of pottery: as, a lame pig (an earthen vessel). [Scotch.]

lame³, n. [Early mod. E. also lamm; < ME. lampe for lame, < OF. (and F.) lame, a plate, a blade, < L. lamina, a thin plate: see lamina, and cf. lama³.] In armor, a plate of metal. Florio.

He strake Phaulantus just upon the gorget, so as he battered the lamm thereof. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

lamel (lam'el), n. Same as lamella.

lamella (lā-mel'ē), n.; pl. lamellæ (-ē). [L., a small plate of metal, < lamina, a thin piece of metal, wood, etc.: see lamina.] A thin plate or scale. Specifically — (a) In bot.: (1) An erect scale or blade inserted at the junction of the claw and limb in some corollas, and forming a part of their corona or crown. (2) In the group Agaricia of hymenomycetous fungi, one of the radiating vertical plates on the under side of the pileus, upon which the hymenium is extended; one of the gills, for example, of common mushrooms (Agaricus). (b) In anat. and zool., a thin or small lamina; a plate or layer; especially, one of a series of thin plates arranged like the leaves of a book or the gills of an oyster.—Branchial lamella. See branchial.—Haversian lamellæ, hollow cylinders of bone-tissue surrounding and concentric with a Haversian canal. There are generally several to each canal, successively inclosed, as the successive rings of growth of an exogenous plant around the central pith.—Horizontal lamella of the ethmoid, the cribriform plate, a part of the ethmoidal bone.—Lamellæ of bone, layers of bone-tissue concentrically arranged around a Haversian canal; Haversian lamellæ.—Perpendicular lamella of the ethmoid, the mesethmoidal bone.—Syn. See lamina.

lamellar (lam'e-lār), a. [< lamella + -ar³.] 1. Disposed in lamellæ or layers; laminar in a small way.

A magnet is said to be lamellar when it may be divided into simple closed magnetic shells or into open shells with their edges on the surface of the magnet.

Atkinson, tr. of Mascart and Joubert, i. 316.

2. Having a lamella or lamellæ; lamellate.—3. Formed of lamellæ; strengthened or covered with lamellæ: as, a lamellar skirt (a name given to the great braguette).—4. In bot., specifically, tipped with two flat lobes, as the styles of many blossoms.

lamellarly (lam'e-lār-li), adv. In the form of or by means of lamellæ: as, the leaves of a book lie lamellarly.

lamellar-stellate (lam'e-lār-stel'āt), a. In mineral., formed of thin plates or lamellæ arranged in star-shaped groups: as, gypsum has often a lamellar-stellate structure.

lamellate (lam'e-lāt), a. [< NL. lamellatus, < L. lamella, a thin metal plate: see lamella.] 1. Formed of a lamella, or disposed in lamellæ; lamellar in structure or arrangement.—2. Having lamellæ; furnished with little laminae.—Lamellate antennæ, antennæ in which the outer joints are prolonged internally, opposing flat surfaces to each other, which may be brought into close contact, thus forming a transverse or, rarely, a rounded club supported on one side by the stem or funiculus of the antenna, as in the Scarabæidæ or cockchafers. Beetles having antennæ of this form are called lamellicornis. See cut under antenna.—Lamellate palpi, those palpi in which the terminal joint is divided longitudinally or transversely into several lamellæ or leaves.

lamellated (lam'e-lā-ted), a. Same as lamellate.

The lamellated antennæ of some, the clavellated of others, are surprisingly beautiful, when viewed through a microscope. Derham, Physico-Theology, viii. 4, note 3.

lamellibranch (lā-mel'i-brangk), a. and n. [< L. lamella, a plate, + branchia, gills.] 1. a. Having lamellate gills; pertaining to the Lamellibranchiata, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Lamellibranchiata, as any ordinary bivalve mollusk.

Also lamellibranchiate.

Lamellibranchia (lā-mel-i-brang'ki-ā), n. pl. Same as Lamellibranchiata.

Lamellibranchiata (lā-mel-i-brang-ki-ā'īā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl.: see lamellibranchiate.] A group of mollusks without distinct head or cephalic eyes, with the branchiæ on each side of the body and generally expanded in a plate-like or lamelliform manner, and with a shell of two lateral valves completely or partly inclosing the body. The valves of the shell are connected and close over the back of the animal by a hinge: they are also generally united by one or two muscles, called adductors, which penetrate the body-mass. Opening of the shell is effected by an elastic ligament in or about the hinge. The shell is secreted by a prolongation of the integument called the mantle or pallium, which laps round the body, its halves being either free or united so as to leave only three apertures for the inlet and outlet of water for respiration, and for the protrusion of a fleshy organ called the foot, when it is present. The muscular edge of the mantle leaves on each valve an impression called the pallial line. Respiration is generally effected by lamellated gills (whence the name), usually occupying a large part of the interior of the shell on each side. The mouth is a simple jawless fissure, furnished with one or two pairs of soft palpi, the food being conveyed to it by cilia on the gills. The heart has a single ventricle pierced by the intestine, and there are three double nerve-centers. The group was originally designated by the author of the name (De Blainville, 1814) as an order, but has generally been adopted as a class of Mollusca, containing all the true or ordinary bivalve mollusks, of Diagrammatic Section of Fresh-water Mussel (Anodonta), illustrating anatomy of Lamellibranchiata.

 AA, mantle-lobes; B, foot; C, branchial chamber of mantle-cavity; D, anal chamber; E, H, anterior and posterior adductor muscles; I, H, retractor muscle of foot; a, mouth; b, stomach; c, intestine, coils of which are supposed to be seen through the side walls of the mesosoma; d, rectum; e, anus; f, ventricle; g, auricle; h, gills, except the right external gill, largely cut away and turned back; k, labial palpi; l, cerebroganglion; m, pedal ganglion; n, parieto-splanchnic ganglia; o, aperture of organ of Bojanus; p, pericardium.

which oysters, clams, etc., are familiar examples. Synonyms of the whole group are Acephala, Bivalvia, Conchifera, Cornopoda, and Pelecypoda.

lamellibranchiate (lā-mel-i-brang'ki-āt), a. and n. [NL. lamellibranchiatus, < L. lamella, a thin plate, + branchia, gills.] Same as lamellibranch.

lamellicorn (lā-mel'i-kōrn), a. and n. [NL. lamellicornis, < L. lamella, a thin plate, + cornu = E. horn.] I. a. 1. Having lamellæ or a lamellate structure, as the antennæ of an insect.—2. Having lamellate antennæ, as an insect; of or pertaining to the Lamellicornia.

II. n. A lamellicorn beetle; any member of the Lamellicornia, as a scarab, dung-beetle, stag-beetle, cockchafer, etc.

lamellicornate (lā-mel-i-kōr'nāt), a. Same as lamellicorn.

Lamellicornes (lā-mel-i-kōr'nēz), n. pl. [NL. (orig. the F. accom. of NL. lamellicornia, neut. pl.), < L. lamella, a thin plate, + cornu = E. horn.] In Latreille's system, the sixth family of pentamerous Coleoptera, corresponding with the modern group Lamellicornia.

Lamellicornia (lā-mel-i-kōr'ni-ā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lamellicornis: see lamellicorn.] A suborder of Coleoptera which have the fourth and fifth tarsal joints not connate, the first ventral segment visible for its entire breadth, the antennæ with a lamellate club whose apposed surfaces have a very delicate sensitive structure, and the legs fossorial. The antennæ, which are short and deeply inserted under the sides of the head, are lamelliferous, the last three joints making a lamelliform club (pectinated in Lucanidae, whence the name Pectinicornia for this family). The lamellicornes are herbivorous, and very rich in species, of which there are more than 7,000, among them the largest and some of the most splendid beetles known. The leading families are Scarabæidae and Lucanidae.

lamelliferous (lam-e-lif'e-rus), a. [L. lamella, a thin plate, + ferre = E. bear.] Producing lamellæ; composed of or provided with lamellæ; having a lamellate structure.

lamelliform (lā-mel'i-fōrm), a. [L. lamella, a thin plate, + forma, form.] Lamellar in form; having the shape of a lamella; lamellate in structure or arrangement.

lamelliped (lā-mel'i-ped), a. and n. [L. lamella, a thin plate, + pes (ped-) = E. foot.] I. a. Having a flattened lamelliform foot, as some conchiferous mollusks; of or pertaining to the Lamellipedia.

II. n. A mollusk with a lamelliform foot; one of the Lamellipedia.

Lamellipedia (lā-mel-i-pē'di-ā), n. pl. [NL., < L. lamella, a thin plate, + pes (ped-) = E. foot.] In Lamarck's system of the Conchifera, a division of acephalous mollusks having a large lamellar foot, containing the families Conchæa, Cardiacea, Arceacea, Trigonea, and Naiades. Also Lamellipedes.

lamelliroster (lā-mel-i-ros'tēr), n. A lamellirostral bird.

lamellirostral (lā-mel-i-ros'tral), a. and n. [As Lamellirostres + -al.] I. a. Having a lamellose bill; lamellosdentate, as a bird; of or pertaining to the Lamellirostres.

II. n. Any member of the Lamellirostres.

lamellirostrate (lā-mel-i-ros'trāt), a. Same as lamellirostral.

Lamellirostres (lā-mel-i-ros'trēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. lamella, a thin plate, + rostrum, a beak: see rostrum.] In Cuvier's classification, the fourth family of his sixth order of birds (Palmipedes), containing those which have the bill lamellosdentate and covered with a soft skin, with a nail at the end, as ducks, geese, swans, and flamingos. The family corresponds to the Linnean Anseres, and included the modern families Anatidæ and Phœnicopteridæ. Divested of the flamingos, it corresponds to the Chenomorpha of Huxley, now commonly rated as an order or suborder of carinate birds. See Chenomorpha, Anseres, Anatidæ.

lamellose (lam'e-lōs), a. [lamella + -ose.] Full of lamellæ; lamellated in structure; lamelliform in arrangement: a book, for instance, is entirely lamellose.

lamellosdentate (lam-e-lō-sō-den'tāt), a. [lamellose + dentate.] Toothed with lamellæ, or having lamelliform teeth, as the bill of a duck.

Lamellosdentati (lam-e-lō'sō-den-tā'ti), n. pl. [NL.: see lamellosdentate.] Illiger's name of the duck tribe, or lamellirostral birds. See Lamellirostres.

lamely (lām'li), adv. 1. In a lame or halting manner; like a cripple: as, to walk lamely.—2. Imperfectly; unsatisfactorily; weakly; feebly: as, a figure lamely drawn; a scene lamely described; an argument lamely conducted.

lameness (lām'nes), n. 1. The state of being lame; defect or unsoundness of a limb or limbs; especially, impairment of locomotive capacity by injury or deformity: as, lameness of the hand or foot; lameness caused by a broken or a deformed leg.—2. Imperfection; want of finish or completeness; defect; insufficiency; weakness: as, the lameness of a verse or a rime; the lameness of an argument or an apology.

Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt.
Shak., Sonnets, lxxxix.

If the story move, or the actor feel the lameness of it with his performance.
Dryden, Spanish Friar.

lament (lā-ment'), n. [= Sp. Pg. It. lamento, < L. lamentum, usually in pl. lamenta, a wailing, moaning; with formative -mentum (see ment), from the root la*, seen also in latrare, bark, Gr. βάζειν, snarl, Russ. laicti, bark, scold.] 1. An expression of grief or sorrow; a sad complaint; a lamentation.

And these external manners of laments
 Are merely shadows to the unseen grief
 That swells with silence in the tortured soul.
Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 296.

2. A set form of lamentation or mourning; an elegy; a mourning song or ballad.

At Busiris, which was the alleged burial-place of Osiris, there was an annual festival at which the votaries, having fasted and put on mourning dresses, uttered a lament round a burnt-offering: the death of Osiris being the subject of the lament.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 144.

3. The music for an elegy, or a tune intended to express or excite sorrowful emotion; a mournful air.

lament (lā-ment'), v. [F. lamenter = Sp. Pg. lamentar = It. lamentare, < L. lamentari, wail, weep, < lamentum, a wailing, lament: see lament, n.] I. intrans. 1. To express sorrow; utter words or sounds of grief; mourn audibly; wail.

In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation.
Micah li. 4.

Every now and then I heard the wail of women lamenting for the dead. R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 195.

2. To show great sorrow or regret; repine; chafe; grieve.

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
 Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 208.

= Syn. Lament, Mourn, Grieve; sorrow. Lament expresses always, at least figuratively, an external act. Mourn was originally and is still often the same, but does not now suggest anything audible. Grieve suggests more of a conscious effect upon the person sorrowing. See affliction.

II. trans. 1. To bewail; mourn for; bemoan; deplore.

They lamented the death of their leader, and filled all places with their complaints. Bacon, Moral Fables, vii. 2†. To afflict; distress.

He went home, where he lay much lamented and wonderfully affrighted with the Old Woman coming to afflict him. Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen [Anne, I. 124.]

lamentable (lam'en-tā-bl), a. [F. lamentable = Sp. lamentable = Pg. lamentavel = It. lamentabile, lamentable, < L. lamentabilis, mournful, < L. lamentari, mourn, lament: see lament, v.] 1. To be lamented; exciting or calling for sorrow; grievous: as, a lamentable deterioration of morals.

Tell thou the lamentable tale of me.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 1. 44.

And yet their superstition is more lamentable than their dispersion, as also their pertinacity and stubbornness in their superstition. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 159.

2. Expressive of grief; mournful: as, a lamentable cry.

Ceaseless rain sweeping away wildly before a long and lamentable blast. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, i.

3. Miserable; pitiful; low; poor.

Then are messengers again posted to Rome in lamentable sort, beseeching that they would not suffer a whole Province to be destroyed. Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

lamentableness (lam'en-tā-bl-nes), n. The state of being lamentable.

lamentably (lam'en-tā-bli), adv. In a lamentable manner; mournfully; pitifully.

lamentation (lam-en-tā'shon), n. [ME. lamentacion, < OF. (and F.) lamentation = Sp. lamentacion = Pg. lamentação = It. lamentazione, < L. lamentatio (n.), a weeping, < L. lamentari, weep: see lament, v.] 1. The act of bewailing; expression of sorrow; a mournful outcry.

Who soethly might suffer the sorrow that thou mase . . .
Lamentacion & langour the long night over?
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 3294.

In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning. Mat. ii., 18.

2. [cap.] pl. The shorter title of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, one of the poetical books of the Old Testament. In the Septuagint, as in the English Bible, it stands immediately after the Book of Jeremiah, of which it probably originally formed a continuation. Its subject is the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. It was probably composed immediately after the taking of the city (586 B. C.), while the wounds of the nation were still fresh. Jeremiah has been generally regarded by Christian scholars as its author.

3. [cap.] pl. The music to which the first three lessons, taken from the Lamentations of Jeremiah, are sung in the Roman Catholic Church, in the office called Tenebræ, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of Holy Week. = Syn. 1. Mourning, complaint, plaint, moan, moaning, wailing, outcry. See lament, v.

lamenter (lā-men'tēr), n. One who laments, mourns, or cries out with sorrow.

lamentingly (lā-men'ting-li), adv. In a lamenting manner; with lamentation.

Lamé's equation, function. See equation, function.

lameskirting (lām'skēr-ting), n. [lamel, v., + skirt + -ing.] In coal-mining, the cutting off of coal from the sides of underground roads in order to widen them. [North. Eng.] lameter, n. See lamiter.

lametta (la-met'ā), n. [It., dim. of It. lama, a plate of metal, < L. lamina, a thin piece of metal, wood, etc.: see *lame*³, lamina.] Brass, silver, or gold foil or wire.

lamia (lā'mi-ā), n. [L. lamia, < Gr. λάμια, a female demon (see def.).] 1. In Gr. and Rom. myth., an enticing witch, who charmed children and youths for the purpose of feeding on their blood and flesh, like the later vampire; a female demon; hence, in general, a destroying witch or hag.

Where's the lamia
 That tears my entrails?
Mastinger, Virgin-Martyr, iv. 1.

A young prince goes a hunting. . . . In the ardour of the chase, he becomes separated from his followers, and meets with a lamia or ogress.

T. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry (ed. 1871), I. 310.

2. [cap.] pl. In zoöl.: (a) A Fabrician (1775) genus of longicorn beetles, now the type of the family Lamiidæ. L. ædilis is a species the male of which has antennæ four times as long as the body. (b) A genus of sharks: same as Lamna. Risso, 1826.

Lamiaceae (lā-mi-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamiaceae + -aceae.] Lindley's name for the Labiatae.

Lamiales (lā-mi-ā'lēz), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1876), < Lamium + -ales.] A cohort of gamopetalous plants, having the corolla usually irregular, the posterior stamens often reduced to staminodia or wanting, the carpels one- or two-ovuled, and the indehiscent fruit generally included in the calyx. It embraces the orders Myoporineae, Selagineae, Verbenaceae, and Labiatae.

Lamiarise (lā-mi-ā'ri-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamia, 2 (a), + -arise.] In Latreille's system (1825), a tribe of longicorn beetles, corresponding inexactly to the modern family Lamiidae.

Lamiæ (lā-mi'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Lamium + -æ.] A subtribe of labiate plants of the tribe Stachydeæ, originally embracing the genus Lamium and 9 other genera. In the system of Bentham and Hooker it embraces 22 genera.

lamiger (lam'i-jēr), n. [< *lame*¹, a., + -iger, perhaps orig. -iger, -ier, -yer, as in lawyer, etc.] A cripple. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

Lamiidæ (lā-mi'ī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamia, 2 (a), + -idæ.] A family of longicorn beetles typified by the genus Lamia, belonging to the tetramerous series of the order Coleoptera. It is related to the Ceratomyidæ, but the head is vertical, not prorext. Also written Lamiadæ, Lamiidæ.

lamina (lam'i-ni), n.; pl. laminae (-nē). [= F. lame (> E. *lame*³) = Sp. lama, lámina = Pg. lamina = It. lama, lamina, < L. lamina, also lammina, lamna, a thin plate of wood, metal, etc., a leaf, layer, etc. Cf. *lame*³.] A thin plate or scale. Specifically—(a) A layer or coating over another: applied to the plates of minerals, bones, etc. (b) The thinnest distinct layer into which a stratified rock can be separated. See stratum and stratification. (c) In anat., a thin plate, layer, or membrane, or any laminar or lamellar structure. [In this use commonly as mere Latin, as in phrases below.] (d) In bot.: (1) The commonly widened upper part of a petal; its limb or border, as distinguished from its claw. (2) The blade or expanded portion of a leaf. (3) The flat part of the thallus or frond in some seaweeds, as distinguished from the stipe. (e) A spine of armor. Hence—(f) A piece of armor made of splints. Compare *lame*³, splint-armor, jefferant, brigandine.—Cribose lamina (lamina cribrata), a thin cribrate lamina of the sclerotic coat of the eye at the entrance of the optic nerve.—Denticulate lamina of the cochlea, the limbus laminae spiralis.—Dorsal lamina. See dorsal.—Elastic laminae of the cornea, hard, elastic, transparent, and homogeneous membranes covering the proper substance of the cornea in front and behind.—Lamina cinerea, a thin layer of gray substance at the base of the brain, above the optic chiasma, from the fore end of the corpus callosum to the tuber cinereum.—Lamina dermalis, in embryol., the primary outer layer of a two-layered germ: same as ectoderm.—Lamina dorsales, in embryol., the dorsal laminae.—Lamina of a vertebra, plate-like portions of the neuropophyses or neural arches of a vertebra, arising from the pedicles on each side and meeting in midline to inclose the spinal canal.—Laminae of the cerebellum, primary, secondary, and tertiary, the folded and ramifying layers of the surface of the cerebellum, like the gyri of the cerebrum, section of which gives the appearance called arbor-vitæ.—Laminae ventrales, or laminae viscerales, ventral or visceral layers, the folds of the embryo, on each side of the notochordal axis, extending downward to meet finally on the middle line below, each lamina splitting into an outer or somatopleural and an inner or splanchnopleural layer, the outer to form the body-walls, the inner to form the intestinal canal: opposed to dorsal laminae.—Lamina fusca, an extremely fine areolar tissue forming the innermost part of the sclerotic and uniting it with the outer surface of the choroid.—Lamina gastralis, in embryol., the primary inner layer of a two-layered germ: same as endoderm.—Lamina inodermalis, the outer or flesh layer of the mesoderm of a four-layered germ; the somatopleure.—Lamina inogastralis, the inner or fibrous intestinal layer of the mesoderm of a four-layered germ; the splanchnopleure.—Lamina labialis, Meiner's name for that piece of the mouth-parts of a myriapod which supports the inner stipes of the dentomala. See dentomala.—Lamina myogastralis, the mucous layer or glandular intestinal layer of a four-layered germ. It corresponds to the endoderm of a two-layered germ, and forms the epithelium of the intestinal tract and its diverticula.—Lamina neurodermalis, the skin-sensory layer of a four-layered germ, corresponding to the ectoderm of a two-layered germ, and forming the epidermis and the chief parts of the nervous system and the organs of the special senses.—Lamina perforata anterior, the anterior perforated space of the base of the brain; the precribrum.—Lamina perforata posterior, the posterior perforated space of the base of the brain; the postercribrum.—Lamina perpendicularis, the mesethmoid, or perpendicular median plate of the ethmoid bone.—Lamina prolifera, lamina sporifera, in fungology, according to the older terminology, the hymenium or discus in a discocarp or apothecium.—Lamina quadrigemina, the dorsal portion of the mesencephalon above the Sylvian aqueduct. It is divided into the four corpora quadrigemina.—Lamina reticularis, the reticular lamina of the organ of Corti, a net-like membrane upon the summits of the outer hair-cells. The network consists of four rows of saddle-shaped cells called phalanges, between which project the ciliated free ends of the hair-cells, and to which are attached the phalangeal processes of the cells of Dieters.—Lamina spiralis, the spiral lamina of the cochlea; the flange or projection which winds spirally round the modiolus or columella of the ear, projecting into the spiral canal and dividing it into two spiral tubes or scales. The spiral lamina is partly bony and partly membranous. The osseous part is called lamina spiralis ossea;

the membranous part is the membrana basilaris. The bony lamina ends at the cupola in a hook-like process, the hamulus.—Lamina spiralis membranacea, the basilar membrane of the cochlear canal.—Lamina spiralis ossea, the bony spiral lamina winding around the modiolus of the cochlea and giving attachment at its free edge to the basilar membrane.—Lamina suprachoroidea, a delicate membrane investing the choroid coat of the eye externally.—Lamina tectoria cerebelli, that part of the cerebellum which lies above the horizontal fissure.—Lamina terminalis, the anterior boundary of the third ventricle of the brain; that part of the lamina cinerea lying in front of the chiasma. See ent under encephalon.—Lamina vitrea. (a) A colorless glassy membrane forming the innermost stratum of the choroid and lying between the choriocapillaris and the tapetum nigrum; the membrane of Bruch. (b) The inner table of the skull.—Neural lamina, the dorsal lamina, one of the lips of the groove along the back of the early embryo, which, meeting and joining its fellow, converts the primitive trace or furrow into a tube within which the neural axis is to be developed: opposed to ventral or visceral lamina.—Reticular lamina of Kölliker, in the cochlea, same as lamina reticularis, above.—Ventral or visceral lamina. See laminae ventrales, above. = Syn. Lamina, lamella. In zoology and anatomy these words are usually absolutely synonymous, used interchangeably and without distinction. If there be a possible distinction, it is that lamella may of tenor apply to something smaller or thinner than a lamina: for instance, the cover of a book is a lamina, containing leaves or lamellæ. Haeckel draws and maintains this distinction in embryology.

laminability (lam'i-nā-bil'i-ti), n. [< laminable: see bility.] The quality of being laminable.

laminable (lam'i-nā-bl), a. [< lamin(ate) + -able.] Capable of being formed into thin plates; capable of being extended by passing between steel or hardened east-iron rollers, as a metal.

laminæ, n. Plural of lamina.

laminar (lam'i-nār), a. [< lamina + *-ar*³.] 1. Composed of or disposed in laminae, or thin plates or layers; lamellar.—2. Having or being a lamina or laminae; laminated.—Laminar fission, in geol., separation into laminae, thin plates, or flags, parallel with the lines of stratification; lamination.

Laminaria (lam-i-nā'ri-ā), n. [NL., < L. lamina, a thin plate, + -aria.] A genus of dark-spored seaweeds, belonging to the natural order Laminariaceae, having no definite leaves, but a plain ribless expansion, flat and blade-like (whence the name), which is either simple or cloven. L. digitata is the well-known tangle abundant on sea-coasts (find in gynecology instead of sponge for making tents for dilating the cervical canal); L. buccinalis is a native of the Cape of Good Hope, and yields iodine; L. potatorum grows in Australia, and furnishes the aborigines with a part of their instruments, vessels, and food; L. digitata and L. bulbosa were formerly employed in the manufacture of kelp for the glass-maker and soap-boiler; L. saccharina, the sweet-tangled or seaweed, named from the saccharine matter called mannite which it furnishes, is abundant on the shores of the North Atlantic and Pacific oceans. See langer, 7.

Laminariaceæ (lam-i-nā-ri-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Laminaria + -aceæ.] A family of the Algae or seaweeds, now included in the class Phaeosporae. Their fronds are coriaceous and not articulated, and attached to the sea-bottom by a root-like or sometimes disk-like organ, whence arises a stipe, which expands into a lamina or blade. They are propagated by means of zoospores, borne in zoosporangia on the surface of the frond, either diffused or in patches. The genera Alaria, Laminaria, and Macrocystis, belonging to this order, include the largest marine vegetables. See the generic names, and kelp.

laminarian (lam-i-nā'ri-an), a. [< Laminaria + -an.] Pertaining to the genus Laminaria; specifically, noting that belt or zone of marine life which extends from low-water mark to a depth of forty to ninety feet, and which in British seas is characterized by the presence of Laminariaceae, as well as by that of starfishes, the common sea-urchin, etc.

The Laminarian zone is succeeded by the Coraline zone. Sir C. W. Thomson, Depths of the Sea, p. 16.

Laminariæ (lam'i-nā-ri-ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Laminaria + -æ.] A synonym of Laminariaceæ.

Laminarites (lam'i-nā-ri'tēz), n. [NL., < Laminaria + -ites.] The generic name given by Sternberg and other fossil botanists to various fragments of plants supposed to be allied to the recent Laminaria, but in regard to which nothing has been definitely made out.

laminary (lam'i-nā-ri), a. [< lamina + -ary.] Composed of layers or plates; laminar.

laminare (lam'i-nāt), v.; pret. and pp. laminated, prr. laminating. [< ML. laminatus, pp. of laminare (> It. laminare = Sp. Pg. laminar = F. laminer, plate, flatten into a plate), < L. lamina, a thin plate: see lamina.] I. trans. 1. To form into a lamina or plate; beat out thin. [Rare.]

We took an ounce of that [refined silver], and, having laminated it, we cast it upon twice its weight of beaten sublimate. Boyle, Works, III. 81.

2. To form with or into lamina or layers; divide into plates or leaves: as, a laminating-machine.—Laminated arch. See arch.—Laminated pipe, a pipe made by wrapping successive layers of thin veneer, or veneer and fabrics in combination, over a mold or core.—Laminated rib. Same as laminated arch.—Laminated tubercle, the nodule of the cerebellum.

II. intrans. To part or become divided into laminae; separate into thin layers or plates: as, mica laminates on exposure to heat.

laminare (lam'i-nāt), a. [< ML. laminatus, furnished with plates or scales: see the verb.]

1. Having the form of a lamina or thin plate; leaf-like: as, the laminare coxæ of some beetles.

—2. Disposed in, consisting of, or bearing laminae, layers, or scales; laminar; sealed; sealy: as, laminare structure in geology; a laminare surface; the laminare tarsi of a bird.—Laminare coxa, a coxa dilated into a broad plate which covers the trochanter and the base of the femur, as the posterior coxæ of certain aquatic beetles.—Laminare horn, a horn-like process dilated at its base into a thin plate.

laminated (lam'i-nā-ted), p. a. [< laminare + -ed.] Same as laminare.

laminating-machine (lam'i-nā-ting-mā-shēn'), n. In metall-working, a machine for making metallic sheets; in particular, a set of gold-beaters' rolls arranged in a frame with gearing and adjustable bearings, the adjustment of the bearings being effected by screws, and the rollers being turned by a wheel. The gold ingot is by this machine (with frequent annealing to prevent cracking) reduced to a ribbon weighing 64 grains per inch, which is cut into pieces about one inch square to form the gold-beaters' pack, the beating of which, again with frequent annealing, reduces the metal to gold-leaf.

laminating-roller (lam'i-nā-ting-rō'lē), n. In metall-working, one of a set of rollers in a rolling-mill, for reducing fagots or blooms to sheets or bars. The rollers act in pairs, and their distance apart determines the thickness of the sheet. This distance is regulated by adjustable bearings moved accurately by screws. For bars the rollers are grooved in accordance with the required shape of the cross-section. The blooms or fagots are rolled hot; but cylindrical bars for shafts are in some manufactories finished by cold-rolling.

lamination (lam-i-nā'shōn), n. [< laminare + -ion.] The act of laminating, or the state of being laminated; arrangement in layers or thin plates; specifically, in geol., a division of rock into layers or laminae: nearly the same as stratification. A stratified rock may or may not be laminated. In the former case each stratum or bed is capable of being divided into thin layers or laminae. Lamination is hardly possible except in rocks made up of fine-grained materials. The break or interval separating two strata is more evident, and very probably was of longer duration, than that which intervened between the deposition of two successive laminae. Some English geologists use the term lamination with reference to the crystalline and eruptive rocks, making laminated structure the equivalent of tabular structure, where this has been the result not of stratification but of contraction during the process of cooling, or of some other cause connected with the formation of masses of igneous origin.

Four kinds of fissility may be recognized among rocks: 1st, lamination of original deposit; 2d, cleavage, as in slate; 3d, shearing, as near faults; 4th, foliation, as in schists. A. Geikie, Text-Book of Geol. (2d ed.), p. 463.

laminiferous (lam-i-nif'ē-rus), a. [< L. lamina, a thin plate, + ferre = E. *bear*¹.] Bearing laminae; having a laminated structure.

laminiform (lam'i-ni-fōrm), a. [< L. lamina, a thin plate, + forma, form.] Having the form of a lamina; laminar; lamellar; like a plate, layer, or leaf in shape.

laminiplantar (lam'i-ni-plan'tār), a. [< L. lamina, a thin plate, + planta, sole.] Having laminated tarsi; having the back of the tarsus covered with an undivided lamina on each side, the two meeting in a sharp ridge: opposed to scutelliplantar.

Laminiplantares (lam'i-ni-plan-tā'rēz), n. pl. [NL.: see laminiplantar.] Laminiplantar birds; in Sundevall's classification (1872), the prior series of the first order of birds (Oscines), including nearly all oscine Passeres.

laminiplantation (lam'i-ni-plan-tā'shōn), n. [As laminiplant(ar) + -ation.] The state or quality of being laminiplantar.

The laminiplantation . . . is equally well exhibited by most passerine birds, whether they have booted or anteriorly scutellate tarsi. Cooles, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 128.

laminitis (lam-i-ni'tis), n. [NL., < lamina + -itis.] Inflammation of the laminae of the hoof of a horse.

laminose (lam'i-nōs), a. [< NL. laminosus, < L. lamina, a thin plate: see lamina.] Resembling a lamina; laminiform. Cooke, Brit. Fungi, p. 314.

lamish (lā'mish), a. [< *lame*¹ + *-ish*¹.] Somewhat lame; slightly limping.

If he did, by a false step, sprain a vein in the inside of his leg, which ever after occasioned him to go lamish. Wood, Athens Oxon., II. J. Shirley.

lamiter, lameter (lā'mi-tēr, lā'me-tēr), n. [See lamiger.] A cripple.

Though ye may think him a lamiter, yet, gripple for gripple, friend, I'll wad a wether he'll gar the blinde spin frae under your nails.
Scott, Black Dwarf, xvii.

You have now, no doubt, friends who will look after you, and not suffer you to devote yourself to a blind lamiter like me?
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxxvii.

Lamium (lā' mi-um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < L. lamium, the dead-nettle.] A genus of labiate plants of the tribe Stachydeae, type of the subtribe Lamiceae, with nearly equal, not acerose calyx-teeth, the corolla-tube rarely exerted, the anther-cells generally parallel, and the nutlets angled and truncated at the apex. They are annual or perennial herbs, often diffuse or decumbent at the base, with cordate toothed or incised leaves, and densely many-flowered whorls of flowers crowded at the summit of the stem. The irregular galeate flowers are sometimes large, and generally pink or purple, sometimes white or even yellow. There are nearly 40 species of these plants, inhabiting Europe, northern Africa, and extratropical Asia. Several species are common as weeds in waste ground, and some are occasionally cultivated in gardens. They are all known by the name of dead-nettle or hedge dead-nettle. The best-known species are the white-flowered L. album, the pink- or purple-flowered L. purpureum, L. amplexicaule, and L. maculatum, and the yellow-flowered L. Galeobdolon.

lamm¹, v. t. See *lamb*¹.

lamm², n. An obsolete variant of *lame*³.

Lammas (lam'as), n. [ME. lammasse, < AS. lammasse, a later assimilated form of hlaf-masse, lit. 'loaf-mass,' i. e. 'bread-feast' (see def.), < hlaf, loaf, bread, + mæsse, mass: see *loaf*¹ and *mass*¹.] 1. Originally, in England, the festival of the wheat-harvest, observed on the 1st of August, corresponding to the 12th in the modern calendar. It is supposed to have taken its name from the practice of offering first-fruits at the service of the mass on that day, in the form of loaves of bread. The festival was a continuation of a similar one from pagan times. Some have supposed, erroneously, that the name has some connection with the word lamb.

And to the lammasse afterward he spondbed the quene.
Rob. of Gloucester, p. 317.

2. In Great Britain, the 1st of August as a date, which in Scotland is a quarter-day and in England a half-quarter-day. The prevalence of this use, both in ancient and modern times, has to a great extent obscured the original significance of the word. Also called Lammas-day.

3. The church festival of St. Peter's Chains, or St. Peter in the Fetters, observed on August 1st in memory of St. Peter's imprisonment and miraculous deliverance (Acts xii. 4-10).—Lammas eve, July 31st, the day before Lammas.

Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammas-eve at night shall she be fourteen.
Shak., R. and J., i. 3. 17.

Latter Lammas, a Lammas that, like the Greek calends, does not exist: used ironically, implying 'never.'

Courtiers thrine at latter Lammas day.
Gascogne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 55.

Lammas-day (lam'as-dā), n. Same as Lammas, 2.

lammas-land (lam'as-land), n. Land which is cultivated by individual occupiers, but after harvest (about the time of Lammas) is thrown open for common pasturage. F. Pollock, Land Laws, ii. [Eng.]

Lammas-tide (lam'as-tid), n. The time or season of Lammas.

How long is it now
To Lammas-tide?
Shak., R. and J., i. 3. 15.

lammer (lam'er), n. and a. [Also lamer, lamour, laumer, lambur; appar. < F. pambre, < le, the, ambre, amber: see *amber*².] Amber. [Scotch.]

Bedis of correll and lammer.
Aberdeen Igryts. (1548), V. 20. (Jamieson).

Dimna ye think puir Jeanie's een wi' the tears in them glanced like lamour beads?
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xii.

lammergeier, laemmergeier (lam'er-, ləm'er-gī-ēr), n. [G. lämmereger, < lämmer, pl. of lamm = E. lamb, + geier, a vulture (see under gerfalcon).] A very large diurnal bird of prey, the so-called bearded vulture or griffin of the Alps, Gypaëtus barbatus, of the family Falconidae, or placed in a separate family Gypaëtidae (which see). The bird is an eagle of somewhat vulturine habits. It is the largest European bird of prey, about 40 inches long from point of beak to end of tail, the wing from the carpal angle 30 inches, the tail 20. The upper parts are blackish; the head is white, with a black line on each side and tufts of black bristly feathers at the base of the bill; the under parts are tawny. It stoops to carrion like most other eagles, but is also powerful and rapacious enough to destroy chamois, lambs, kids, hares, etc. The bird ranges through the mountains of southern Europe and northeastern Africa, and thence through central Asia to northern China. See under Gypaëtus. Also written lammergeier, lemmergeyer, laemmergeyer.

lammie¹, n. See lambie.

lammy, lammie² (lam'i), n.; pl. lammies (-iz). [Perhaps a particular use of *lammie*¹, lambie.] A thick quilted frock or short jumper made of flannel or blanket-cloth, worn by sailors as an outside garment in cold weather. Gentleman's Mag., October, 1886, p. 390.

Lamna (lam'nā), n. [NL., < L. lamna, lamina, a thin plate: see lamina. For the allusion to 'plate,' cf. Elasmobranchii.] The typical genus of Lamnidae, containing sharks of remarkable swiftness and ferocity. L. cornubica is the porbeagle. See cut under mackerel-shark.

Lamnidae (lam'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamna + -idae.] A family of typical sharks represented by the genus Lamna, to which various limits have been ascribed. (a) In Günther's system, a family of Selachoides, with no nutritive membrane, an anal and two dorsal fins (the first of which is opposite the space between the pectorals and the ventrals), nostrils not confluent with the mouth, which is inferior, and spiracles none or minute. (b) In recent systems, a family of typical sharks, having the first dorsal between the pectorals and the ventrals, the second small, the tail keeled on the side, all the five branchial apertures in advance of the pectorals and of moderate size, and the teeth large. The porbeagles and the mackerel-sharks are the best-known forms. Also Lamnoidae.

Lamnina (lam-ni'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lamna + -inae.] In Günther's ichthyological system, a group of Lamnidae: same as Lamnidae (b).

lamnoid (lam'noid), a. and n. [< Lamna + -oid.] 1. a. Pertaining to the Lamnidae, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Lamnidae.

lamp¹ (lamp), n. [Early mod. E. lampe; < ME. lampe, laumpe = D. lampe = MLG. lampe = MHG. G. lampe = Dan. lampe = Sw. lampan, < OF. (also F.) lampe = Sp. lampo = Pg. lampão = It. lampada, lampade, < L. lampas (lampad-), < Gr. λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch, wax-light, lamp (oil-lamp), beacon, meteor, any light, < λαμπειν, shine. Cf. lantern, from the same ult. source.]

1. A vessel, generally portable, for containing an inflammable liquid and a wick so arranged that it lifts the liquid by capillary attraction and when ignited at the end serves as a means of illumination; in recent use also, by extension, a device employed for the same purpose in which the source of illumination is ignited gas or electricity. Lamps are distinguished by the liquids used in them, as alcohol-lamp, oil-lamp, etc., and by their mode of construction or their use, as Argand lamp, astral lamp, etc.

Ancient Roman Lamps, in the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

And rule vs by rightwises in our Ranke dedis,
With a lyve of lewte, that as a laump shynys.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4849.

The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order.
Ex. xxxix. 37.

2. Figuratively, something suggesting the light of a lamp, whether in appearance or use; anything possessing or communicating light, real or metaphorical.

Thy gentle eyes send forth a quickening spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me.
Rosce.

3. pl. Same as gig-lamps. See gig-lamp, 3. [Slang.]—Aphlogistic lamp. See aphlogistic.—Arc-lamp, a lamp in which the light is given out by an electric arc. See electric light, under electric.—Argand lamp, a lamp, patented by M. Argand in 1787, having a tubular wick, which is fed upward between two concentric metal tubes. Air is admitted to the interior of the flame as well as to the exterior.—Astral lamp. See astral.—Clutch-lamp. See electric light, under electric.—Davy lamp, Davy's lamp. See *davy*¹.—Dobereiner's lamp, a contrivance for producing an instantaneous light, invented by Professor Dobereiner, of Jena, in 1824. The light is produced by throwing a jet of hydrogen gas upon recently prepared spongy platinum, when the metal instantly becomes red-hot, and then sets fire to the gas. This action depends upon the readiness with which spongy platinum absorbs gases, more especially oxygen gas. The hydrogen is brought into such close contact with oxygen (derived from the atmosphere) in the pores of the platinum that chemical union takes place on the surface of the platinum, with evolution of sufficient heat to ignite the rest of the hydrogen. Also called hydrogen lamp.—Electric lamp. See electric and glow-lamp.—Fresnel lamp, a lamp in which the light is placed behind a Fresnel lens, or is inclosed in a glass of which the section is that of a Fresnel lens.—Hydrogen lamp. Same as Dobereiner's lamp.—Hydrostatic lamp, a lamp in which a column of water raises the oil to the wick.—Mechanical lamp. Same as corcel-lamp.—Monochromatic lamp, a lamp burning a mixture of alcohol and salt, to produce a yellow monochromatic light.—Oxyhydrogen lamp. See oxyhydrogen.—Spirit-lamp, a lamp of any form for burning alcohol. It is most commonly a lamp of very simple type, consisting of a receptacle of glass or sheet-metal, fitted with a cylindrical tube to carry a wick.—Stan- dard lamp, a hand-lamp with a tall standard, generally movable, made to stand on the floor. The tall fixed lamps in the chancels of churches are also known as standard lamps.—Student lamp, or students' lamp, a portable lamp with an Argand burner, supplied by a cylindrical self-flowing oil-reservoir connected with the burner by a downward-curving tube. Reservoir and burner are carried on an upright standard passing through the tube, and can be raised or lowered on the standard at pleasure. The burner is fitted with a tall chimney and a conical porcelain shade.—Submarine lamp, any form of lamp designed to burn under water. It is now particularly an electric light that may be suspended under water for lighting wrecks or submarine explorations, constructions, etc.—Sun lamp, a form of electric incandescent lamp, resembling an arc-lamp, the light being given out by a piece of lime, magnesia, or other refractory substance, placed between the ends of two carbon rods and rendered incandescent by an electric current.—To smell of the lamp, to show traces of the use of "midnight oil"; bear the marks of great and protracted labor; be labored and pedantic in style or abstruse in character: said of literary work.

A work not smelling of the lamp to-night,
But fitted for your Majesty's disport,
And writ to the meridian of your court.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, Frol.

(See also corcel-lamp, glow-lamp, jack-lamp, safety-lamp.)
lamp¹ (lamp), v. [< *lamp*¹, n.] 1. trans. To furnish light to; light. [Rare.]

Set tapers to the tombe, and lampe the church.
Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II, iii. 1.

II. intrans. To shine. [Rare.]

A cheerfulness did with her hopes arise,
That lamped clearer than it did before.
Daniel, Civil Wars, viii. 64.

lamp² (lamp), v. i. [Prob. akin to *lamp*¹, as *cramp*¹ to crimp.] To go or run quickly; scamper. [Scotch.]

It was all her father's own fault, that let her run lamping about the country, riding on bare-backed nag.
Scott, Monastery, xxxiii.

lamp³, n. [ME., also lampe, for lame*, < OF. lame, a thin plate: see *lame*³.] A thin plate.

In an erthen pottle how put is al, . . .
And wel covered with a lamp of glas.
Chaucer, Frol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 211.

lampad (lam'pad), n. [< L. lampas (lampad-), < Gr. λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch: see *lamp*¹.] A lamp or candlestick; a torch. [Rare.]

Him who 'mid the golden lampads went.
Trench.

lampadary (lam'pā-dā-ri), n.; pl. lampadaries (-riz). [< ML. lampadarius, < MGr. λαμπάριος, < Gr. λαμπάς (lampad-), lamp: see *lamp*¹.] An officer in the Greek Church who has the care of the church lamps, and carries a lighted taper before the patriarch in processions.

lampade (lam'pād), n. [Also lampado; < L. lampas (lampad-), a torch: see *lamp*¹.] A lamp-shell. Meuschen, 1787; Humphreys, 1797.

lampadedromy (lam-pā-dēd'rō-mī), n. [< Gr. λαμπαδρόμια, lampadodromia, torch-race, < λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch, + δρόμος, a race.] In Gr. antiq., a torch-race. Each contestant carried a lighted torch, and the prize was won by him who first reached the goal with his torch unextinguished.

lampadephore (lam-pād'ē-fōr), n. [< Gr. λαμπαδφόρος, a torch-bearer, < λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch, + φέρειν = E. *bear*¹.] In Gr. antiq., a contestant in a torch-race.

lampadephoris (lam-pād'ē-fō'ri-ā), n. [< Gr. λαμπαδφόρια, the bearing of torches, a torch-race, < λαμπάδφορος, a torch-bearer: see lampadephore.] In Gr. antiq., a torch-race in honor of a fire-god, as Prometheus or Hephestus (Vulcan). At Athens it was held on a moonless night, the torches being lighted at the altar of the divinity whom it was intended to honor, and the course being from this altar to the Acropolis.

lampadephoros (lam-pā-def'ō'ros), n. [Gr. λαμπαδφόρος: see lampadephore.] Same as lampadephore.

lampades, n. Plural of *lampas*², 1.

Lampadias (lam-pā'di-as), n. [NL., < Gr. λαμπαδίας, a torch-bearer, a comet, the star Aldebaran, < λαμπάς (lampad-), a lamp, torch: see *lamp*¹.] 1. Ptolemy's name for the bright star of the Hyades, a Tauri, or Aldebaran.—2. A bearded comet. E. Phillips, 1706.

lampadist (lam'pā-dist), n. [< Gr. λαμπαδιστής, torch-bearer, < λαμπαδίειν, run the torch-race, < λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch: see *lamp*¹, lampad.] In Gr. antiq., one who took part in a torch-race; a lampadephore.

lampadite (lam'pā-dit), n. [< Gr. λαμπάς (lampad-), a torch, + *-ite*².] A variety of wad or earthy manganese, containing a small percentage of oxid of copper.

lampado (lam-pā'dō), n. Same as lampade.
lampadomancy (lam-pād'ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. λαμπαδία (lampad-), lamp, + μαντεία, divination.] An ancient method of divination from the variations in the color and motions of the flame of a lamp or torch.

lampas¹, lampass (lam'pas), n. [Corruptly lampers; < OF. and F. lampas, lampas (see def.), prob. < lampas, the palate or throat, in the phrase arroseur (or humecteur) le lampas, 'wet one's whistle,' appar. connected with lamper, drink: see lampoon.] In farriery, a congestion and swelling of the fleshy lining of the roof of the mouth immediately behind the fore teeth in the horse. It soon subsides if left to itself.

His horse . . . troubled with the lampas.
Shak., T. of the S., III. 2. 52.

lampas² (lam'pas), n. [NL., < Gr. λαμπάς, a lamp: see lamp.] 1. Pl. lampades (-pa-dēz). An early quasi-generic or collective name of the lampshells, or such of the arthropodous braehiopods as were known a century ago, especially Terebratulide. The word is not now used as the name of a genus, and has a plural. See lampade. Sometimes spelled lampus.

2. [cap.] A genus of Foraminifera: same as Robulina. Montfort, 1808.—3. [cap.] A genus of gastropods, closely related to Ravella. Schumacher, 1817.

lampas³ (lam'pas), n. [< F. lampas (see def.).] Originally, Chinese flowered silk; hence, in modern times, a material of decorative character for upholstery, made of silk and wool.

lampass, n. See *lampas*¹.

lampblack (lamp'blak), n. [< lamp + black, being orig. made by means of a lamp or torch.] A fine black pigment consisting of particles of carbon, pure or almost pure, used for making paints and ink. It reflects only about two per cent. of the incident light. It was formerly made by burning crude oils with the least supply of air possible for combustion, in order to produce a smoky flame, the soot being collected in a receptacle called a lampblack-furnace, and was prepared for use by being heated to redness in iron boxes. It is now generally made by allowing gas-flames to impinge on cylinders of iron chilled by a stream of cold water flowing through them. The lampblack collects on the cold surfaces, Lampblack-furnace.

and is removed and collected by machinery. This form of lampblack is known as carbon-black or gas-black.—Lampblack-furnace, a cylindrical chamber lined with asbestos or canvas, with a conical top having a cowl for the escape of the more volatile products of combustion. At one side of the chamber is a smaller compartment with a grate, over the fire in which is placed a vessel containing a hydrocarbon, resin, coal-tar, or a similar substance. The carbon product of combustion adheres to the lining of the furnace-chamber, from which it is scraped by a special mechanism and collected at intervals. E. H. Knight.

lampblack (lamp'blak), v. t. [< lampblack, n.] To treat with lampblack; coat with lampblack.

You that newly come from *lampblack*ing the Judges' shoes, and are not fit to wipe mine.

Wycherley, Plain Dealer, III. 1.

The thickly *lampblack*ed surface, then, and the retinal screen provided by nature in the eye, both exercise selective absorption.

Philosophical Mag., XXVII. 2.

lamp-burner (lamp'ber'nēr), n. That part of or attachment to a lamp at or in which the wick is kept burning. Lamp-burners are made in a great number of types and sizes. The simplest, as those of common spirit-lamps, are merely tubes of sheet-metal; but they usually include some device, as a serrated wheel, for raising and lowering the wick, a hood of some form to concentrate a current of air on the flame, and often a gallery or socket, pierced for ventilation, to support a chimney. See burner.

lamp-canopy (lamp'kan'ō-pi), n. A large and elaborate smoke-bell. Car-Builder's Diet.

lamp-case (lamp'kās), n. 1. In a street- or train-car, a box with a glazed door placed inside an end window to receive a lamp. A light or eye of colored glass is usually placed opposite it on the exterior side, that the light may serve as a signal.

2. In Great Britain, a cylindrical shell of iron serving to protect the roof-lamp of a railway-carriage. Car-Builder's Diet.

lamp-cement (lamp'sē-ment'), n. A cement for securing brass mountings on glass, as on lamps. It is made by boiling 3 parts of resin with 1 part of caustic soda in 5 parts of water. The resulting soap is mixed with half its weight of plaster of Paris, zinc white, white lead, or precipitated chalk. Petroleum and burning-fluids of similar character do not affect it. E. H. Knight.

lamp-chimney (lamp'chinn'ni), n. A tube or funnel of glass or other material so placed as to incase the flame of a lamp. Its use is to protect the flame, promote combustion by increasing the draft, and conduct away the smoke and gases.

lamp-cone (lamp'kōn), n. A conical or dome-shaped cap of sheet-metal covering the burner of an oil-lamp, and having a slit in the top through which the flame projects. It serves to promote combustion by concentrating air-currents on both sides of the flame.

lamper¹ (lam'pēr), n. One who goes from house to house every day cleaning and filling lamps for a small fee. [Colleg., U. S.]

lamper² (lam'pēr), n. A dialectal variation of lamprey.

lamper-eel (lam'pēr-ēl'), n. [< *lamper*² + eel, from the resemblance in form to an eel.] 1. A lamprey.—2. The mutton-fish or eel-pout, Zoarces anguillaris, a fish of the family Lycodidae, inhabiting the Atlantic coast of North America from Labrador to Delaware, and representing a section of the genus Zoarces in which the fin-rays and vertebrae are increased in number. It is of a reddish-brown color, mottled with olive, and has a dark streak along the side of the head; it attains a length of 20 inches.

lampern (lam'pēr), n. [See lamprey.] The river-lamprey, Petromyzon fluviatilis.

lampers (lam'pēr), n. See *lampas*¹.

lampet (lam'pēt), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of lampet.

Lampetra (lam'pē-trā), n. [L., a lamprey: see lamprey.] 1†. An old quasi-generic book-name of a lamprey. Willughby, 1636.—2. A genus of river-lampreys, as L. fluviatilis. See Ammocetes and lamprey.

lamp-flower (lamp'flou'ēr), n. Any plant of the genus Lychnis.

lamp-fly (lamp'fli), n. A firefly. [Rare.]

While in and out the terrace plants, and round

One branch of tall tadora, waxed and waned

The lampfly lured there, wanting the white flower.

Browning, Ring and Book, i. 496.

lampfull, a. [< lamp + -ful.] Full of lamps or lights; starry.

A temporal beauty of the lampfull skies,

Where powerful Nature shows her freshest Dles.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II. The Ark.

lamp-furnace (lamp'fēr'nās), n. A furnace in which the heat is afforded by a lamp, as distinguished from one heated by a gas-jet, a Bunsen burner, charcoal, or the like. E. H. Knight.

lamp-glass (lamp'glās), n. Same as lamp-chimney.

lamp-globe (lamp'glōb), n. A lamp-shade or lamp-chimney of a globular form.

lamp-hanger (lamp'hang'ēr), n. A device for supporting a gas-lamp suspended below a chandelier; a lamp-elevator. It has usually a telescopic gas-pipe, and some attachment such as a lazy-tongs or balanced chains, for raising or lowering the lamp.

lamp-head (lamp'hēd), n. 1. The part of an incandescent electric lamp that fits into the holder.—2. The electromotive force in an electric lamp.

lamp-holder (lamp'hōl'dēr), n. A device for securing a lamp to its support; specifically, a socket or holder fitted with electric terminals, into which the top of the glass globe of an incandescent lamp is fitted, or from which it hangs.

lamp-hole (lamp'hōl), n. A hole or opening to receive a lamp, or to admit of the passage of a lamp, as in some sewers.

Smaller openings, large enough to allow a lamp to be lowered for purposes of inspection, are called lampholes, and are often built up of vertical lengths of drain-pipe.

Encyc. Brit., XXI. 714.

lamp-hoop (lamp'hōp), n. A ring with an interior screw-thread attached to a cheap oil-lamp to receive the burner. Car-Builder's Diet.

lamping (lam'ping), a. [< lamp + -ing.] Shining; sparkling. [Rare.]

And happy lines! on which, with starry light,

Those *lamp*ing eyes will deluge sometimes to look.

Spenser, Sonnets, I.

lampion (lam'pi-ōn), n. [F., a small lamp, < lampe, a lamp: see lamp.] A small lamp suitable for illuminations.

At the French Chancellerie they had six more lampions in their illumination than ours had.

Thackeray.

Oh? Down the court three lampions flare;

Put forward your best foot.

Browning, Respectability.

Hidden among the leaves were millions of fantastically colored lampions seeming like so many glow-worms.

G. W. Cable, Stories of Louisiana, xv.

lamp-iron (lamp'ī'ēr), n. A metallic socket or holder to receive a lamp or lantern, as on a railway-carriage. [British.]

lampist (lam'pist), n. [= F. lampiste; as lamp + -ist.] 1. A workman skilled in the manufacture and repair of lamps; specifically, an artisan employed in the United States lighthouse establishment for that work.

I have submitted the lamp burning Petroleum to the inspection of the most experienced lampists who were accessible.

Silliman, quoted in Cone and Johns's Petrolia, iv.

2. See the quotation.

Allampadati, or Lampists, who during Passion Week and at the great festivals begged oil for the lamps which are lighted in front of the host, or the images of the virgin.

Ribbon-Turner, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 559.

lampit (lam'pit), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of lampet.

lamp-jack (lamp'jak), n. A hood or covering placed over a lamp-vent or lamp-chimney on the outside of a railroad-car, to shield the light from rain and wind. E. H. Knight.

lamplight (lamp'lit), n. The light shed by a lamp or lamps.

Gold glittering thro' lamplight dim.

Tennyson, Arabian Nights.

lamplighter (lamp'li'tēr), n. [< lamp + lighter.] 1. A person employed to light street-lamps.—2. A piece of paper rolled into a spill, used to light lamps.—3. A torch used for lighting gas-lamps.—4. The bass (fish). [Local, U. S.]

lampoon (lam-pōn'), n. [< F. lampon, a lampoon, orig. a drinking-song, < lampoons, let us drink, 1st pers. pl. impv. of lamper, drink, nasalized form of OF. lapper, laper, drink, of OLG. origin, AS. lopian, etc., lap, drink: see lap, v.] A sarcastic writing aimed at a person's character, habits, or actions; a personal satire; a sarcastic diatribe; humorous abuse in writing.

Here they still paste up their droll lampoons and scurrilous papers.

Everlyn, Diary, Feb. 20, 1645.

These personal and scandalous libels, carried to excess in the reign of Charles II., acquired the name of lampoon, from the burden song to them: "Lampone, lampone, camerada lampone"—"Guzzler, guzzler, my fellow guzzler."

Scott.

=Syn. Lampoon, Pasquinade, Invective, Satire. The difference between lampoon and pasquinade is not great, but perhaps a lampoon is more malicious, more directly aimed to insult and degrade, while a pasquinade is shorter and of a lighter nature. (See the history of pasquinade, under the definition. See also satire.) An invective is a verbal onslaught, generally spoken but possibly written, designed to bring reproach upon another person, present or absent: as, the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip, of Cicero against Verres, of Queen Margaret against Richard (Shak., Rich. III., l. 3). An invective differs from a satire in its intensity and in its lack of reformatory purpose.

lampoon (lam-pōn'), v. t. [< lampoon, n.] To abuse in a lampoon; write lampoons against.

It cannot be supposed that the same man who lampooned Plato would spare Pythagoras.

Observer, No. 142.

lampooner (lam-pō'nēr), n. One who lampoons or abuses with personal satire; a writer of a lampoon or lampoons.

lampoonry (lam-pōn'ri), n. [< lampoon + -ry.] The act of lampooning; written personal abuse or satire. Swift.

lamporst, n. [Origin not ascertained.] A sort of thin silk. Nares.

Before the stool of estate satt another mayde, all clothyd in white, and her face coveryd with white lamporst.

Letter dated 1559.

lamp-pendant (-lamp'pen'dant), n. A hanging frame or grating, or luster-shaped structure, arranged for holding one or more lamps.

lamp-plug (lamp'plug), n. In Great Britain, a cylindrical piece of wood secured to a lamp-case by a chain, and used to fill the lamp-aperture in a roof when the lamp is not in place. Car-Builder's Diet.

lamp-protector (lamp'prō-tek'tōr), n. In Great Britain, a sheet-iron cover hinged to a lamp-case and secured by a spring-catch, to protect the lamp from rain, while allowing the smoke to escape. The American equivalent is lamp-jack. Car-Builder's Diet.

lamp-pruner (lamp'prō'nēr), n. An implement for cleaning and picking the wicks of a lamp.

lampreel† (lam-prēl'), n. [A contr. of lamper-eel: see lamprey.] A lamper-eel or lamprey.

Lampreels that ingender with snakes, and are full of eyes on both sides.

Marston and Webster, Malcontent, l. 5.

lamprel† (lam'prel), n. A lamprey in a certain stage of growth. See quotation under lamprey.

lampret† (lam'pret), n. [See lamprey.] A lamprey in a certain stage of growth. See quotation under lamprey.

lamprey (lam'pri), n. [Also in variant or deriv. forms lamper, lampern, lampron, lampret, lamprel, etc.; < ME. lampreie, < OF. lampreie*, lamproie, F. lamproie = Pr. lamprada = Sp. Pg. lam- prea = It. lampreda = AS. lamprede = G. lamprete = Dan. Sw. lampret, < ML. lampreda, earlier lampetra, a lamprey, lit. 'lick-rock' (so called with ref. to their habit of attaching themselves to rocks by their circular suctorial mouths; cf. the equiv. generic name Petromyzon), < L. lam-bere, lick (see lambent), + petra, a rock (see pier).] A marsipobranchiate fish, of an elongated or eel-like form when adult. All the lampreys have a subinferior circular suctorial mouth, single median nostril, well-developed lateral eyes, and 7 pairs of lateral branchial apertures. They remain for a long time in the larval or ammocetiform condition, having then a longitudinal slit-like mouth and no eyes. The adults, by means of the circular mouth, attach themselves to stones and other objects; they also attack and adhere to fishes, eating their way into the interior of the body. They make a nest of stones, which are collected by means of the suctorial mouth. The species, about 20 in number, are mostly inhabitants of the temperate regions of the northern and southern hemispheres, and constitute the order Hypseroartia and family Petromyzontidae, divided into from 4 to 8 genera. The largest is the sea-lamprey, Petromyzon marinus, sometimes attaining a length of about 3 feet. The best-known species of the northern hemisphere belong to the genera Petromyzon and Lampetra or Ammocetes, as the river-lamprey, or lampern, and the pride. See also cut under basket.

A, cranium with its contained brain; a, section of ethmovermerine plate; OF, entrance to factory chamber, prolonged into a caecal pouch; O, Ph, pharynx; Br, brachial channel with inner openings of the brachial sacs; M, cavity of mouth with its bony teeth; 2, lingual cartilage; 3, oral ring.

How several sorts of Fish are named according to their Age or Growth. . . . A Lamprey, first a Lampron Grigg, then a Lampret, then a Lamprell, then a Lamprey. A Lampron, first a Barie, then a Barling, then a Lamprell, and then a Lamprey or Lampron.

Randle Holme (1688), p. 325.

Lamprididae (lam-prid'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lampris (Lamprid-) + -idae.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes constituted for the genus Lampris, of compressed oval form, with long dorsal and anal fins, and with subabdominal ventrals having numerous rays. It contains the opah.

Lampris (lam'pris), n. [NL., < Gr. λαμπρός, shining, bright, brilliant, radiant, < λάμπω, shine: see lamp.] The typical genus of Lamprididae, containing one known species, of large size and resplendent colors, inhabiting the open sea — L. luna, the opah.

Lamprocolius (lam-prō-kō'li-us), n. [NL., < Gr. λαμπρός, bright, + κόλιος, a woodpecker.] A genus of splendid African starlings of the subfamily Juidinae. Also called Lamprotornis. Sundervall, 1836.

lampron (lam'pron), n. [Also lampurn; < ME. lampron, lamprun, laumpron, laumprun, < OF. lampron, lampreon, lamproyon, lamprion, dim. of lampreie, lamprey: see lamprey.] A lamprey. [Obsolete or provincial.]

As if thou woldest an eel or a lamprun holde wltre streite hondis, hou myche strongerli thou thristis, so myche the sunnere it shal gliden away.

Wyclif, Prologue to Job.

lamprophyre (lam'prō-fir), n. [< Gr. λαμπρός, bright, + (πορ)φύρεος, purple: see porphyry.] The name given by Gumbel to rocks, considerably varied in lithological character, occurring in dikes in strata of Paleozoic age. Under the name lamprophyre were included rocks resembling minette, kersantite, and mica-dabase in character, but grouped under one name for convenience of geological description. Rosenbusch divides the lamprophyres into two groups, the gneissic and the dioritic. In the former the dominant feldspar is orthoclase; in the latter, plagioclase.

lamprophyric (lam-prō-fir'ik), a. [< lamprophyr(e) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lamprophyre.

Lamprosoma (lam-prō-sō'mā), n. [NL. (Kirby, 1818), < Gr. λαμπρός, shining, + σῶμα, body.] 1.

In entom., a large and important genus of leaf-beetles or Chrysomelidae, having the tarsal claws appendiculate. It is confined to tropical America, and comprises nearly 100 nominal species, the various forms of the genus being extremely difficult to determine.

2f. In herpet., a genus of colubriiform serpents, now called Chionactis. Hallowell, 1857.

Lamprotes (lam'prō-tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λαμπρότης, brightness, < λαμπρός, bright: see Lampiris.] 1. A genus of hymenopterous parasites of the family Chalcididae. Walker, 1829.—2. The typical genus of tanagers of the subfamily Lamprotinae, having long sharp claws and glossy black plumage. W. Swainson, 1837.—3. A genus of tineid moths of the family Gelechiidae, based upon certain European species formerly included in Gelechia. Heinemann, 1870.

Lamprotinae (lam-prō-tī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamprotes, 2, + -inae.] A subfamily of Tanagridae, represented by the genera Lamprotes and Sericossypha. P. L. Slater.

Lamprotornis (lam-prō-tōr'nis), n. [NL., < NL. Lamprotes + Gr. ὄρνις (ōrni-), bird.] 1. A genus of Papuan manucodes or paradise-birds: same as Astrapia. Temminck, 1820.—2. Same as Lamprocolius. W. Swainson, 1837.

Lamprotornithinae (lam-prō-tōr-ni-thi'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lamprotornis + -inae.] A subfamily of splendid sturnoid passerine birds, of the family Sturnidae, typified by the genus Lamprotornis (def. 2), including the African glossy starlings and their relatives. The genus name not being available in this connection, the subfamily was by G. R. Gray in 1855 named Juidinae. Also Lamprotorninae (Swainson, 1837).

lampprototype (lam'prō-tip), n. [< Gr. λαμπρός, bright, + τύπος, impression.] In photog., a paper print glazed with collodion and gelatin.

Lampsacene (lamp'sa-sēn), a. [< L. Lampsacenus, of Lampsacus, < Lampsacus, Lampsacum, < Gr. Λάμψακος, a city of Mysia, on the Hellespont, now represented in name by a village called Lamsaki.] Of or pertaining to Lampsacus, the reputed birthplace of Priapus; hence, Priapic: especially used with reference to classical drama, symbolism, etc.

Lampsana (lamp'sa-nā), n. See Lapsana.

Lampsanaea (lamp-sā'nē-ē), n. pl. See Lapsanaea.

lamp-shade (lamp'shād), n. A shade or screen placed above or around the flame of a lamp, to intercept, modify, or reflect the light. It may be opaque, or have a dark exterior and a reflecting interior surface so disposed as to throw the light downward or in any other direction desired. Lamp-shades are made of glass, tin, porcelain, silk, paper, etc.

lamp-shell (lamp'shel), n. [So called in allusion to the resemblance of the shell at one end to an ancient lamp with the wick.] A brachiopod of the family Terebratulidae or some related family; by extension, any brachiopod. See *lampas*².

lamp-stand (lamp'stānd), n. An upright standard with a broad base, serving to hold one or more lamps.

lamp-wick (lamp'wik), n. 1. The wick of a lamp.—2. A cultivated labiate plant, Phlomis Lychnites, native in southern Europe. Its leaves are said to have been used as lamp-wicks, whence this and the specific name. [In this sense properly lampwick.]

Lampyridae (lam-pir'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lampyris + -idae.] A family of sericicorn malacoder-matous pentamerous beetles with 7 or 8 ventral segments (of which the first is not elongate), the prominent hind coxae not sulcate, the front coxae with trochantin, and the tarsi slender. The body is usually lengthened and has flexible elytra, though elytra are sometimes wanting. There are more than 500 species, mostly American. Many are phosphorescent, and are known as glow-worms, fireflies, lightning-bugs, etc. The family is divisible into Telephorinae, Lampyrinae, and Lycinae.

Lampyrinae (lam-pi-ri'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lampyris + -inae.] The typical subfamily of Lampyridae, having the mesothoracic episterna sinuate and the epipleurae usually wide at the base. The group is noted for the luminosity of most of its species. See firefly, lightning-bug, and glow-worm.

lampyrine (lam'pi-rin), a. and n. [< Lampyris + -ine.] 1. a. Luminous, as a firefly; of or pertaining to the Lampyrinae.

2. n. A member of the Lampyrinae.

Lampyris (lam'pi-ri-s), n. [NL., < L. lampyris, < Gr. λαμπυρίς, also, and more prop., λάμπουρις, a glow-worm (also a fox), < λάμπω, shine, + ουρά, tail, < λάμπω, shine, + ουρά, tail. Cf. equiv. πυρολαμπίς, < πυρή, rump, + λάμπω, shine; and πυρολαμπίς, < πύρ, = E. fire, + λάμπω, shine.] The typical genus of the family Lampyris noctiluca.

Lampyrinae. L. noctiluca and L. splendidula are common European fireflies, the females of which are wingless, with soft, jointed, worm-like body, and are hence termed glow-worms. These and the larvae are luminous.

lamy (lā'mi), n.; pl. lamies (-miz). [Hebrides.] The common murre or guillemot, Lomvia trole. C. Swainson. Also lavy.

lana (lā'nā), n. [S. Amer.] A close-grained and tough wood obtained from Genipa Americana, a South American and West Indian tree of the natural order Rubiaceae. The fruit, called genipap, yields a pigment called lana-dye, which the Indians use to stain their faces and persons. See Genipa and genipap.

lanarkite (lan'ār-kit), n. [< Lanark (see def.) + -ite.] A basic sulphate of lead occurring in greenish-white or pale-yellow monoclinic crystals at Leadhills in Lanarkshire, Scotland.

lanary (lā'nā-ri), n.; pl. lanaries (-riz). [< L. lanaria, a wool-factory, fem. of lanarius, belonging to wool, < lana, wool: see lanate.] A place for storing wool. Bailey, 1727. [Obsolete or rare.]

Lancasterian (lang-kas-tēr'i-an), a. [< Lancaster (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Joseph Lancaster, an English schoolmaster (1778–1838), or the method of monitorial instruction in primary schools established by him: as, the Lancasterian system; Lancasterian schools. The principal feature of the system was the teaching of the younger pupils by the more advanced, called monitors; hence the terms monitorial and (incorrectly) mutual-instruction system, sometimes used as equivalents.

Lancastrian (lang-kas'tri-an), a. and n. [< Lancaster (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. In Eng. hist., of or pertaining to the dukes or the royal house of Lancaster. The Lancastrian kings, descendants of John of Gaunt, fourth son of Edward III, and first duke of Lancaster, were Henry IV., V., and VI., 1399–1461; and the Lancastrian party finally triumphed under their indirect representative Henry VII, the first of the Tudors, 1485–1509. See II.

If this fayre rose offend thy sight,
Placed in thy bosom bare,
'T will blush to find itself less white,
And turn Lancastrian there.

The White Rose.

2. n. In Eng. hist., an adherent of the house of Lancaster; a supporter of the claims to the crown of the Lancastrian line, as against the Yorkists, especially in the contests called the wars of the Roses (which see, under rose), 1455–85.

lance¹ (lāns), n. [Early mod. E. also launce; < ME. lauce (= D. lans = G. lanze = Dan. landse = Sw. lans), < OF. lance, F. lance = Pr. lansa = Sp. lanza = Pg. lança = It. lancia, < L. lancea, appar. = Gr. λόγχη, a light spear. The L. word was said to be of Spanish (Hispanic) origin.]

1. A long spear used rather by couching and in the charge than for throwing; especially, the long spear of the middle ages, and of certain modern cavalry regiments in which the use of this arm is retained. The war-lance of the fourteenth century was about 16 feet long; that of modern times is from 8½ to 11 feet. A small flag is usually attached to the shaft of the lance near the head.

At the turnyng that tyme the traytours hym hitte . . . That the boustous launce the bewelles attamede,
That braste at the brawyng, and brake in the myddys.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I, 2175.

My good blade carves the caques of men,
My tough lance thruateth aare.

Tennyson, Sir Galahad.

2. Any long and slender spear: applied loosely to weapons of savage tribes, etc.—3. The instrument with which a whale is killed after being harpooned and tired out. Two kinds are used, the hand-lance and the bomb-lance, the latter being the more effectual. A boat's outfit usually includes three hand-lances.

4. In carp, a pointed blade, as that affixed to one side of a chipping-bit or router to sever the grain around the path of the tool. It is also used in certain crozes, gages, and planes. E. H. Knight.—5. A pyrotechnic squib used for various purposes.—6. An iron rod which is fixed across the earthen mold of a shell, and keeps it suspended in the air when the shell is cast. As soon as the shell is formed, this rod must be taken out with instruments made for that purpose. W. U. Helm, Mil. Dict.
7. One skilled in the use of the lance; a soldier armed with a lance; a lancer.

Duke Dudley was unquestionably the ablest public man of the age. In youth the most graceful lance in the tillyards of Greenwich and Windsor, the bravest soldier of the later wars of Henry, the mainstay of the Revolution after Henry's death. R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xxi.

8. In ichth., same as sand-lance.—First lance, in whaling, same as first set (which see, under first).—Free lance. See free-lance.—Hollow lance. Same as bourdonnaise.—Holy lance, in the Gr. Ch., a eucharistic knife with a blade like that of a lance, and a cruciform handle. It is used, in the office of prothesis, in the preparation of the holy bread for the liturgy. Also called holy spear.—Tilting lance. See tilting-lance.—To break a lance. See break.

lance¹ (lans), v.; pret. and pp. lanced, ppr. lancing. [Early mod. E. also lauce; < ME. lanceen, lanscn, launcen (also launchen: see launch), < OF. lancier, lanchier, pierce with a lance, pierce, fight with a lance, throw, hurl, plunge, press, etc., F. lancer, throw, hurl, launch, < lance, a lance: see lance¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To pierce with a lance, or with any sharp-pointed instrument.

With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, lanced mine arm.

Shak., Lear, II. 1. 54.

Seized the due victim, and with fury lanced
Her back. Dryden, Theodore and Honoria, I. 301.

2. To open with or as if with a lancet: as, to lance an abscess.

It is an age, indeed, which is only fit for satire, and the sharpest I have shall never be wanting to lance its villanies, and its ingratitude to the government.

Dryden, Ded. of Plutarch's Lives.

The favorite remedy for all disorders occurring at the time of dentition is lancing the gums.

Quain, Med. Dict., p. 342.

3. To throw in the manner of a javelin; launch.

Oure lord to the lede lanced a speche:

"Is this ryzt-wys thou renk, alle thy renk noyse?"

Attilative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 439.

Deep in the Glebe her Spear she lanc'd.

Congreve, Pindaric Odes, II.

4. To shoot forth as a lance.

"The tree highte Trewe-lone, a quath he, "the trinite hit sette;

Thorgh lonly lokynge hit lyueth and launceth vp blossomes."

Piers Plowman (C), xix. 10.

II. † intrans. 1. To shoot or spring up.

And thow the grete grace of Jod of greyn ded in erthe Alte laste launceth vp wher-by we lynen alle.

Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 135.

2. To pierce.

The swerde of loue thow hire [Mary] gan lauce,
Heo swapte on swoynnyng thow that chaunce.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 142.

lance^{2†} (lans), n. [Also written lauce; = OIt. lance, < L. lanx (acc. lanc-), a plate, platter, scale of a balance: see balance. Cf. auuel.] A balance.

That fortune all in equall lauce doth sway.

Spenser, F. Q., III. vii. 4.

lance-bucket (lans'buk'et), n. A shoe or rest to support the butt of the lance, forming part of the accoutrements of certain bodies of lancers.

lance-corporal (lans'kôr'pô-ral), n. Milit., a private performing the duties of a corporal, with temporary rank as such.

lance-fly (lans'fi), n. A poetical name of some undetermined insect, perhaps a lace-fly.

At the glimpse of morning pale
The lance-fly spreads his silken sail.

J. R. Drake, Culprit Fay.

lancegay†, n. [Also erroneously lance-de-gay; < ME. lancegay, launcgay, < OF. lancegaie, lancegaye, launcgaie, for lance-zagaye*, < lance, lance, + zagaye, assagai: see assagai.] A kind of spear or javelin.

In his hand a lancegay,
A long sword by his syde.

Chaucer, Sir Thopas, I. 41.

But with a shotte off a lancegay tho
Thys noble knyght smetyng thorough hys body.

Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), I. 2108.

These carried a kind of lance de gay, sharp at both ends, which they held in the midst of the staff.

Raleigh, Hist. World, v. 3.

lance-head (lans'hed), n. The head of a lance. The typical lance-head is that used in the fourteenth century, and is almost as straight and uniform as a bayonet. The lance-head is usually fastened to the wood by one or more tangs on the outside; but sometimes these nearly envelop the wood, forming a sort of ferrule.

lance-hook (lans'huk), n. A small iron hook on the side of a whale-boat, designed to hold a lance.

lance-knight† (lans'nit), n. [An erroneously accented form, as if a soldier armed with a lance, of landsknicht, lanzknicht.] A common foot-soldier.

At one time there came an army of eighteen thousand foot, at another time an army wherein were reckoned twelve thousand lance-knights.

Baker, Hen. VIII., an. 1546.

Now must I practise to get the true garb of one of these lance-knights. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, II. 2.

land-drake (land'drāk), n. Same as land-crake. [Prov. Eng.]

lande (land), n. [F. lande = Sp. Pg. It. landa, a heath, a waste: see *laund*¹, which is from the OF. form of the same word, and is now in use only in the form *laen*¹.] An uncultivated plain, or level region, covered with a spontaneous growth of heath, broom, and ferns; any unfertile level region or tract in which the soil is tilled with difficulty. "The Landes" is the name given especially to a region lying along the ocean, north of the Pyrenees, which was once a part of the bed of the sea, and is covered with sands of Pliocene age. These sands have in many places, at an inconsiderable depth beneath the surface, become compacted into beds of hard sandstone, called alios. The word lande is used by writers in English only with reference to the geography of France, and especially to the region included in the department of the Gironde and in that named from this word Les Landes. This region bears naturally little but heath and broom, but on the seaward side has been extensively planted with sea-pines, which at once hold the sands in place and provide an important store of timber. The inland plains are generally occupied as sheep-runs. The Landes are dry in summer and marshy in winter.

landed (lan'ded), a. [ME. landed, londed; < *land*¹ + -ed.] 1. Having possessions in land: as, the landed gentry; a landed proprietor.

One who grabs or seizes land; one who gets possession of another's land by trick or device, or by force; especially, one who possesses himself of public land by means contrary to the spirit of the law; one who seizes large tracts of land rapaciously and unfairly.—2. Specifically, in Ireland, one who buys or rents land from which another has been evicted.

Right or wrong, the attitude of the League to the land-grabber is that which, in the old days of regnating, the English public would have assumed towards one who, while the whole community was trying to bring down the price of corn, went and purchased at the rate which by universal consent had been ruled to be excessive. Contemporary Rev., LI. 238.

land-grabbing (land'grab'ing), n. The act or practice of seizing or occupying land by unlawful or dishonorable means.

landgrave (land'grāv), n. [= D. landgraaf = Dan. landgreve = MLG. landgrawe = MHG. landgrāve, G. landgraf; as *land*¹ + grāve.] In Germany, in the middle ages, a graf or count to whom were intrusted special judicial functions, extending over a considerable territory; later, the title of certain German princes, some of whom were princes of the empire. The branches of the non-regnant families of Hesse possess the title of landgraves, which is borne by the head of each branch.

This was the origin of the landgraves of Thuringia, of Lower and Higher Alsace, the only three who were princes of the empire. Brande and Coz.

landgraviate (land-grā'vi-āt), n. [< landgrave + -iate.] The territory held by a landgrave, or his office, jurisdiction, or authority.

landmalet (land'mäl), n. [< land + *male*² = malet.] A reserved rent or annual sum of money charged upon a piece of land by the chief lord of the fee or a subsequent mesne owner. Haltiwell.

landman (land'man), n.; pl. landmen (-men). [< ME. landman, < AS. landmann (= D. landman = MHG. lantman, G. landmann, a native of the country, = Dan. landmand, a farmer), < land, land, country, + mann, man.] 1. A man who lives or serves on land: opposed to seaman.—2. In Eng. law, a tenant or occupant of land; a terre-tenant.—3. A farmer or countryman. [Scotch.]—4. A landowner. [Scotch.]

Bot kirk-mennis cursit substance semis sweet Till land-men, with that leud burd-lyme are kyttit.

Bannatyne, Poems, p. 199.

landmark (land'märk), n. [*< ME. landmark, < AS. landmearc, also land-gemirec, land-gemyrce (= Dan. landemærke), the boundary of a country, < land, land, + mearc, mark; see *mark*¹.] 1. A boundary-mark to a tract of land; one of the fixed objects used to designate the limits of a farm, town, or other piece of territory, as monumental stones, marked trees, or ditches.

Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark.

Deut. xix. 14.

Virtues and vices have not, in all their instances, a great landmark set between them, like warlike nations separate by prodigious walls, vast seas, and portentous hills.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 9.

2. Any specific or prominent object marking a locality or historically associated with a locality; a hill, tree, house, or other feature of a landscape that may serve as a guide; especially, some object on land by which a locality may be recognized by persons at sea.

There are no landmarks in space; one portion of space is exactly like every other portion, so that we cannot tell where we are. Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, art. iii.

The gray mass of building crowning the little promontory is the only landmark seen above the green garden-land.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 48.

3. Figuratively, a distinguishing characteristic, variation, or event; that which marks a turning-point; something that serves to distinguish a particular period of time or point in progress or transition: as, the landmarks of science or history.

The close of the Crimean War is a great landmark in the reign of Queen Victoria.

J. McCarthy, Hist. Own Times, xxix.

land-marker (land'märk'kér), n. An agricultural machine for marking out rows for planting. E. H. Knight.

land-matet, n. One who in harvest-time reaps with another on the same ridge of ground or land. Blount. [Prov. Eng.] land-measure (land'mezh'ūr), n. 1. Measurement of land.—2. A denomination of square measure used in the mensuration of land. Land-measures are either squares of linear units, as the are; or are fixed from the amount which can be plowed or otherwise attended to in a day, as the acre; or from the amount necessary to sow a measure of seed, as the cahizada; or from the amount of yield, as the misura; or from the amount necessary for a house or farm, as the quarter-section. The table of ordinary English land-measures (used also in the United States and the British colonies) is as follows:

Acres.	Roods.	Square Perches.	Square Yards.	Square Feet.	Square Meters.
1 = 4	= 160	= 4840	= 43560	= 4046.9
1 = 40	= 1210	= 10890	= 1011.7
1 = 1	= 30¼	= 272¼	= 25.29
1 = 1	= 9	= 8.361
1 = 1	= 1	= 0.09290

land-measurer (land'mezh'ūr-ēr), n. A person whose employment is to ascertain by measurement and computation the superficial extent of portions of land, as fields, farms, etc.

land-measuring (land'mezh'ūr-ing), n. The art of determining by measurement and computation the superficial contents of pieces of land in acres, roods, etc. It is properly a subordinate branch of land-surveying, but the terms are sometimes used synonymously. It depends upon the formula for the area of a triangle in terms of its three sides, a, b, c, which is land-office (land'of'is), n. See land office, under *land*¹.

$$\frac{1}{4}\sqrt{(a+b+c)(a+b-c)(b+c-a)(c+a-b)}$$

Landolphia (lan-dol'fi-ŷ), n. [NL. (Palisot de Beauvois, 1804): after Capt. Landolph, who commanded the expedition to Oware (Wari? Guinea), where the plants were discovered.] A genus of tropical Old World climbing shrubs, of the natural order Apocynaceæ and tribe Carisseæ. The stamens are inserted near the base of the corolla-tube; the corolla-lobes are narrow; the fruit is a large berry; the leaves are opposite and veiny; the flowers are generally large and white or yellowish, in terminal cymes; and the peduncles are produced into tendrils. Seventeen species have been reported from tropical and subtropical South Africa and Madagascar, possibly one from Guiana. The genus has importance as a rubber-plant, L. florida producing Mbungu rubber and L. kurki Matere rubber. The former of these species bears a sour fruit, which is eaten by the natives of the west coast of Africa, under the name of aboki. See india-rubber.

land-otter (land'ot'ēr), n. Any ordinary otter of the subfamily Lutrinæ, inhabiting rivers and lakes, as distinguished from the sea-otter, Enhydris marina.

landowner (land'ō'nēr), n. An owner or proprietor of land.

landownership (land'ō'nēr-ship), n. [< landowner + -ship.] The state of being an owner of land; proprietorship of land.

But throughout France diversities of climate, landownership, and land tenure have left their mark.

Edinburgh Rev., CLXVI. 280.

land-owning (land'ō'ning), a. Holding or possessing landed estates; pertaining to landowners: as, the land-owning class.

land-parer (land'pār'ēr), n. A form of plow used to cut sods and turfs at a fixed depth below the surface. E. H. Knight.

land-pike (land'pik), n. An American urodele batrachian, as a menopome, hellbender, or axolotl; one of the creatures commonly described as "fish with legs." See cut under hellbender.

land-pilot (land'pī'lōt), n. A guide in a journey by land. [Rare.]

To find out that, good shepherd, I suppose,
In such a scant allowance of star-light,
Would overtask the best land-pilot's art.

Milton, Comus, l. 309.

land-pirate (land'pī'rāt), n. 1. A highway robber.—2. One of a class of men in seaports who live by cheating or robbing sailors.

land-plaster (land'plās'tēr), n. Rock-gypsum ground to a powder for use as a fertilizer.

land-poor (land'pōr), a. Poor or in need of ready money while owning or holding much unremunerative land; especially, poor because of the taxes and other maintenance charges against such land.

land-rail (land'rāl), n. The corn-crake, Crex pratensis; distinguished from water-rail.

land-raker, n. A vagabond; a landloper.

I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no long-staff, six-penny strikers.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 81.

landreeve (land'rēv), n. A subordinate officer on an estate who acts as an assistant to the land-steward.

land-rent (land'rēt), n. Payment for the use of land.

land-roll (land'rōl), n. In agri., a heavy roller used for crushing clods and rendering the earth friable and smooth; a clod-crusher.

Landry's paralysis. See paralysis.

landscape (land'skāp), n. [An altered form of the earlier landskip (rarely lantschip, after the D. form; no ME. form landship* appears); AS. landsceipe, also landsceap (= OS. landskepi = D. landschap = MLG. lantschap = OHG. lantscaf, lantschaft, MHG. lantschaft, G. landschaft = Icel. landskapr, landsskapr = Sw. landskap = Dan. landskab, a region, district, a province, in D. also landscape, whence the mod. E. sense and form), < land, land, + -scape = E. -ship: see land¹ and -ship. The change was appar. due to artistic associations with Holland in the 17th century.] 1. A view or prospect of rural scenery, more or less extensive, such as is comprehended within the scope or range of vision from a single point of view. See also landskip.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight.
Gray, Elegy.

2. A picture representing a view or prospect of rural or natural inland scenery as it appears within the range of vision from a single point of view; also, such pictures collectively, as distinguished especially from marine and architectural pictures and from portraits.—3. A compendious view or manifestation; an epitome; a compend. (Compare quotation from Bishop Haeket under landskip.)

That landscape of iniquity, that sink of sin, and that compendium of baseness, who now calls himself our Protector.
Address sent by the Anabaptists to the King (1658), in Clarendon's Great Rebellion, xv.

Landscape-gardening, the art of laying out grounds and arranging trees, shrubbery, borders, paths, fountains, etc., so as to produce picturesque effects.—Landscape-painter, a painter of landscapes or rural scenery.—Landscape-painting, the art of representing natural scenery by painting.—Syn. 1. Prospect, Scene, etc. See view, n.

landscape (land'skăp), v. t.; pret. and pp. landscaped, ppr. landscaping. [landscape, n.] To represent or delineate in landscape. [Rare.]

As weary traveller that climbs a hill,
Looks back, sits down, and oft, if hand have skill,
Landscape the vale with pencil.

Holiday, Service of the World, Pref.

landscape-mirror (land'skăp-mir'or), n. In art, a mirror used to condense a landscape or view, and thus facilitate its presentation in perspective; a Claude Lorrain glass.

landscapist (land'skă-pist), n. [landscape + -ist.] A landscape-painter.

The work of the landscapist is to convey a speedy impression to the onlooker of some beautiful or truthful natural scene.
W. Sharp, D. G. Rossetti, p. 57.

land-scrip (land'skrip), n. In the United States, negotiable paper issued by government, in pursuance of legislative donations, to individuals, companies, or communities, in reward for public services, or for the promotion of education or useful enterprises, entitling the holders to the possession of specified quantities of public land; also, similar paper issued by corporate bodies holding such donations.

land-scurvy (land'skër'vi), n. See scurvy.
land-shark (land'shärk), n. 1. A person who subsists by cheating or robbing sailors on shore; a land-pirate.

Can't trust these landsharks; they'll plunder even the rings off a corpa's fingers.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, iv.
2. A land-grabber; one who seizes upon land by force or chicanery.

There will be evasion of our [land] laws by native and foreign land-sharks.
The American, VIII. 68.

land-shell (land'shel), n. A shell of a terrestrial mollusk, as of any pulmonate gastropod.

landshut (land'shut), n. A land-flood. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] land-sick (land'sik), a. 1. Sick for sight of the land.—2. Affected by proximity to land, as a ship; not moving freely from being too near the land or just released from an anchorage.

A land-sick ship. . . . She knows the land is under the lee, sir, and she won't go any more to windward.
H. Melville, Typee, i.

land-side (land'sid), n. The flat side of a plow, which presses against the unplowed land.

landskip (land'skip), n. Same as landscape. [Obsolete or archaic.]

In this Man's study I was much taken with the draught of a Landskip on a piece of Paper, methoughts Masterly done.
Sir H. Wotton, To Lord Bacon, Requies, p. 300.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landskip round it measures,
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 70.

Many a famous man and woman, town
And landskip, have I heard of.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

landsknecht (länts'knecht), n. See lansquenet.
land-slater (land'slä'tër), n. A terrestrial isopod; a wood-louse or sowbug. A common land-slater is Oniscus asellus.

land-slide (land'slid), n. A falling or sliding down of a mass of soil, detritus, or rock on a mountain-side. The less destructive land-slides occur when gravel, sand, and other detrital material resting on a slope become so permeated with water that they can no longer resist the action of gravity. The more destructive land-slides are generally due to the slipping of a part of the solid rock of the mountain, in consequence of the softening of some more permeable layer in a mass of which the strata have a suitable inclination. Some such land-slides have been appalling in their results; as, for instance, that which took place at Plura, north of Lake Como, in 1618, by which many persons perished, and stately buildings were buried to a depth of 100 feet or more. The falling of part of the eminence called Cape Diamond in Quebec in 1889 destroyed many buildings and many lives. The word land-slip is occasionally used for land-slide, as also the term rock-avalanche. Also called earth-fall.

He will get himself . . . slain by a land-slide, like the agricultural King Onund.
Emerson, Eng. Traits, iv.

land-slip (land'slip), n. Same as land-slide.

Like some great landslip, tree by tree,
The country-side descended.
Tennyson, Amphion.

landsmán (landz'man), n.; pl. landsmén (-men). [= D. landsman = G. landsmann = Dan. landsmænd = Sw. landsmän; as lund's, poss. of lund, + man. Cf. landman.] 1. A man of the same land or country; a fellow-countryman. [Rare.]

Stand by me, countryman, . . . for the love of Scotland and Saint Andrew! I am innocent—I am your own native landsmán.
Scott, Quentin Durward, vi.

2. One who lives on the land; one who has had little or no experience of the sea.

There is not so helpless and pitiable an object in the world as a landsmán beginning a sailor's life.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 3.

land-snail (land'snál), n. Any snail of the family Helicidae.

land-spout (land'spout), n. A heavy fall of water occurring on land, generally during a tornado or thunder-storm, and presenting the appearance of a waterspout.

land-spring (land'spring), n. In England, water lying near the surface, which can easily be reached by shallow wells. The wells become exhausted after a short drought, and after heavy rains sometimes reach the surface and overflow. Hence the name is occasionally applied to intermittent springs, especially such as characterize the chalk districts of England.

All the shallow surface springs, from ten to twenty feet deep, are produced by water which has fallen on and passed through this gravel down to the top of the London clay, on the irregular surface of which it is held up. These are called land-springs, and they constituted, formerly, a principal source of supply to London.
Prestwich, The Water-bearing Strata of London, p. 36.

land-steward (land'stü'jörd), n. A person who has the care of a landed estate.

Landsting (läns'ting), n. [Dan., < lands, poss. of land, land, + thing, parliament.] The upper house of the Danish Rigsdag or parliament. It consists of 66 members, of whom 12 are appointed for life by the crown, and the others are elected for 8 years, not directly, but by delegates in each of the 64 electoral districts, chosen by those having the necessary property qualification.

landstrait (land'strät), n. A narrow strip of land.

landsturm (länt'störm), n. [G., a calling out of the militia, a general call to arms, hence the force so summoned, < land, land, country, + sturm, storm, alarm, = E. storm.] 1. In Germany, Switzerland, etc., a general levy in time of war.—2. The force so called out, or subject to call. In Germany it includes all males between the ages of 17 and 45 who are capable of bearing arms and are not already enrolled or serving in some branch of the army or navy. It is divided into two classes: the first, organized in 203 battalions, comprises all able-bodied men not already in the army or navy up to the age of 39; the second class includes all others up to the age of 45. In Austria the landsturm consists of men who have passed the landwehr and are bound to this service further for 10 years. Men who have served as officers in the regular army or the landwehr are liable for service in the landsturm also up to the age of 60. The landsturm of Switzerland comprises every male citizen between the ages of 17 and 50 not otherwise serving in the army. A landsturm is never expected to cross the frontier, and is called on only in cases of emergency.

Landtag (länt'täh), n. [G., < land, land, country, + tag, diet, day, = E. day.] In Germany, the legislature of a country; a territorial diet; now, specifically, one of the parliaments of the countries constituting the German empire, as Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, etc., and of some of the crownlands of Austria-Hungary, as Moravia and Bohemia. See Reichstag.

land-tax (land'taks), n. A tax assessed upon landed property.

land-tie (land'ti), n. A tie-rod used to secure a facing-wall to a bank.

land-tortoise (land'tör'tis), n. A chelonian of terrestrial habits; a testudine. Also land-turtle.

land-turn (land'törn), n. Naut., a land-breeze.

land-turtle (land'tër'tl), n. A land-tortoise; especially, in the United States, the common box-turtle, Cistudo carolina. See cut under Cistudo.

land-urchin (land'ër'chin), n. A popular name of the hedgehog; as if opposed to sea-urchin.

land-vine (land'vin), n. A native vine. Baret.

land-waiter (land'wä'tër), n. Same as coast-waiter.

Give a guinea to a knavish land-waiter, and he shall connive at the merchant for cheating the queen of a hundred.
Swift, Examiner.

landward, landwards (land'wärd, -wärdz), adv. [= D. landwaarts = MLG. landwert, landewerdes, landweert = G. landwärts = Dan. landverts; as land¹ + -ward, -wards.] Toward the land.

landward (land'wärd), a. [landward, adv.] 1. Lying toward the land, toward the interior, or away from the sea-coast.

Brown strengthened with sand-bags and earthworks the weak landward bastion of the fort.
N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 80.

2. Situated in, forming part of, or characteristic of the country, as opposed to the town; rural. [Scotch.]

I am wearied w/ Mysie's pastry and nonsense—Ye ken landward dainties aye pleased me best, Marion—and landward lassies too.
Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xii.

landwards, adv. See landward.

land-warrant (land'wor'ant), n. In the United States, a transferable government certificate entitling its holder to the possession of a specified quantity of public land.

land-wash (land'wash), n. The line of high tide along a beach or shore; also, the drift which collects there.

The kegs of kerosene oil . . . were also picked up in the land-wash on the western side of Bacalan island.
Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, XXVII.

landwehr (länt'vär), n. [G. (MHG. lantwe = MLG. lantweere = D. landweeer = OFries. landwerc; cf. equiv. Icel. landvörn = Sw. landvärn = Dan. landeværn), < land, = E. land¹, country, + wehr, defense, < wehren, defend, = AS. werian, defend; see weare.] In Germany, Austria, Switzerland, etc., that part of the organized national forces of which continuous service is not required except in time of war. The landwehr corresponds indirectly to the militia of Great Britain and the United States. In Germany it consists of men who have served in both the regular army and the reserves. It possesses a complete military organization, but is not called out in time of peace, unless at intervals for practice. In time of war or other national danger the landwehr is summoned in two levies: first, those from 27 to 32 years old, who take the place of the reserves; second, those from 32 to 39, who are assigned to garrison duty. The time of service in the landwehr is fixed at 5 years in the first levy, and until the age of 39 in the second levy. The landwehr of Austria comprises those who have served 3 years with the colors and 7 in the reserve, the time of service in the landwehr being fixed at 2 years. The Swiss landwehr comprises all men capable of bearing arms from the age of 32 to 44. The term landwehr is often applied to bodies of militia similarly constituted in other countries: as, the Bulgarian or Serbian landwehr.

land-wind (land'wind), n. A wind blowing from the land.

Three days or more seaward he bore,
Then, alas! the land-wind failed.
Longfellow, Sir Humphrey Gilbert.

landworker (land'wër'kër), n. One who tills the ground; a farmer or farm-laborer.

Only the tradesworkers and the landworkers are specially considered.
F. H. Stoddard, Andover Rev., VIII. 154.

lane¹ (län), n. [ME. lane, lone, < AS. lan = OFries. lanu, loua, East Fries. lone, North Fries. lanu, loua, a lane, = MD. laen, D. laan, a lane, alley, avenue; cf. Icel. lön (pl. lanar, mod. lanir), a small oblong hayrick, mod. a row of houses.]

1. A narrow way or passage; a path or passageway between inclosing lines, as of buildings, hedges, fences, trees, or persons; an extended alley.

And when thei wende haue ben in the streight lane, thei wente oute of her weye, for thei fonde on the left side an olde wey that was moche and grene.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), ff. 351.

He [Chatham] was then led into the house, . . . all the lords standing up out of respect, and making a lane for him to pass to the earls' bench.
Belsham, Hist. Eng., VI. 350.

The leafy lanes behind the down.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2. A narrow and well-defined track; a fixed or defined line of passage, as a navigable opening between fields of ice, a fixed course at sea, etc.

How he bestir'd him! what a lane he made,
And through their fiery bullets thrust securely.
Fletcher (and Massinger?), Lovers' Progress, l. 2.

From the illumined hall
Long lanes of splendour slanted o'er a press
Of snowy shoulders. Tennyson, Princess, iv.

We were . . . driven to shore, and anchored behind some enormous floes, where we very patiently watched a large lane of open water, which slowly made from the south after the flowing tide set in.
A. W. Greeley, Arctic Service, p. 103.

3. The throat: more usually called the red lane. [Vulgar.]

M. Mumb. And sweete malte maketh loly good ale for the nones;
Tib Talk. Whiche will slide downe the lane without any bones.
Udall, Rolister Dolister, i. 3.

O butter'd egg, best eaten with a spoon,
I bid your yeik glide down my throat's red lane.
Cotmar, Poetical Vagaries, p. 75.

A blind lane, a lane not open at both ends; a cul-de-sac.
Lurking in hernes and in lanes blynde.
Chaucer, Prolog. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 105.

Ocean lane, a fixed route or course of navigation pursued by a vessel or a line of vessels in crossing the ocean, etc.:
as, the ocean lane of the Cunard steamers. See lane-route.

lane² (lān), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of lone¹, for alone.—My, thy, his (or him) lane, myself, thyself, himself alone; our, your, their lanes or lane, ourselves, yourselves, themselves alone. These usages arose by corruption from the older expressions me lane, him lane.
[Scotch.]

I was walking by my lane,
Atween a water and a wa.
The Wee Wee Man (Child's Ballads, I. 126).

lane³, n. A Middle English form of loan¹.

laneret, n. Same as laner¹.

laneret, n. See laner¹.

lane-route (lān'rōt), n. A route laid out for ocean steamers, confined within narrow limits; specifically, a double route or course laid out across the North Atlantic ocean, from about Nantucket shoals to the entrance of the English channel. The northern track is used for westward-bound steamers and the southern one for steamers bound to the eastward. These routes follow approximately a great-circle course, and were first suggested, in order to diminish the risk of collisions, by Lieutenant M.
F. Maury, U. S. N., in 1855. Also called ocean lane or ocean- lane route.

lang (lang), a., adv., and v. A dialectal (Scotch) form of long¹.—To think lang, to become weary, especially in waiting.

He said, Think na lang, lassie, tho' I gang awa'.
George Halket (?), Logie o' Buchan.

langaha (lan-gā'hā), n. [Malagasy.] A Mada-gascare wood-snake, having the snout elongated by a flexible acute appendage, as the cock's-

Cock's-comb Langaha (Xiphorhynchus langaha).

comb langaha, Xiphorhynchus (or Dryophis) langaha, of the family Dryophidae. The snake is less than 3 feet long, the flat scaly proboscis about half an inch.

langbanite (lang'ban-it), n. [Långban, in Sweden, + *-ite*².] A mineral occurring in hexagonal prisms of an iron-black color and metallic luster. It contains silica and the oxides of antimony, manganese, and iron.

langel (lang'gl), v. t. [*ME. langelen, lanye- len, < lanyel, a hopple: see lanyel.] 1†. To bind together.

Langelyn or byynd to-geder, [L.] colligo [var. compedio].

of the same word.] 1†. A strap; thong; latchet

(of a shoe). Towneley Mysteries, p. 26.—2. A chain for hobbling a horse. Halliwel. [Prov.
Eng.]

langet² (lang'get), n. [D., thread lace; < OF.
languette, dim. of languie, tongue: see langet¹.]
A lace used in the modern costume of the women of Holland. It is stiffly starched in the head-dresses of which it forms part, and is sufficiently stout to bear washing and ironing.

langite (lang'it), n. [Named after Prof. Victor von Lang, a physicist of Vienna.] A basic sulphate of copper occurring in blue earthy crusts, less often in crystals, found in Cornwall, England.

lang-kale (lang'kāl), n. [= Dan. langkaal.]

1751.

langour, n. and v. An old form of langour.

langrager, n. Same as langrel.

langrelt, n. [Also langrage, langridge; origin obscure.] A particular kind of projectile formerly used at sea for tearing sails and rigging, and thus disabling an enemy's ship. It consisted of bolts, nails, and other pieces of iron fastened together.

langrett, n. [Origin obscure.] A die so loaded that certain numbers come up more readily and more frequently than others.

His langrets, with his hie men and his low,
Are ready with his pleasure is to throw.
Roulandis, Humors Ordinarie. (Halliwel.)

First you must know a langret, which is . . . a well favoured die, and acemeth good and square, yet it is forged longer upon the cater and trea than any other way, and therefore it is called a langret.

Art of Juggling (1612), C. 4. (Nares.)

langridget, n. Same as langrel.

langsat (lang'sat), n. See lansa.

Langsdorfia (langz-dōr'fi-ā), n. [NL. (Mar-tius, 1829), named after G. H. von Langsdorff, who traveled in South America and encouraged scientific research in Brazil.] A genus of monochlamydeous plants belonging to the natural order Balanophoreae, and type of the tribe Langs- dorfieae. It has dioecious or monoecious flowers, the perianth in the male flowers with 3 valvate lobes, the female flowers grown together below. These plants are thick, yellow, waxy herba with purplish scales and flowers.
The only species, L. hypogaea, is a native of tropical South America.

Langsdorfieæ (langz-dōr'fi-ē-ē), n. pl. [NL.
(Schott and Endlicher, 1832), < Langsdorfia +
-eæ.] A tribe of plants of the order Balanopho- reæ, consisting of the two genera Langsdorfia and Thouningia, characterized by dioecious or monoecious flowers, in which the perianth of the male flowers is 3-lobed or consists of 2 or 3 scales, and that of the female flowers is tubular. The anthers are 2-celled, and the ovary is 1-celled. They are natives of tropical America and tropical Africa.

lang-settle (lang'set'l), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of long-settle. See settle.

langshan (lang'shan), n. [Chin.] A breed of the domestic hen, of Chinese origin. It is of the Asiatic type, of uniform glossy-black plumage, and of about the weight of the cochin, but taller, less heavily feathered on the shanks, and with white instead of yellow skin. It is a much more prolific layer than the cochin, the eggs being brown, and its flesh is excellent for the table.

langspiel (lang'spēl), n. [Norw. langspel,
a harp of a long and narrow form, < lang, = E.
long¹, + spel, a musical instrument, music, play:
see spell².] A kind of harp used in the Shel-land Islands.

A knocking at the door of the mansion, with the sound of the Gue and the Langspiel, announced by their tinkling clime the arrival of fresh revellers. Scott, Pirate, xv.

langsyne (lang'sin'), n. [Sc. lang = E. long;
Se. syne = E. since.] Time long past; the days of long ago. See syne.

langsyner (lang'si'nēr), n. [langsyne + -er¹.]
A person who lived long ago. [Scotch.]

langteraloot, n. Same as lanterloo.

language¹ (lang'gwāj), n. [The u is a modern insertion (orig. not pronounced), after F. languie,
L. lingua; < ME. langage, < OF. langage, F. lan-gage = Pr. leuagatge, lengatge, lengage = Sp.

lenguaje = Pg. linguagem, linguagem = It. linguag-*gio, < ML. as if linguaticum, language (the reg.
L. and ML. word being lingua), < L. lingua (> It.
lingua = Sp. lengua = Pg. lingua, lingua = F. languie), the tongue, a tongue, language, = E. tongue: see tongue.] 1. The whole body of uttered signs employed and understood by a given community as expression of its thoughts; the aggregate of words, and of methods of their combination into sentences, used in a community for communication and record and for carrying on the processes of thought: as, the English lan- guage; the Greek language. The languages of the world, each of them unintelligible to the speakers of any other, are very numerous, rather exceeding than falling short of a thousand. Of these, each individual (without reference to his race) acquires for his first language or "mother-tongue" that one which he hears used by those about him in childhood, as he may later learn some other, even to the substitution of it for his "mother-tongue" and oblivion of the latter. Many languages are related with one another—that is, there is such correspondence in their words and forms as shows them to have descended from a common ancestor, or to have reached their present form by gradual divergent alteration of the same original language, since, by the action of its speakers, every living language is undergoing constant change. A body of languages thus related is called a family or stock; and the classification of all human tongues into families is one of the most important results of the study of language. Families then are divided into subordinate divisions called groups, branches, subbranches, or the like. Examples of families are the Aryan or Indo-European, the Semitic, and so on. (See the various names.) With reference to their relationship to a larger class, languages are also called dialects: thus, Yorkshire and Scotch are dia- lects of English; English and Dutch are Low-German dia- lects; German, Slavonic, Celtic, etc., are Aryan dialects.
(See dialect.) Languages differ not only in material, but also in regard to structure, or the apparatus of forms, connections, auxiliaries, etc., by which the modifications and relations of ideas are expressed. Some are more synthetic, some more analytic; some are isolating, or destitute of formal distinctions, whether of parts of speech or of inflections; some are agglutinative, or have words made up of parts rather loosely joined together; some have their words, or part of them, more completely integrated, to the complete disguise of their original constituents, and even, in greater or less part, the substitution of an internal change (as in sing, sang, sung, song) for an external (as in love, loved, loving, lover). This characteristic is called inflective, and is seen in highest degree in two of the families (Aryan and Semitic) mentioned above.
(See agglutinative.) Languages are usually designated by an adjective formed (in -ish, -an, -ese, -ic, -inel, etc., or without any termination) from the name of the country or people (such adjective used alone, as a noun, being the particular name of the language), as English, Spanish, Scottish, Scotch, Dutch, Welsh, French, Italian, Russian, Chinese, Siamese, Gaelic, Arabic, Latin, Greek, etc.; but the name is often of other origin or formation, as Sanskrit, Prakrit.

In that land of Caldee, thei han here propre Langages, and here propre Lettra. Mandeville, Travels, p. 153.

After a speech is fully fashioned to the common understanding, & accepted by consent of a whole cuntry & nation, it is called a language.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 120.

2. Power of expression by utterance; the capacities and impulses that lead to the production and use of languages; uttered expression; human speech considered as a whole: as, language is the peculiar possession of man.

You taught me language; and my profit on 't
Is, I know how to curse. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 363.

The ends of language in our discourse with others being chiefly these three: First, to make known one man's thoughts or ideas to another; secondly, to do it with as much ease and quickness as is possible; and thirdly, thereby to convey the knowledge of things. Language is either abused or deficient, when it fails in any of these three.

Locke, Human Understanding, III. x. 23.

3. The words or expressions appropriate to or especially employed in any branch of knowledge or particular condition of life: as, the language of chemistry; the language of common life.—4. The manner of expression, either by speech or writing; style.

With good ensample and faire language
His fadir taught him weel and faire.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 48.

Their language ample, as their manners meek,
No shining ornaments have they to seek.
Cowper, Hope, i. 764.

Hence—5. The inarticulate sounds by which irrational animals express their feelings and wants: as, the language of birds.

Choughs' language, gbbble enough, and good enough.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 1. 22.

6. The expression of thought in any way, articulate or inarticulate, conventional or unconventional: as, the language of signs; the lan- guage of the eyes; the language of flowers.

Fie, fie upon her!
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
Nay, her foot speaks. Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 55.

To him who in the love of Nature holds Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
A various language. Bryant, Thanatopsis.

The word language, in its most limited application, is restricted to human articulate speech; but in its metaphorical use it embraces every mode of communication by which facts can be made known, sentiments or passions expressed, or emotions excited.

G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., ii.

77. A people or race, as distinguished by its speech; a tribe.

All the people, the nations, and the languages, fell down and worshipped the golden image. Dan. iii. 7.

Ten men . . . out of all languages of the nations . . . shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew. Zech. viii. 23.

Dead language, a language which is no longer spoken or in vernacular use by a people as the traditional and native means of expression. Some dead languages have disappeared, leaving no representatives, as the Etruscan and Egyptian; others have been succeeded by tongues descended from them and more or less resembling them, as Latin and Anglo-Saxon; some, by an artificial process of instruction, are still learned and used for writing and speaking, like Latin, Sanskrit, and Hebrew.

The languages, especially the dead, The sciences, and all the most abstruse. Byron, Don Juan, l. 40.

Flash language. See flash. — King's language. See kingl. — Law language. See lawl. — Living language, a language still spoken or in vernacular use by a people.

Now the Coptic is no more a living language, nor is it understood by any, except that some of the priests understand a little of their liturgy, tho' many of them cannot so much as read it, but their long offices by rote. Pococke, Description of the East, I. 245.

The bow-wow and pooh-pooh theories of language, nicknames applied to the theories which recognize, respectively, imitations of natural cries and interjections as the first beginnings of language. = Syn. 1. Language, Dialect, Idiom, Diction, Vocabulary; tongue. The first five words are arranged in a descending scale. In common use it is taken for granted that the dialects under one language are enough alike to be reasonably well understood by all who are of that language, while different languages are so unlike that special study is needed to enable one to understand a language that is not his own; but this is not an essential difference. Idiom, literally a personal peculiarity, is in this connection a form of a language somewhat less marked than a dialect; as, the New England idiom. Diction is often used for the set of words or vocabulary belonging to a person or class, making him or it differ in speech from others; but both this and idiom are often expressed by dialect. (See diction.) Vocabulary means the total of the words used by a person, class, etc., considered as a list or number of different words; as, he has a large vocabulary. In this respect it differs from another meaning of idiom — that is, any peculiar combination of words used by a person, community, nation, etc.

Every class [in the community], however constituted, has its dialectic differences; . . . each trade, calling, profession, department of study, has its technical vocabulary. . . The highly cultivated have a diction which is not in all its parts at the command of the vulgar. . . We must notice . . . the meaning of the terms language and dialect in their relation to one another. They are only two names for the same thing, as looked at from different points of view. Any body of expressions used by a community, however limited and humble, for the purpose of communication and as the instrument of thought, is a language. . . On the other hand, there is no tongue in the world to which we should not with perfect freedom and perfect propriety apply the name of dialect when considering it as one of a body of related forms of speech. Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., pp. 155, 176-8.

language¹ (lang'gwāj), v. t.; pret. and pp. language^d, ppr. language^g. [< language¹, n.] To express in language. [Rare.]

Laniarius (lā-nī-ā-ri-us), n. [NL., < L. lanarius, pertaining to a butcher: see lanitary.] A genus of party-colored malaconotide shrikes peculiar to Africa. L. barbarus and L. cruentus are typical species.

lanitary (lā-nī-ā-ri), a. and n. [< L. lanarius, pertaining to a butcher, neut. lanitarium, a butcher's stall, < lanius, a butcher, < laniare, tear, rend: see laniate.] I. a. Fitted for lacerating or tearing flesh; laniariform: specifically applied to canine teeth when well developed.

II. n.; pl. laniaries (-riz). 1. A butcher's stall; shambles. [Rare.]—2. A canine tooth when laniariform.

laniate (lā-nī-āt), v. t.; pret. and pp. laniated, ppr. laniating. [< L. laniatas, pp. of laniare, tear, lacerate. Cf. lancinate.] To tear in pieces; rend; lacerate. [Rare.]

laniation (lā-nī-ā'shōn), n. [< L. laniatio (n.), a tearing, < laniare, tear: see laniate.] A tearing in pieces. Coles, 1717. [Rare.]

Lanidae, Laninae (lan'i-dē, lā-nī'nē), n. pl. [NL.] See Laniidae, Laninae.

lanier†, n. See lanner.

lanier† (lā-ni'er), n. [F.: see lanner.] Same as lanner.

laniferous (lā-nif'e-rus), a. [= F. lanifère = Sp. lanifero = Pg. It. lanifero, < L. lanifer, wool-bearing, < lana, wool, + ferre = E. bear†.] Bearing or producing wool. [Rare.]

lanifical† (lā-nif'i-kal), a. [As lanific-ous + -al.] Working in wool.

lanifical† (lan'i-fis), n. [= OF. lanifice = Sp. Pg. It. lanificio, < L. lanificium, the working of wool, < lanificus, wool-working: see lanificous.] A woolen fabric; anything made of wool.

The moath breedeth upon cloth, and other lanifices, especially if they be laid up dankish or wet.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 690.

lanificoust (lā-nif'i-kus), a. [= OF. lanifique = It. lanificio, < L. lanificus, wool-working, < lana, wool, + facere, make: see -fic.] Working wool. Bailey, 1731.

laniform (lan'i-fōrm), a. [< L. lana, wool, + forma, form.] Consisting of fibers like wool.

lanigerous (lā-nij'e-rus), a. [= F. lanigère = Sp. lanigero = Pg. It. lanigero, < L. laniger, wool-bearing, fleecy, < lana, wool, + gerere, bear.] 1. Bearing or producing wool.

No other labor did this holy pair,
Clothed and supported from the lavish store
Which crowds lanigerous brought with daily care.
Lovell, An Oriental Apologue.

2. In entom.: (a) Woolly; thickly covered with fine curled hairs resembling wool. (b) Having the appearance of wool: as, lanigerous hairs. (Grote. [The last meaning is of doubtful propriety.]

Laniidae (lā-nī-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lanius + -idae.] A large family of denti-rostral lamini-plantar acromyodian birds of the order Passeres; the shrikes. They are characterized by the combination of comparatively weak and strictly passerine feet with a hooked and notched or toothed bill of semiraptorial efficiency. The tarsi are not booted; the wing has 10 primaries; the nostrils are usually concealed by antrorse plumules; and the plumage generally is dense. There are about 200 species, of numerous genera and several subfamilies, inhabiting nearly all parts of the world. The name has been used with great latitude, covering many shrike-like birds now located apart, as in Artamidae, Dieruridae, and elsewhere. See drongo, swallow-shrike, wood-shrike. Also Laniadae, Lanidae.

laniform (lā-nī-i-fōrm), a. [< NL. Lanius, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Resembling a shrike; denti-rostral, as a bird; of or pertaining to the Laniiformes.

Laniiformes (lā-nī-i-fōr'mēz), n. pl. [NL., < Lanius, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Same as Dentirostrics, 2.

Laniinae (lā-nī-ā-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lanius + -inae.] The typical subfamily of Laniidae; the true shrikes or butcher-birds. The rounded wings and tail are of nearly equal lengths, the rictus is bristly, and the tarsi are scutellate outside as well as in front. See Lanius. Also Laniance, Laninae.

Lanio (lā-nī-ō), n. [NL., < LL. lanio, a butcher: see lanitary.] A genus of tanagers of the family Tanagridae, having a shrike-like bill with dentate upper mandible. There are several species, as L. aurantius; all are South American.

Lanius (lā-nī-us), n. [NL., < L. lanius, butcher: see lanitary.] A restricted genus of butcher-birds, of simple bluish-gray and white coloration, varied with black on the wings and tail; the gray shrikes. The term was formerly applied indiscriminately to laniform or denti-rostral birds, many of which do not even belong to Laniidae. L. excubitor is the common gray shrike of Europe; L. borealis is the great northern shrike or butcher-bird of North America; and L.

ludovicianus is the loggerhead of the southern United States. See also cut under butcher-bird.

Fiscal Shrike (Lanius or Ficus collaris).

ludovicianus is the loggerhead of the southern United States. See also cut under butcher-bird.

lank† (langk), a. [< ME. lank, < AS. hlanc, lank (applied to a wolf, and to a leather bottle). Cf. lan†.] 1. Meagerly slim; attenuated; lean; gaunt: as, a tall, lank man.

She [Diana] . . . had unlaste
Her silver buskins from her nimble thigh,
And her lanck loynes ungirt.

Spenser, F. Q., III. vi. 18.

Meagre and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone. Swift.

2. Loose or lax and yielding readily to pressure; not distended; shrunken; shriveled: as, a lank sack or purse.

The clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., l. 3. 132.

3. Straight and flat, as hair.

If any Gentlemens or Childrens Hair be never so Lank, she makes it Curle in a little time like a Periwig.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne,
[I. 147.]

His visage was meagre, his hair lank and thin.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, III. 8.

4†. Languid; drooping.

Who, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head.
Milton, Comus, l. 836.

lank† (langk), n. [< lank†, a.] Lankness; leanness. [Probably used in the following quotation for its agreement in sound with bank.] He [S. Daniel] had neither a bank of wealth or lank of want; living in a competent condition.

Fuller, Worthless, III. 104.

lank† (langk), v. i. [< lank, a.] To grow or become lank or thin. [Rare.]

All this . . .
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not. Shak., A. and C., l. 4. 71.

lank† (langk), n. [Also lank; < ME. lanke, lonke, the groin, = MD. lancke = OHG. hlanca, lanca, lanca, lanca, MHG. lanke, lanche, loin, flank, side; hence (< OHG. hlanca, with change of Teut. hl- to Rom. fl-) ML. flancus (> It. fianco = Sp. Pg. fianco = Pr. fianc = F. fianc, loin, flank, side, > E. flank: see flank†); prob. from the adj. lank†, q. v.] The groin. [Prov. Eng.]

lankly (langk'li), adv. In a lank manner; straightly; stiffly.

lankness (langk'nes), n. The state or quality of being lank or shrunken; slenderness; gauntness; leanness.

lankot (lang'kot), n. A dialectal form of langet†.

lanky (lang'ki), a. [< lank†, a., + -y†.] Somewhat lank; tending to or characteristic of lankness or leanness.

Scarce one of us domestic birds but imitates the lanky pavonine strut and shrill genteel scream.

Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xx.

Sometimes he would absurdly introduce into his conversation scraps from Sam Lawson's vocabulary, with flashes of mimicry of his shambling gait, and the lanky droop of his hands.

H. E. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 257.

lannard† (lan'ard), n. [Var. of lanner, with term. conformed to that of haggard†.] Same as lanner.

That young lannard

Whom you have such a mind to, if you can whistle her
To come to fist, make trial.

Middleton, Spanish Gypsy, iv. 3.

lanner (lan'er), n. [< OF. lanier, lanier, laner, lanier, F. lanier = Pr. lanier = It. laniere, a kind of hawk, < L. lanarius, pertaining to a butcher: see lanitary.] A kind of falcon. (a) In ornith., Falco lanarius (also called F. feldbergi), a noble hawk of southern and central Europe and the countries bordering Lanner (Falco lanarius).

on the Mediterranean, from 16 to 18 inches long. Some related species share the name, as F. saker of southeastern Europe and most of Asia, called F. lanarius by many writers. The American lanner is F. mexicanus or polyagrus. (b) In falconry, the female of the above, which is larger than the male. See lanneret.

lannerd† (lan'erd), n. Same as lannard, lanner.

lanneret

lanneret (lan'er-et), n. [Also laucet; < OF. laneret, lanieret, F. lanceret, the male of the lanner, dim. (the male hawk being smaller than the female) of lanier, the lanner: see lanner.] The male of Falco lanarius and some related falcons. See lanner.

lanneroid (lan'er-oid), a. [lanner + -oid.] Like a lanner: specifically applied to an African falcon, Falco cervicalis or F. biarmicus.

lannier (lan'ier), n. [Also lanier; early mod. E. lanier; < ME. lanzer, lanere, laner, laner, < OF. laniere, F. lanière, a thong, strap, orig. a thong for a lanner, a hawk so called, < lanier, a lanner: see lanner. Hence lanyard, laniard.] A leather thong or strap. Specifically—(a) A whip-lash. (b) A gudge.

Gigging of scoloides, with lanieres lasynges.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1646.

lannock (lan'ok), n. [Perhaps a corruption of lankot, a var. of langot, langet.] A long narrow piece of land. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lanolin (lan'ō-lin), n. [L. lana, wool, + oleum, oil, + -in².] A substance, consisting chiefly of cholesterolin, extracted from wool, used as a basis for ointments.

lanose (lā'nōs), a. [L. lanosus, woolly, < lana, wool.] Resembling wool. Cooke, Brit. Fungi, p. 786.

lansa, lanseh (lan'sā, -se), n. [E. Ind. name.] The berry of Lansium domesticum. Also langsat.

lansfordite (lanz'ford-it), n. [Lansford (see def.) + -ite².] A hydrous carbonate of magnesium occurring in stalaetic forms in a coalmine at Lansford in Pennsylvania.

Lansium (lan'si-um), n. [NL. (Rumpf, 1741), < lansa or lanseh, the East Indian name of the tree.] A genus of East Indian trees belonging to the order Meliaceae, tribe Trichiliceae, having the 5 petals imbricated, 10 anthers, a 3- to 5-celled ovary and berry, and ariled seeds. These trees have odd-pinnate leaves, small, axillary, pinnated or racemose flowers, and large yellow or red berries. There are 2, 3, or 4 species, according to different authors, inhabiting the mountains of India and of the Indian archipelago. L. domesticum is cultivated for its yellow berry, which contains within a bitter skin a pleasant subacid pulp. It is the lansa, lanseh, or langsat, and the berry is known as ayer-ayer.

lansket, n. [Origin obscure.] A word occurring only in the following passage, where it is supposed to mean a lattice or panel:

Petron. How know'st thou?

Jaques. I peep'd in

At a loose lansket. Fletcher, Tamer Tam'd, ll. 6.

lansquet (lans'ke-net), n. [F. lansquet, < G. lansknecht, a foot-soldier, < lands, gen. of land, land, + knecht, a boy, servant: see land and knight. Cf. lanee-knight.] 1. One of a class of mercenary foot-soldiers or pikemen who in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries formed a large proportion of both the German and French armies. They took their name from that of the class of German serfs who in war attended their knights on foot, fighting with light arms and without armor, from which class the first permanent infantry corps was formed by Maximilian I. at the end of the fifteenth century.

2. A game at cards. It is played by an unlimited number of persons against a banker, with one or more packs of cards. Bets laid on cards as they are dealt go to the banker or to the players according as these cards match with others considered as belonging to one side or the other. The game admits of much trickery.

lant¹ (lant), n. [Var. of lant².] Urine; especially, stale urine. Stale urine, or lant, has been much used as a detergent in wool-scouring on account of the ammonium carbonate it contains. Though still used, it has been largely supplanted by ammonia, sodium carbonate, etc.

The use of sulphurous acid, and of ammoniacal liquor in the form of lant or stale urine, is known (from drawings on the walls of Pompeii) to have been practised by the Romans. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 509.

lant¹ (lant), v. t. [lant¹, n.] To wet or mingle with urine.

lant² (lant), n. [Abbr. of lanterloo.] A contraction of lanterloo.

lant³ (lant), n. [A var. of lanee¹, lanee¹.] In ichth., the lance. [Cornwall, Eng.]

lant⁴. An obsolete preterit of lant¹.

Lantana (lan-tā'nā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus).] 1. A genus of gamopetalous plants of the natural order Verbenaceae, tribe Verbenecae, type of Endlicher's tribe and De Candolle's subtribe Lantaneae, characterized by a small, membranaceous, truncate, sinuose-dentate calyx, a corolla with 4 or 5 lobes, and a juicy drupe. Some 40 or 50 species are known, chiefly tropical or subtropical American, but a few are natives of Asia and Africa. They are mostly low shrubs, but sometimes climbing high, sometimes more herbs, with opposite toothed leaves often roughened, and dense spikes or heads of smilish red, orange, white, or variously colored flowers sessile in a, flower; b, flower cut longitudinally, showing pistil and two of the stamens; c, fruits.

the axis of bracts. Two of the tropical American species (L. trifolia and L. camara) have become extensively naturalized in the Old World. Many of the species are cultivated as greenhouse-plants and set out in summer, flowering freely till frost, the flowers and herbage being sometimes pleasantly odorous. Among the most common of these are L. camara, L. mixta, L. nivea, L. involucrata, and L. sellowiana. The flowers of most of these species change their color with age. In Jamaica the plants of this genus are called wild sage. Four species are found within the limits of the United States, chiefly in the southwest. L. macrophylla is employed in infusions as a stimulant, and L. pseudo-thea as a substitute for tea.

2. [l. e.] A plant of the genus Lantana.

Lantaneæ (lan-tā'nē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Lantana + -eæ.] A tribe of plants of the order Verbenaceae, founded on the genus Lantana, by De Candolle reduced to a subtribe, and now included in the tribe Verbenecae.

lantanium (lan-tā'ni-um), n. See lanthanum.
lantcha, lanchara (lan'chā, -chā-rā), n. [E. Ind.] A Malay boat having three masts and a bowsprit, in use especially in the eastern part of the Indian archipelago.

lanterloo (lan'tēr-lō), n. [Also lanetreloo, lanteraloo, lantrillou, etc.; < D. lanterlu, lanterloo. Cf. D. lanterfant, an idler.] A game of cards, now commonly called loo, sometimes lant. See loo².

Were she at her Parish Church, in the Height of her Devotion, should any Body in the Interim but stand at the Church Door and hold up the Knave of Clubs, she would take it to be a Challenge at Lantré Loo.

Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [l. 103.]

Lanterloo, lantrillou, or lanetreloo, a game in which the knave of clubs is the highest card.

A. Dobson, Selections from Steele, Notes, p. 450.

lantern (lan'tern), n. [Until recently also lanthorn, a popular spelling simulating horn (in supposed allusion to the transparent plates of horn which often formed the sides of lanterns); < ME. lanterne, < F. lanterne = Sp. Pg. It. lanterna, < L. lanterna, laterno, < Gr. λαμπτήρ, a stand or grate used in lighting, a torch, < λαμπειν, give light: see lamp¹.] 1. A case, generally transparent or translucent, inclosing a light and protecting it from the wind and rain, and either portable or fixed. The earliest form appears to have been a collapsible corrugated tube of some semi-transparent fabric inclosing a lamp or candle.

Ship's Lanterns. a, octagon lantern; b, masthead-lantern; c, signal-lantern.

This form survives in the Chinese paper lanterns. Lanterns have been made of horn, talc, mica, perforated metals, oiled fabrics, paper, and glass.

He [Hunger] buffeted the Brutener a-boute the chekes, That he loked lyk a lanterns al hus lyf after. Piers Plowman (C), ix. 174.

My natural Lanthorn, whose diaphanous side Can both transmit and safely keep the Light. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iv. 46.

All the way, quite through Hyde Park to the Queen's palace at Kensington, has lanterns for illuminating the road in the dark nights, for the Coaches. Thoresby, Diary, June 15, 1712.

At the watchman's lantern borrowing light, Finds a cold bed her only comfort left. Cowper, Task, ii. 654.

2. The glass casing surrounding the lamp of a lighthouse and forming the upper member of the structure.

lantern

Upon the shore there is an high Lanthorn, large enough at the top to contain about three score persons, which by night directeth the sailer into the entrance of the Bosphorus. Sandys, Travails, p. 31.

3. In arch., specifically, an upright skylight in the roof of a building. It is distinguished from an ordinary skylight in that it has vertical sides. Of this nature is the open tower often placed, especially in English church architecture, at the junction of the cross in a cruciform plan. Such a lantern has the whole or a considerable part of the interior open to view from below, and receives light from a range of windows extending entirely around it. The name is also applied to a more or less open construction on the top of a tower, or crowning a dome, although not serving to admit light to the interior; also to a tower. See cuts under dome and domelet.

Lantern.—Abbey Church of St. Ouen, Rouen, France; 14th and 15th centuries.

The most considerable object is the great abby and church, large and rich, built after the Gothic manner, having two spires and middle lantern at the west end all of stone. Evelyn, Diary, March 25, 1644.

Upon the cupola was to stand the lantern, that was to form the proper summit of the whole vast edifice, and on the proportions and design of which the effect of the dome itself would be greatly dependent. C. E. Norton, Church-building in Middle Ages, p. 282.

4. In the quadrant electrometer, the part of the case of the instrument which surrounds the mirror and suspension-fibers.—5. A device for inclosing fabrics in the process of dyeing, to fix the colors by the aid of steam.—6. A workmen's name for a short perforated core used in making hollow castings.

It must be modelled in loam, upon a piece of cast iron called a lantern, made expressly for this purpose. The lantern is a cylinder or a truncated hollow cone of cast iron, about half an inch thick, and differently shaped for every core. Ure, Dict., II. 479.

7. A kind of cog-wheel. See lantern-wheel.—8. (a) The whiff, a fish, which is semi-transparent when held up against the light. Doy. [Local, Eng.] (b) The Trigla obscura, a fish of the sub-family Trigline. Also called lantern-gurnard.

Astronomical lantern. See astronomical.—Blind lantern. See blind.—Bull's-eye lantern. See bull's-eye, 7.

—Chinese lantern, a collapsible hand-lantern of paper crimped or arranged in folds like the sides of a bellows or an accordion, used by the Chinese, Japanese, etc. These lanterns are either globular or cylindrical in shape, and are generally decorated with flowers or other designs, those intended for use as lanterns and not for mere ornament being also oiled, and provided with a short handle or staff for convenience in carrying. The streets of Chinese and Japanese cities being unlighted, it is necessary for those who move abroad after dark to be provided with lanterns.

Dark lantern, a hand-lantern having an opaque slide or cover permitting the light to be wholly or almost wholly obscured at pleasure.

I do walk Methinks like Gundo Faux, with my dark lanthorn, Stealing to set the town a-fire. Fletcher and Shirley, [Night-Walker, iii. 2.]

Feast of lanterns. See feast.—Fresnel lantern, a lantern in which the lamp or light is inclosed in a cylindrical glass globe of which the section approaches the form of the dioptric lens as perfected by Fresnel; or a lantern fitted with a Fresnel lens.—Lantern and candle-light, the old cry of the London bellman at night.

Doat roare, bulchin? doat roare! 't'ast a good roundviall voice to cry Lantherne and Candle-light. Dekker, Satromastix.

No more calling of lantherne and candle light. Heywood, Edward IV. [1626].

Lantern of Aristotle, or Aristotle's lantern, in zool., the highly developed complex dentary apparatus or oral skeleton and associate soft parts of a sea-urchin (Echinus). See the extract.

In the Echinidea the oral skeleton attains its highest development in the so-called Aristotle's lantern of the sea-

Dentary Apparatus or Oral Skeleton of a Sea-urchin (Echinus sp. Acantha), constituting Aristotle's Lantern. A, two of the five chief component parts apposed and viewed laterally. urchins. . . . The lantern consists of twenty principal pieces—five teeth, five alveoli, five rotulae, and five radii—of which the alveoli are again divisible into four pieces each, and the radii into two, making a total of forty pieces. . . . Besides the inter-alveolar muscles, . . . this complex apparatus has protractor, . . . oblique, . . . transverse, . . . and retractor muscles. . . . A similar but less complex oral skeleton exists in most Clypeastroda, but nothing of this kind has yet been discovered in the Spatangoida. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 492.

Lantern of the dead, in central and western France, a slender medieval tower of common occurrence in cemeteries, having apertures at the top where a light was displayed at night. A class of round towers in Ireland may have served a similar purpose.—Magic lantern, an optical instrument, first described by Kircher in 1646, by means of which small images are thrown on a white wall or screen in a dark room, magnified to any size at pleasure. It consists of a closed lantern or box, in which are placed a lamp and a concave mirror which reflects the light of the lamp through an adjustable tube in the side of the lantern. At the inner end of this tube is fixed a plano-convex lens and at the outer end a convex projecting lens. Between the two lenses are successively placed slips of glass bearing transparent photographs or paintings, which are thrown in a magnified form on the wall or screen opposite to the lantern.

Lantern of the Dead, Antigny, France. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. de l'Architecture.") lantern (lan'tern), v. t. [Formerly also lanthorn; < lantern, n.] 1. To furnish with a lantern; light as by means of a lantern: as, to lantern a lighthouse.

Were it midnight, I should walk
Self-lantern'd, saturate with submeans.

Southey, Nondescripts, iii.

2. To put to death by hanging to a lamp-post (F. lanterne): a frequent incident during the first French revolution.

lantern-bellows (lan'tern-bel'ōz), n. sing. and pl. A kind of bellows resembling in structure a collapsible paper or Chinese lantern. The action of drawing out or distending the bellows causes the air to rush in through a valve opening inwardly in the outer end, and the air is expelled in turn by compressing the bellows. Bellows of this form are often set up in pairs so as to work alternately and thus supply a continuous blast to a forge or furnace. The device is of great antiquity, and is still in common use in Egypt and the East.

lantern-carrier (lan'tern-kar'i-ēr), n. Same as lantern-fly.

lanterne (lan-tēr'), n. [F.: see lantern.] A long-handled copper ladle used to convey powder to the bottom of the bore of a mortar or other piece of ordnance. [Obsolent.]

lantern-fish (lan'tern-fish), n. The smooth sole. Hallivell. [Cornwall, Eng.]

lantern-flower (lan'tern-flou'ēr), n. A name of any ornamental species of Abutilon.

lantern-fly (lan'tern-flī), n. Any insect of the family Fulgoroidea, supposed to emit a strong light in the dark. Fulgora canadelaria is a well-known Honduras Lantern-fly (a species of Laternaria), reduced.

Chinese species, also called can-de-fly. The largest is the Brazilian lantern-fly, Laternaria phosphorea, some 3 inches long and 5 or 6 in expanse of wings, of rich and striking colors. Also called lantern-carrier.

lantern-gurnard (lan'tern-gēr'nārd), n. Same as lantern, 8 (b).

lantern-jack (lan'tern-jak), n. The ignis fatuus.

lantern-jawed (lan'tern-jād), a. Having lantern-jaws; having a long, thin face.

Mine host, . . . pushing his lantern-jawed visage . . . rudely forward. Scott, Waverley, xxx.

lantern-jaws (lan'tern-jāz), n. pl. Long, thin jaws or chops; hence, a thin visage.

He sucked in both his cheeks till his lantern jaws and long chin assumed the appearance of a pair of nut-crackers. Scott, Rob Roy, vi.

lantern-keg (lan'tern-keg), n. Naut., a keg taken on board a boat at sea for holding, along with a small reserve supply of bread, a lantern, and sometimes fireworks, to enable the crew to indicate their whereabouts in case of being separated from the ship at night.

lantern-lerryt, n. Some trick of producing artificial light. Nares.

Henceforth I do mean
To pity him, as smiling at his feat
Of lantern-lerry, with fuliginous heat
Whirling his whimsies, by a subtilty
Suck'd from the veins of shop-philosophy.

B. Jonson, Expostulation with Iuigo Jones.

lantern-light (lan'tern-lit), n. 1. The light of a lantern.

The adjutant, by lantern-light, read our orders amid breathless silence. The Century, XXXVII. 464.

2. In areh., a lantern on the top of a dome; a dome-light. See lantern, n., 3.

lantern-pinion (lan'tern-pin'yōn), n. Same as lantern-wheel.

lantern-pump (lan'tern-pump), n. Any form of pump which operates by means of a flexible cylinder having a valved disk at each end and alternately drawn out and compressed when the machine is in use.

lantern-shell (lan'tern-shel), n. The shell of any bivalve mollusk of the genus Anatina.

lantern-sprat (lan'tern-sprat), n. A sprat infested by the Lernæan parasite Lernæonema monilaris. [Prov. Eng.]

This Lernæa is luminous at night-time, and fish parasitized are termed lanthorn-sprats. Day.

lantern-stairst (lan'tern-stārz), n. pl. Winding stairs, such as are used in towers.

In the midst of the said body of building there was a pair of winding, such as we now call lanthorn stairs. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 53.

Laopteryx (lā-op'te-riks), n. [NL., < Gr. λαός, lās, a stone, + πτερυξ, a wing.] A genus of fossil birds from the Upper Jurassic beds of Wyoming, described by Marsh from a part of a skull indicating a bird about as large as a heron. The species is named L. priscus. The affinities of the bird are uncertain, but it is believed to have been odontornithic, and to have possessed biconcave vertebrae, like Ichthyornis.

lap¹ (lap), v.; pret. and pp. lapped, ppr. lapping. [Early mod. E. lape; < ME. lappen, < AS. lapian, lick, lap, = MD. lappen, lapan = MLG. lapan, I.G. lappen = OHG. laffan, MHG. laffen = Icel. leppa = Dan. labe = Sw. lapa, lap, lick up, = W. llepio = L. lambere (> E. lambent, etc.) = Gr. λάπτειν, lap with the tongue, lick. The F. laper, OF. laper, lapper, lick, and lamper, drink (see lampon), are from LG. Prob. allied to lip, and to L. labium, lip: see lip and labium.] I. trans. 1. To lick up (a liquid, as water, milk, or liquid food); take into the mouth with the tongue.

Thus sayeth the Lord: in the place where dogges lapped the bloude of Naboth, shal dogges lappe even thy bloud also. Bible of 1551, 3 [1] Ki. xxi. 19.

They'll take suggestion as a cat lapes milk. Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 288.

2. To flow against or upon with a sound as of licking up; ripple against; lick or wash.

Dark roll the whispering waves
That lap the piers beneath the hill Ridged thick with ancient graves. O. W. Holmes, Agnes.

II. intrans. 1. To lick up a liquid; drink by licking.

And gif hym lust for to lape, the lawe of kynde wolde
That he dronk of eche a diche er he deide for therste. Piers Plowman (C), xlii. 18.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side, being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore. Sir K. Digby, Nature of Bodies.

2. To make a sound like that produced by taking up water with the tongue.

I heard the ripple washing in the reeds,
And the wild water lapping on the crag. Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

lap¹ (lap), n. [*< lap*¹, v.] 1. A lick; a lapping; a motion or sound resembling that of lapping.

There was naught to show that it was water but . . . now and then a faint lap and a dying bubble round the edge.
H. L. Stevenson, Merry Men.

2. That which is licked up, as porridge. Compare cat-lap. [Slang.]

Here's pannum, and lap, and good poplars of yarrum.
Brome, Jovial Crew, li. (song).

lap² (lap), n. [Early mod. E. lappce, < ME. lappce, < AS. lappa, the edge or skirt of a garment, lobe of the ear, a detached portion, a district, = OFris. lappa = MD. lappce, D. lap = MLG. lappce = G. lappen = Sw. lapp = Dan. lap, a lap, loose hanging portion, shred; cf. G. lappen, hang loose, = Icel. lapa, hang down; L. labi, fall, > lapsus, a falling (see labent, lapse); Skt. √ lamb, ramb, hang down. Cf. lap¹, lap².] 1†. A flap or loosely hanging part of a thing; a loose border or fold.

Wyth lappes large I wot & I wene, Dubbhed with double perie & dygte.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), l. 201.

A golden Banner, in whose stately lap
His Lord's Almighty Name wide open flew.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 122.

2†. The loose part of a coat; the skirt of a garment; a lappet.

With the lappes of her garnements (plifted in a frounce she dried myn lye), that weren full of the waves of my wepynges.
Chaucer, Boethius, l.

At first he tells a lio with some shame and reluctancy.
. . . For then, if he cuts off but a lap of Truth's garment, his heart smites him.
Fuller.

3. The front part of the skirt of a garment; that part of the clothing that lies loosely on the thighs and knees when a person sits down; especially, this part of the clothing, or an apron, as used to hold or contain something.

To the tree she goth full hastily,
And on this faucon loketh pitously,
And held hir lappes abroad, for wel she wiste
The faucon muste fallen for the twiste,
When that it swooneth next, for lakke of blood.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, l. 433.

And one . . . found a wild vine, and gathered thereof of gourds his lap full.
2 Kl. iv. 39.

4. The part of the body covered by the front part of the skirts of one's garments or by an apron, especially when in a sitting posture: often used with special reference to nursing or cherishing: as, to hold a child in one's lap.

Ich sauh hym sitte as he a syre were,
At alle manere ese in Abrahames lappes.
Piers Plowman (C), ix. 233.

His walet lay byforn him in his lappes.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 686.

I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 2. 100.

5. In textile manuf. See lapping², 3.—6. Figuratively, anything which supports and cherishes; any retreat in which something rests or reposes; shelter; abode: as, the lap of earth; the lap of luxury.

Who are the violets now,
That strew the green lap of the newe come spring?
Shak., Rich. II., v. 2. 47.

Or the flowery lap
Of some irriguous valley spread her store.
Milton, P. L., iv. 254.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth. Gray, Elegy.

lap³ (lap), v.; pret. and pp. lapped, prp. lapping. [Early mod. E. lappce, < ME. lappen, earlier welappen, in another form wrappen, > E. wrap, which is thus a doublet of lap³: see wrap. Cf. envelop, develop, through F. from the same ult. source.] I. trans. 1. To wrap or twist round.

With a great deal of cloth lapped about him like a scarf.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, v. 3.

About the paper . . . I lapped several times a slender thread.
Newton. (Latham.)

2. To wrap or infold; involve.

Either lapped other, full louell in armes.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1908.

And whanne the bodi was taken, Joseph lappede it in a clene sendel and leide it in his newe birde.
Wyclif, Mat. xxvii. 59.

A kind token of your favour lapt up in a parenthesis.
Milton, Animadversions.

As lapped in thought I used to lie
And gaze into the summer sky.
Longfellow, Voices of the Night, Prelude.

3. To fold; bend and lay one part or fold of over another: as, to lap a piece of cloth.

Ne suffred she the Middays scorching powre,
Ne the sharp Northerne wind thereon to showre;
But lapped up her silken leaves most charely.
Spenser, F. Q., III. v. 51.

4. To lay in such a way as to cover a part of something underneath; cause to overlap: as, to lap shingles or slates on a roof.—5†. To feign; invent.

For no luff hit is, lilly, thou lappis thies tales,
But for treason & trayn, trust we non other.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 11302.

6. To cut or polish with a lap: as, to lap a gem. See lap³, n., 5.

Some parts of the lock-work are also lapped upon a revolving leaden surface plate, with emery and water, and always for dead-level polishing.
W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 252.

Lapped joint. Same as lap-joint.

II. intrans. To extend over a part of something else; overlap.—To lap over, to cover or partly cover, by being folded or turned upon; extend beyond.

The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent like the wing of a fly.
Greav.

lap³ (lap), n. [lap³, v. In some uses apparatus confused with lap², n.] 1†. A covering.

And alle ledis me lowtided that lengede in erthe,
And now es lefte me no lappes my lygham to hele.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3287.

2. The part of one body which lies on and covers part of another; the amount or extent of such covering: as, the lap of a slate in roofing.—3. In the steam-engine, the space over which a slide-valve travels after the closing of the steam-passage to or from the cylinder. The inside lap is the space traversed by the slide-valve after it has passed the inlet-port and cut off the supply of steam from the cylinder, and is intended to cause the engine to do a part of its work by expansion. The outside lap is the space traversed by the valve before the end of the stroke, after it has shut off the exhaust of steam. It leaves a portion of vapor confined within the cylinder to act as an elastic cushion against the down stroke of the piston. E. H. Knight.

Expansive working, however, becomes possible when we give the valve what is called lap, by making it project over the edges of the steam ports.

Encyc. Brit., XXII. 601.

4. A thick roll or sheet of cotton, wool, or the like, in various stages of manufacture.

The felt for these purposes is made chiefly from wool, which is, after washing, first carded out into exceedingly fine uniform gossamer-like laps. Encyc. Brit., IX. 68.

A pair of large fluted rollers, revolving in the same direction, takes on the sheet of cotton until it has formed a thick roll, technically called a lap.

Spence's Encyc. Manuf., I. 742.

5. A wheel or disk of lead, copper, wood, leather, or other substance, which, being charged with polishing- or cutting-powder, is used in cutting gems, glass, etc., or in polishing gems and cutlery. In some trades and for some purposes the outer edge or periphery of the wheel is covered with the polishing-powder and applied to the material to be fashioned; in others the face or flat side of the wheel is used.

6. In gun-making, a load easting made to fit the bore of a rifle, with which the rifling is smoothed and polished.—7. In euchre, a lapping of the count from one game to the next; the carrying of a surplus of points at the end of a game over to the score of the next game: done by agreement, not as a regular feature of the game.—8†. A course or round, as in running; a lapping or roundabout run.

When their lap is finished, the cautious huntsman to their kennel gathers the nimble-footed hounds.

Felding, Jonathan Wild, l. 14.

9. In walking-matches and similar contests, a single round of the course along which competitors have to go a certain number of times in order to complete a specified distance. Thus, if a course is 440 yards, a pedestrian would have to do four laps or lengths to complete a mile.—Left in the lapst, embarrassed. Nares.

Viden me tuis consiliis Impeditum esse? Dost thou not see me brought in the briars, or left in the laps, through thy devise and consalle?
Terence in English (1614).

lap⁴ (lap). An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) preterit of leap¹.

How Naunie lap and flang
(A souple jad she was and strang).
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

laparostict (lap'ā-rō-stikt), n. and a. [NL. Laparosticta.] I. n. A dung-beetle of the section Laparosticta. Amer. Naturalist, XXII. 951.

II. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Laparosticta: opposed to pleurostict.

Laparosticta (lap'ā-rō-stik'tā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λαπάρα, the flank, loins, + στικτός, verbal adj. of στίζειν, priek, stab: see stigma.] A section of Scarabæidae, including dung-beetles whose abdominal stigmata are in the membrane between the dorsal and ventral segments, the last one covered by the elytra, and whose antennæ are 9- to 11-jointed, the outer three joints usually forming the club. They live in excrement and decomposing matters.

laparotomic (lap'ā-rō-tōm'ik), a. [laparotomy + -ic.] Pertaining to laparotomy.

laparotomist (lap'ā-rot'ō-mist), n. [laparotomy + -ist.] One who performs laparotomy.

laparotomize (lap'ā-rot'ō-miz), v. t.; pret. and pp. laparotomized, ppr. laparotomizing. [laparotomy + -ize.] To perform laparotomy upon.

laparotomy (lap'ā-rot'ō-mi), n. [Gr. λαπάρα, the flank, loins, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμείν, cut.] In surg., incision into the abdominal cavity; abdominal section.

lap-bander (lap'ban'dēr), n. [lap³ + band¹ + -er¹.] Anything that binds two articles more closely together. Halliwel. [North. Eng.]

lap-board (lap'bōrd), n. A thin, flat board, sometimes cut out on one side to fit the body, held on the lap for convenience in needlework, shoemaking, and similar occupations. Also called lap-table.

lap-child† (lap'child), n. A baby in arms.

In springs Roger of York, and finding Canterbury so seated, fairly sits him down on Canterbury's lap (a baby too big to be danced thereon!); yea, Canterbury's servants dandied this lap-child with a witness, who plucked him thence, and buffeted him to purpose.

Fuller, Church Hist., III. iii. 3.

lap-dog (lap'dog), n. A small dog fondled in the lap; a pet dog.

Not louder shrieks to pitying heaven are cast,
When husbands or when lapdogs breathe their last.
Pope, R. of the L., III. 158.

lap-dovetail (lap'duv'tāl), n. In joinery, a form of dovetailing which shows the thickness of the lap only on the return edge.

lap-eared (lap'ērd), a. Same as lop-eared.

lapel (la-pel'), n. [Also lappel and lapelle; < lap² + dim. -el. Cf. lappet.] A part of a garment which laps over another part, or which is turned over and folded back, either permanent or adjustable, as for buttoning and unbuttoning.

lapel-hout (lap'el-hout), n. Same as ladlewood. See Hartogia.

lapelle (la-pel'), n. See lapel.

lapped (la-peld'), a. [lapel + -ed².] Furnished with lapels, as a garment.

lap-frame (lap'frām), n. In flax-manuf., a machine used in the preparation of coarse flax-fiber or tow for spinning. It unites slivers of carded tow delivered from the first carding-machine or breaker into a lap suited for delivery to the finisher-card, winding the lap as formed upon a bobbin, from which the lap is fed or delivered to the finisher-card.

lapful (lap'fūl), n. [lap² + -ful.] As much as the lap can contain.

The gold and silver which old women believe . . . conjurers bestow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls.
Locke.

Laphria (laf'ri-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λαφρία, an epithet of Artemis; perhaps akin to λάφυρα, spoils taken in war.] A notable genus of robber-flies, or dipterous insects of the family Asilida, species of which resemble humblebees. L. gibbosa and L. flava are examples.

Laphygma (lā-fig'mā), n. [NL., < Gr. λαφγμός, gluttony, < λαφίσσεν, swallow greedily.] A genus of noctuid moths founded by Guenée in 1852, characterized by the full naked eyes, smooth front, unarmed tibiae, rounded collar, truncate thoracic tuft, and tufted basal segments of the abdomen. L. frugiperda is the moth whose larva is called the fall army-worm or grass-worm.

It is a variable form, and two varieties, fulvosa and obscura, have been described. The caterpillars often occur in great lapidarius (lap-i-dā'ri-us), a. [L. lapidarius, belonging to stones: see lapidary.] Consisting of stones; stony. Coles, 1717. [Rare.]

lapidarist (lap'i-dā-ris-t), n. [As lapidar(y) + -ist.] A person versed in the lapidary art; a connoisseur of fine stones or gems; a lapidist.

The stone called sapphire by Pliny is now known to lapidarists as lapis lazuli. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV, 84.

lapidary (lap'i-dā-ri), a. and n. [= F. lapidare = Sp. Pg. It. lapidaria, < L. lapidarius, of or belonging to stones or stony; as a noun, a stone-cutter; < lapis (lapid-), a stone; see lapis.] I. a. 1. Pertaining to a stone or stones; having relation to stones: as, the lapidary bee (which see, below).—2. Pertaining or relating to, or used in, the working of stone or stones, especially of fine stones or gems, as cutting, polishing, engraving, etc.: as, the lapidary art; a lapidary wheel.—3. Engraved or inscribed upon stone: as, lapidary verses.

The lapidary alphabet, used for inscriptions and coins, is square and angular, the letters being of equal height, and composed largely of vertical and horizontal lines. Isaac Taylor, The Alphabet, II, 147.

Both styles of capital writing were obviously borrowed from the lapidary alphabets employed under the empire. Encyc. Brit., XVIII, 152.

4. Of or pertaining to inscriptions cut in stone, or to any formal inscriptions; monumental; as, the lapidary style of composition or of lettering.

A nobler eulogium than all the lapidary adulation of modern epitaphs. Connoisseur, No. 131. (Latham.)

Lapidary bee, Bombus lapidarius, a bumblebee with a black body and red end of the abdomen. It nests in stony places.—Lapidary mill. (a) A lapidaries' grinding, cutting, and polishing-apparatus, including the bench and the machinery for the wheels or laps, the slitting, roughing, smoothing, and polishing-mills, and the slitting and grinding-wheels. (b) A lapidary wheel.—Lapidary style, in lit., a style appropriate for monumental and other inscriptions, or characteristic of inscriptions.—Lapidary wheel, a wheel for cutting and polishing, used by lapidaries. There are two kinds of these wheels: (1) the slicer, a thin iron wheel edged with diamond-dust, used like a saw; (2) the lap or mill, used for grinding and polishing, usually working horizontally and performing its function by means of its upper face or disk, which is faced with metal, wood, leather, or other material, and is strewn with polishing or abrading powder of different degrees of hardness and fineness. E. H. Knight.

II. n.; pl. lapidaries (-riz). 1. A stone-cutter; one who cuts and prepares and inscribes tombstones.—2. Specifically, a workman in fine and hard stones; one who does any kind of skilled work on precious or semi-precious stones, as cutting, polishing, engraving, the formation of useful or decorative articles, etc.

The lapidaries now shall learn to set Their diamonds in gold, and not in jet. Brome, To his Mistress.

When practicable, the lapidary avails himself of the natural cleavages in the mineral upon which he is going to operate. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 299.

3. A virtuoso of lapidary work; a lapidarist. [Rare.]—Lapidaries' cloth-mill, a lapidary wheel, about 2 inches thick, consisting of a center of wood about 6 inches in diameter, upon which a spiral coil of list or cloth is wound closely until the diameter of the wheel is about 10 inches. The cloth or list face is dressed true and even with an iron heated to a dull red. This mill is used generally with pumice-stones and water, and by reason of its elasticity is well adapted to operate upon curved surfaces of shells and stones.

lapidate (lap'i-dāt), v. t.; and pp. lapidated, ppr. lapidating. [L. lapidatus, pp. of lapidare (> It. lapidare = Sp. Pg. Pr. lapidar = F. lapider), throw stones at, stone, < lapis (lapid-), a stone; see lapis. Cf. diapidate.] 1. To stone; to throw stones at; hit with stones. [Rare.]

I have been in the catacombs—caves very curious indeed—we were lapidated by the natives—pebbled to some purpose, I give you my word. Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xxxi.

The season for lapidating the professors is now at hand; keep him quiet at Holland House till all is over. Sydney Smith, To Lady Holland.

2. To cut and polish, as a stone by a lapidary. The ruby-colored ones [tourmalines] when lapidated being easily mistaken for rubies. Eng. Consul at Bahia, quoted in Phila. Times, May 3, 1886.

lapidation (lap-i-dā'shon), n. [= F. lapidation = Pr. lapidatio = Sp. lapidacion = Pg. lapidacione = It. lapidazione, < L. lapidatio (n-), a stoning, < lapidare, stone; see lapidate.] The act of throwing stones at a person or of striking a person with stones; punishment or execution by stoning.

All adulterers should be executed by lapidation; the ancient punishment was burning; death always, though in divers forms. Ep. Hall, Contemplations, iv, 15.

Adultery, if detected, would be punished by lapidation according to the rigor of the Koranic law. R. F. Burton, El-Medina, p. 284.

lapidator (lap'i-dā-tor), n. [= It. lapidatore, < L. lapidator, a stoner, < lapidare, stone; see lapidate.] One who stones. [Rare.]

lapideon (lā-pid'ē-on), n. [L. lapis (lapid-), a stone, + -eon, as in melodeon, etc.] A musical instrument, invented by M. Baudry, consisting of a graduated series of flints so suspended on a frame that they can be sounded by blows from wooden or stone hammers.

lapideous (lā-pid'ē-us), a. [= Sp. lapideo = Pg. lapideo, < L. lapideus, stony, < lapis (lapid-), a stone; see lapis. Cf. lapidose.] Of the nature of stone; consisting of stone; stony. [Rare.]

A chylifactory menstruum or digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii, 5.

lapides, n. Plural of lapis.

lapidescent (lap-i-des'ens), n. [L. lapidescent (t) + -ce.] The state of being lapidescent, or the process of petrifying.

They [chemists] do with much confidence entirely ascribe the induration and especially the lapidescence of bodies to a certain secret internal principle, lurking for the most part in some liquid vehicle. Boyle, Works, I, 434.

lapidescentcy (lap-i-des'ens-i), n. Same as lapidescence.

The lapidescences and petrificative mutations of hard bodies. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii, 23.

lapidescent (lap-i-des'ent), a. and n. [= F. lapidescent = It. lapidescente, < L. lapidescent (t-)s, ppr. of lapidescere, become stone, petrify, < lapis (lapid-), a stone; see lapis.] I. a. 1. Turning to stone; petrifying.

A spring within the bowels of y^e earth, very deepe, & so excessive cold that the drops meeting wth some lapidescent matter converts them into an hard stone, which hangs about it like icicles. Evelyn, Diary, June 20, 1644.

2. Petrificative; lapidific; having the power of converting to stone.

Beneath the surface of the Earth there may be sulphureous and other steams, that may be plentifully mixed with water, and there, in likelihood, with lapidescent liquors. Boyle, Works, III, 557.

II. n. A substance which has the quality of petrifying another substance, or converting it to stone.

lapidific (lap-i-dif'ik), a. [= F. lapidificus = Sp. lapidifico = It. lapidifico, < L. lapis (lapid-), a stone, + facere, make.] Forming or converting into stone.

Arguing that the atoms of the lapidific, as well as of the saline principle, being regular, do therefore concur in producing regular stones. N. Grewe, Cosmologia Sacra, I, 3.

But have we any better proof of such an effort of nature than of her shooting a lapidific juice into the form of a shell? Jefferson, Correspondence, I, 431.

lapidifical (lap-i-dif'i-kal), a. [L. lapidific + -al.] Same as lapidific. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii, 5.

lapidification (lā-pid'i-fi-kā'shon), n. [= F. lapidification = Sp. lapidificacion = It. lapidificazione, < *NL. lapidificatio (n-), the act of turning substances into stone, < lapidificare*, lapidify; see lapidify.] Petrification; the process of conversion into stone.

Induration, or lapidification of substances more soft, is likewise another degree of condensation. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 82.

We must suppose that an interval of time elapsed before the commencement of lapidification, during which the cellular tissue was obliterated.

Sir C. Lyell, Elem. of Geol. (6th ed.), p. 43.

lapidify (lā-pid'i-fi), v. t.; and pp. lapidified, ppr. lapidifying. [= F. lapidifier = Sp. Pg. lapidificar, < *NL. lapidificare, make stone, turn into stone, < L. lapis (lapid-), a stone, + facere, make. Cf. lapidific.] To convert into stone; petrify. [Rare.]

lapidist (lap'i-dist), n. [L. lapis (lapid-), a stone (see lapis), + -ist.] 1. A lapidary.

The factitious stones of chymists in imitation [of adamant] being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray, Works of Creation, I.

2. An expert in precious and semi-precious stones; a student of mineralogy, especially in relation to stones used for decoration.

lapidose (lap'i-dōs), a. [ME. lapidose = F. lapideux = Sp. It. lapidoso, < L. lapidosus, stony, < lapis (lapid-), a stone; see lapis. Cf. lapideous.] 1. Stony.

Ther [where] cleyl landes are & lapidose; With dounge is good to help hem. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 215.

2. In bot., growing in stony places.

lapilliform (lā-pil'i-fōrm), a. [L. lapillus, a little stone (see lapillus), + forma, form.] Having the form of small stones.

lapillus (lā-pil'us), n.; pl. lapilli (-i). [L., dim. of lapis, a stone; see lapis.] 1. A small stone; specifically, in the plural, fragmentary materials ejected from volcanoes in eruption, varying in size from that of a pea to that of a walnut. They are sometimes so cellular in structure as to float on the surface of water.—2. In anat., an ear-stone; an otolith; one of the hard concretions found in the fluid of the labyrinth of the ear of many animals. See otolith.

lapis (lā'pis), n.; pl. lapides (-pi-dēz). [L., a stone; akin to Gr. λίπας, a bare rock, λίπας, a flake, scale, < λέπειν, peel, scale off; see lepis.] 1. A stone; used only as a Latin word. See phrases below.—2. A kind of calico-printing with indigo in which the resists are so composed that they act as a mordant for other dyes, those parts of the cloth which by the resist are protected from the action of the indigo, and are thus left white, being dyed in turn by madder or quercitron-bark. The patterns so produced were thought to bear some resemblance to lapis lazuli; hence the name.—Lapis causticus (caustic stone), caustic potash.—Lapis divinus (divine stone), a preparation of copper sulphate, potassium nitrate, and alum, 16 parts each, and camphor one part, fused together.—Lapis infernalis (infernal stone), fused nitrate of silver, or lunar caustic.—Lapis lazuli (azure stone), a silicate of sodium, calcium, and aluminium with a sulphur compound of sodium, allied in composition to haynie and nosean. It occurs massive, and has usually a rich ultramarine-blue color, which makes it highly esteemed as an ornamental stone. It is hard enough to be engraved and cut into cameos, but large masses cannot be used in this way, because of flaws. That which comes from Persia and China is finest in color. By isolating and powdering the blue coloring matter the pigment called native or real ultramarine is obtained. See ultramarine.—Lapis-lazuli blue a deep blue used in decoration, especially in Oriental porcelain and in the porcelain of Sévres. The Sévres bine is deeper in color than that which bears the same name in Oriental porcelain, and is commonly clouded or mottled, and sometimes veined with gold.—Lapis-lazuli ware, a name given by Josiah Wedgwood to a variety of his pebbeware which was veined with gold upon blue. See pebbeware.—Lapis Lydius (Lydian stone), touchstone or basalt, a variety of silicious slate.—Lapis ollaris (pot-stone), soapstone, potstone, or talc, a hydrated silicate of magnesium.

Lapith (lap'ith), n.; pl. Lapithæ or Lapiths (-i-thē, -iths). [L. Lapithæ, < Gr. Λαπίθαι; see Lapithæ.] One of the Lapithæ.

The Lapithæ (Parthenon) are youthful, beardless, slim, but firmly knit. A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, II, 55.

Lapithæ (lap'i-thē), n. pl. [L., < Gr. Λαπίθαι.] In Gr. myth., a people of Thessaly, held to be the descendants of Lapithes, son of Apollo, celebrated for their wars with the Centaurs, and especially for their chastisement, with the aid of Theseus, of the Centaurs for an attempt to carry off Hippodameia and other women from the feast at her marriage with Pirithous, ruler of the Lapithæ. The word is of frequent occurrence in treatises on Greek art, combats between Lapithæ and Centaurs having been a favorite subject with Greek artists.

Lapith Fighting with Centaur.—Metope of the Parthenon.

lap-joint (lap'joint), n. A joint in which one edge of a board, plank, or plate overlaps the edge of another piece, the edges being partly cut away so that the pieces are in parallel relation with each other. The term is used in contradistinction to butting-joint. The joints of weather-boarding in house-building and the so-called "clinker build" of boats are familiar examples. Also lapped joint.—Half-lap joint, in couplings, a joint formed by making the ends of shafts semi-cylindrical and putting them together so that the tongue of one fits into the recess of the other. The joint is then covered with a thimble or ring in which it is secured by a key. See cut under coupling.

lap-jointed (lap'join'ted), a. Having joints formed by edges (as of plates) overlapping, as steam-boilers, iron ships, etc.—Lap-jointed work. Same as clinker-work.

Laplace's coefficients, equation, function, theorem, etc. See coefficient, etc.

Laplacian (lä-plä'si-an), a. [Laplace (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to Pierre Simon de Laplace, a great French astronomer and mathematician (1749-1827).

This primitive Kantian and Laplacian evolutionism, this nebular theory of such exquisite concinnity, . . . has received many hard knocks from astronomers.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXII, 640.

Laplander (lap'lan-dër), n. [= Sw. Lappländer = Dan. Lapländer; as Lapland (see def.) + -er.] A native of Lapland, a region forming the northernmost part of the Scandinavian peninsula, and divided between Norway, Sweden, and Russia. See Lapp.

Lapland finch. See finch 1.

Laplandish (lap'lan-dish), a. [Lapland + -ish.] Pertaining to Lapland or the Laplanders; Lappish.

Lapland rose-bay. See rose-bay.

lapping (lap'ling), n. [Lap + -ing.] One who is nursed, as it were, in the lap of ease and luxury; a term of econtempt. [Rare.]

You must not stream out your youth in wine, and live a lapping to the silk and dainties.

Hewitt, Sermons (1658), p. 7.

Laportea (lä-pör'të-ä), n. [NL. (Gandiehaut-Beaupré, 1826), named after M. Laporte, of whom the author gives no account.] A genus of urticaceous plants of the tribe Urticeæ and subtribe Urticeæ. They much resemble nettles, and, like them, are provided with stinging hairs. They differ, however, from the genus Urtica in the oblique achenium, connate stipules, and alternate leaves. There are about 25 species, widely dispersed throughout the warmer regions of both hemispheres, especially in the Old World, but also in Mexico and further northward, being absent in South America. They are perennial herbs, shrubs, or even trees, with ample, usually toothed, leaves and minute monocous or dioecious flowers clustered in loose cymes or glomerules. L. Canadensis, the wood-nettle, is a common plant throughout the eastern United States. L. gigas of Australia is a large tree 80 feet in height, with extremely light, open-grained wood, and leaves from 12 to 15 inches broad. Its native name is gou-mao-ma, and its colonial name nettle-tree. It yields a valuable fiber.

Lapp (lap), n. [Sw. Lapp = Dan. Lap, a Lapp; a name of Lappish origin.] A member of the race from which Lapland takes its name, but which forms only a portion of its population. The Lapps are an inferior branch of the Finnic race, physically dwarfish and weak, and low in the scale of civilization.

lappaceous (lä-pä'shi-us), a. [L. lappaceus, bur-like, < lappa, a bur.] In bot., pertaining to or resembling a bur.

lappet, v. and n. An obsolete form of lap.

lappel, n. See lapel.

lapper (lap'ër), n. [Lap + -er.] 1. One who laps with the tongue. Johnson.—2. In entom., one of the trophi or mouth-organs which are used for lapping honey or other food, as the tongue of a bee. Kirby.

lapper (lap'ër), n. [Lap + -er.] 1. One who laps. Specifically—(a) One who wraps or folds; as, a cloth-lapper.

They may be lappers of linen, and balliffs of the manor.

Swift.

(b) One who uses a lap, as in a lapidary's work.

The lapper produces the plain and diamond-shaped surfaces by the rotary action of the lapidary's wheel.

Goldsmith's Handbook, p. 178.

2. In cotton-manuf., a machine which receives the scutched cotton from the batting- and blowing-machine, and compacts it into a lap or fleece upon the surface of a roller called a lapper-roller. This lap or fleece, when it acquires the proper thickness, is torn across, and removed from the lapper-roller.

to be fed to a carding-machine, into which it is carried by the action of feed-rolls and the first card-roller or licker-in. Also called spreader or blower, and lap-machine or lapping-machine.

lapper (lap'ër), v. t. and i. A Scotch form of lapper 2.

lapper-milk (lap'ër-milk), n. Lopped milk; elabber. [Scotch.]

There's a soup parritch for ye—it will set ye better to be slaistering at them and the lapper-milk.

Scott, Antiquary, x.

lappet (lap'et), n. [ME. lappet; < lap 2 + -et.] 1. A little lap, flap, or pendant, especially on a coat or a head-dress.

When I cut-off this lappet from thy Coat,
Could I not then as well have cut thy throat?

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Trophies.

Half a dozen squeezed plists of linen, to which dangled behind two unmeaning pendants, called lappets, not half covering their strait-drawn hair.

Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, IV, i.

The dalmatic . . . has full sleeves reaching only to the elbows, but prolonged to broad lappets of moderate length.

Encyc. Brit., VI, 467.

2. In ornith., a wattle or other fleshy process hanging from a bird's head.—3. One of certain bombycid moths, as Lasiocampa quercifolia: an English book-name. The small lappet is L. ilicifolia.

lappet (lap'et), v. t. [Lappet, n.] To cover with or as with a lappet. Landor.

lappeted (lap'et-ed), a. [Lappet + -ed.] In ornith., wattled; having fleshy lappets at the base of the beak; as, the lappeted lapwing, Hoplopterus tectus or Sarcophorus pileatus.

lappet-end (lap'et-end), n. 1. The free end of a lappet, as of fine lawn or lace, frequently very rich in decoration. Hence—2. A piece of lace or embroidery suitable for making a lappet. Art Jour., N. S., XIX, 8.

lappet-frame (lap'et-främ), n. In lappet-weaving, a sliding bar carrying needles, each with a separate thread, for producing the pattern. The bar is raised and lowered as required by the action on it of a wheel grooved according to the pattern to be produced. Sometimes two or more such bars are employed simultaneously. The device is a somewhat old one, still much used in Scotland. A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 188.

lappet-head (lap'et-hed), n. A head-dress made with lappets or lace pendants.

He beheld his . . . friend dressed up in a lappet-head and petticoat.

Goldsmith, Voltaire.

And sails with lappet-head and mincing airs

Duly at chink of bell to morning prayers.

Cowper, Truth, I, 139.

lappet-moth (lap'et-môth), n. Same as lapper 3.

lappet-weaving (lap'et-wë'ving), n. A system of weaving used for producing figures on the surface of cloth by means of needles placed in a sliding frame. A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 188.

Lappic (lap'ik), a. and n. [Lapp + -ic.] Same as Lappish.

lapping (lap'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lap 1, v.] 1. The act of licking up with the tongue.—2. The motion and sound of rippling water.

lapping (lap'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lap 3, v.] 1. The act of wrapping or folding.—2. The act of superimposing the margin of a piece of any material upon the margin of another piece, as in making a lap-joint.—3. In textile manuf., the process of forming a lap or fleece of fibrous material suitable for presentation or delivery to the carding-machine. In cotton-manufacture the laps are formed by compacting the cotton upon rollers, whence the fleece is detached after it has acquired the proper thickness. Laps are also formed by uniting slivers, as in the preparation of tow for spinning.

4. In ordnance, a process for slightly increasing the bore of a rifled gun by wearing away the lands, or metal between the rifle-grooves.—5. In metal-working, the smoothing of metal surfaces by rubbing them with a plate of metal rendered abrasive by the application of oil and powdered corundum, or by the application of a revolving disk similarly prepared.—6. That which is lapped; a flap or pendant.

As those casual lappings and flowing streamers were imitated from nothing, they seldom have any folds or chiaro scuro.

Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, IV, i.

lapping-engine (lap'ing-en'jin), n. In metal-working, a machine for turning over the two laps which are later joined by the operation of welding.

lapping-machine (lap'ing-ma-shën'), n. Same as lapper 2.

Lappish (lap'ish), a. and n. [= Sw. Lappisk = Dan. Lappisk; as Lapp + -ish.] 1. a. Pertaining to Lapland or the Lapps.

The Bible record would lead us to regard the earlier and gigantic men as antediluvian, and the smaller or Lappish race as postdiluvian. Dawson, Origin of World, p. 290.

II. n. The language of the Lapps, which is akin to the Finnic.

Also Lappic.

lap-plate (lap'plät), n. In metal-working, a plate which covers the line or joint where two other plates abut against each other, and is soldered, riveted, or bolted to both, thus connecting them.

Lapponian (lä-pö'ni-an), a. [ML. Lapponia, Lapland: see Lapp.] Same as Lappish.

lapp-owl (lap'oul), n. The great gray owl, Strix lapponica, of Lapland and other northerly regions.

lappy (lap'i), a. [Lap 1 + -y.] In liquor; drunk. Bailey, 1731. [Cant.]

lap-ring (lap'ring), n. An open ring in which the ends overlap each other without touching. It is analogous to a split-ring, and, like it, is used to form a convenient connecting-link. The lap-ring, however, is made of such heavy material that it cannot, like the split-ring, be elastic. E. H. Knight.

lap-roller (lap'rô'lër), n. In cotton-manuf., the roller of a lapping-machine which receives the fiber after the processes of batting and scutching, and upon which the lap or fleece is built up and compacted to a thickness suitable for delivery to the carding-machine.

lapsable (lap'sa-bl), a. [Lapse + -able.] Capable of lapsing, falling, or relapsing.

Lapsana, Lampana (lap'-lamp'sa-nä), n. [NL. Lapsana (Linnæus), Lampana (Tournefort), < L. lapsana, lampana, < Gr. λαπάνη, λαπάνη, the charlock.] A genus of composite plants of the liguliflorous tribe Cichoriaceæ, type of the subtribe Lapsanææ, having a glabrous involucre and naked receptacle, oblong, somewhat compressed, many-ribbed achenes, small, loosely panicle heads, and yellow corollas. Nine very closely related species, perhaps reducible to three or four, occur, widely distributed throughout the northern hemisphere in the Old World, one of them also occurring in North America. They are annual erect, branching herbs, sometimes hairy or glandular-viscid, with coarsely toothed or pinnatifid leaves, and long-peduncled heads. L. communis, the nipplewort, is a common hedge-weed in Europe, and occurs in the United States and Canada, perhaps only naturalized.

Lapsanææ, Lampanææ (lap-, lamp-sä'në-ë), n. pl. [NL., < Lapsana, Lampana, + -ææ.] A subtribe of composite plants of the tribe Cichoriaceæ, typified by the genus Lapsana, and containing also the genera Hispidella and Apongon, annual leafy herbs with chiefly naked involucre of nearly equal scales, and glabrous achenes, obtuse or rounded at the apex.

lap-scale (lap'skäl), n. An apparatus used in weighing out the quantity of wool or cotton which is to be spread upon the feeding-apron of a lapper or a carding-machine. E. H. Knight.

lapse (laps), n. [= F. laps = Sp. Pg. lapso = It. lasso, < L. lapsus, a falling, slipping, < labi, slip: see labent, lap 2.] 1. A falling; a continued falling off or away; a passing or gliding along or away; as, the lapse of flowing water; the lapse of time.

About me round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And languid lapse of murmuring streams.

Milton, P. L., viii, 263.

Through the still lapse of ages.

Bryant, Thanatopsis.

2. A gradual fall or descent; passage downward, physical or moral; a passing from a higher to a lower place, state, or condition: as, a lapse from integrity; a lapse into sin.

Since thy original lapse, true liberty Is lost. Milton, P. L., xii. 83.

The lapse to indolence is soft and imperceptible, but the return to diligence is difficult. Johnson, Rambler.

With soft and silent lapse came down
The glory that the wood receives,
At sunset, in its golden leaves.
Longfellow, Burial of the Minnikink.

3. A failure or miscarriage through some fault, slip, or negligence; hence, a slip or fault in general; a mistake from carelessness or inattention: as, a lapse of justice; a lapse of title to an estate; a lapse of the tongue or of grammar.

His [Adrian's] whole time was a very restoration of all the lapses and decays of former times. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 78.

Let us stand never so much upon our guard, there will be lapses, there will be inadvertencies, there will be surprises. Ep. Atterbury, Sermons, II. iv.

4. In Eng. eccles. law, the failure or omission of a patron to present a clerk to a benefice within the time allowed him, six months from avoidance, in which event the benefice is said to be lapsed or in lapse, and the right of presentation passes to the bishop.

The canon was made for presentation within six months, and title of lapse given to the bishop. Selden, Illustrations of Drayton's Polyolbion, viii.

lapse (laps), v.; pret. and pp. lapsed, ppr. lapsing. [L. lapsare, fall, slip, stumble, freq. of labi, pp. lapsus, fall, slip: see lapse, n. Cf. collapse, elapse, illapse, relapse.] I. intrans. 1. To fall; slip; slide; glide; sink; pass slowly, silently, or by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words by retrenching the vowels is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from which we descended. Swift, To the Lord Treasurer.

2. To slip in conduct; fail in duty; deviate from rectitude; commit a fault; slip or fall into error or sin.

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 6. 12.

3. To fall or pass from one proprietor to another, by the omission, negligence, or failure of some one, as a patron, a legatee, etc.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king. Aycliffe, Parergon.

4. To pass or fall away; fail; specifically, in law, to become ineffectual or void: as, the benefice lapsed; the legacy lapsed.

Until in time his history shall lapse and be forgotten.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, p. 277.

The lapsed, in early church hist., those who, having professed Christianity, denied the faith in time of persecution or fell into some other kind of sin, such as offering sacrifice or incense to idols, etc. On profession of contrition they were allowed to hope for restoration to the church, but, before being again admitted to communion, had to pass a long probation, and submit to special penances, sometimes lasting till the approach of death.

II. trans. To cause or suffer to slide; suffer to fail or become void or ineffectual; let slip. [Rare.]

He counts the living his to dispose, not to make profit of. He fears more to lapse his conscience than his living. Fuller.

lap-shaver (lap'shāv'vēr), n. A machine for reducing leather-hides to a uniform thickness by shaving away inequalities by means of a set knife. The name comes from the old practice of shaving hides by hand while held on a board in the lap. E. H. Knight.

lap-sided (lap'sī'ded), a. Same as top-sided.

lap-stone (lap'stōn), n. A stone held in the lap on which shoemakers hammer leather to make it more solid.

lapstreak (lap'strēk), a. and n. I. a. Built with each streak or course of planking overlapping the one below it like clapboards on a house; clincher-built: applied to boats.

II. n. A boat built in this way. Lapstreaks are not so strong as smooth-seamed boats, and are much more easily strained.

This boat . . . was a lapstreak, some thirty-seven feet long. The Boston Globe, Nov. 7, 1886.

lapstreaked (lap'strēkt), a. Same as lapstreak.

lapstreaker (lap'strēk-ēr), n. A fisherman who uses a lapstreak boat. [New England.]

lapsus (lap'sus), n.; pl. lapsus. [L., a fall, slip: see lapse, n.] A fall or slide; a slip: only as a Latin word.—Lapsus calami, a slip of the pen; a mistake in writing.—Lapsus lingue, a slip of the tongue; a mistake of a word in utterance.—Lapsus memoriae, a slip of the memory.

lap-table (lap'tā'bl), n. Same as lap-board.
lap-tea (lap'tē), n. A tea at which refreshments are served to the guests in their laps, instead of at table. Lowell, Biglow Papers, Int. [Local, U. S.]

Laputan (la-pū'tan), a. and n. [Laputa (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to Laputa, an imaginary flying island described in Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," whose inhabitants were engaged in all sorts of ridiculous projects; hence, chimerical; absurd; ridiculous; impossible.

After all, Swift's idea of extracting sunbeams out of cucumbers, which he attributes to his Laputan philosophers, may not be so very absurd.

Sir J. Herschel, Pop. Lects., p. 62.

II. n. An inhabitant of Laputa; a visionary.
lap-weld (lap'weld), n. A welding or weld made by lapping one piece of metal over another before hammering: distinguished from butt-weld.

lapweld (lap'weld), v. t. To weld together by the lapping of one edge over the other.

lapwing (lap'wing), n. [Early mod. E. lappewing, < ME. lapwing, a corrupt form, simulating wing ("because he laps or claps the wings so often"—Minsheu), of lapwink, lapwynke, lappewinke, lapwynche, prop. tepewinke*, leepwynke, < AS. hlēdpewinca, a lapwing, < hlēdpan, leap, run, + wince*, < wincan*, move aside, turn: see wink, wince. The name appar. refers to the bird's irregular, twitching mode of flight.] A plover-like bird with four toes, a crest, and lustrous plumage, belonging to the genus Vanellus and family Charadriidae. The best-known lapwing is V. cristatus, a common European bird, also called pe-

Lapwing (Vanellus cristatus).

wit, from its cry. The adult male has the upper parts iridescent with green, violet, and purplish tints, the under parts white, a large area on the breast and the top of the head and the long crest black, the tail-coverts chestnut or orange-brown, the tail black and white, the bill black, and the feet red. It is about as large as a pigeon. The eggs are esteemed a great luxury, and many are annually sent to the London markets from the marshy districts of England, under the name of plovers' eggs. There are other species. Also called flapwing.

For none after he was changed,
And from his owne kinde stranged,
A lapwynke made he was.
Gower, Conf. Amant., v.

Wherein you resemble the lapwing, who crieth moat where her nest is not. Lyly, Alexander and Campaspe, ii. 2.

lapwink, n. An obsolete form of lapwing.

lapwork (lap'wērk), n. In metal-working, work in which parts are fastened together by being lapped one over the other and then riveted, lapwelded, or the like.

laquay, laquey, n. Obsolete forms of lackey. Minsheu, 1617.

laquear (lak'wē-ār), n. [L., also laqueare, a paneled ceiling; cf. lacunar, of same sense: see lacunar.] A ceiling which consists of sunk or hollowed compartments having bands or spaces between. See lacunar.

Lar (lār), n.; pl. Lares (lā'rēz), or, as English, Lars (lārz). [L. Lar, usually in pl. Lares, OL. Lases (Etruscan Laran, Lalan), perhaps akin to Skt. √ las, shine.] 1. In Rom. antiq., one of a class of infernal deities whose cult was of primitive origin. They were looked upon as natural protectors of the state and family, and also as powerful for evil if not duly respected and propitiated. The public Lares, originally two in number, were the guardians of the unity of the state, and were honored with temples and an elaborate public ceremonial. After the time of Augustus, at least, each division of the city had also its own public Lares (Lares compitales). The private Lares differed for each family, and were worshipped daily in the house, being domiciled either on the family hearth or in a special shrine. They received also especial recognition upon every occasion of festivity, public or private, and on certain days devoted particularly to them, and claimed tribute alike from the bride upon entering the family and from the youth upon attaining his majority. The chief of the private Lares in each family, the domestic or household Lar (Lar familiaris) in the fullest sense, was the spirit of the founder of the family. To the family spirits were often added in later times, among the household Lares, the shades of heroes, or other personalities who were looked upon with admiration or awe. In their character as malignant divinities, the Lares were commonly classed under the titles of lemures or larvæ.

In consecrated earth,
And on the holy hearth,
The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint.
Milton, Nativity, l. 191.

Hence—2. One of the most cherished possessions of a family or household; one of the household gods. Compare Penates, in a like use.

So shall each youth, assisted by our eyes, . . .
Be rich in ancient brass [coins], though not in gold,
And keep his Lares, though his house be sold.
Pope, Dunciad, lv. 366.

You were my wonders, you my Lars,
In darkling days my sun and stars.
Lovell, Oracle of the Goldfishes.

3. [L. c.] The white-handed gibbon, Hylobates lar. See Hylobates.—4. pl. [NL.] A group of lepidopterous insects.—5. [NL.] A genus of gymnoblastic or tubularian hydroids, type of the family Hydroliaridae.

Lar² (lār), n. [L. Lar or Lars (Lart-), < Etruscan Larth, lord.] Lord: a title prefixed to Etruscan names, properly distinctive of the eldest son, and often mistaken for an integral part of the name. Also Lars.

Appraised the Lyctan custom, spoke of those That lay at wine with Lar and Lucumo.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

Lars Porsena of Clusium,
By the nine gods he swore
That the great house of Tarquin
Should suffer wrong no more.
Macaulay, Horatius.

Laramie group. See group 1.
lararium (lā-rā'ri-um), n.; pl. lararia (-i). [L., < Lar, a household deity: see Lar 1.] Among the ancient Romans, a small shrine in private houses where the Lares were kept and worshipped.

larboard (lār'bōrd; by sailors, lab'erd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also larboard (also leereboard, in connection with and accommodated to steereboard, starboard); prob., with irreg. alteration of d to r by assimilation of the form to that of the associated starboard, < ME. laddeboard (found only once), perhaps for ladebord*, lit. the 'lading-side' (the side on which, in the absence of any reason to the contrary, the cargo is received), < lade, a load, lit. a carrying (confused with the unrelated verb lade, < AS. hladan, lade), + bord, board, side: see *lade*², *lade*¹, *load*¹, *load*², and board. The AS. term was backbord: see etym. of backboard. It is not clear why this term, which remains in other Teut. tongues, gave way in E. to larboard. Cf. starboard (ult. < AS. steorbord, < steor, steer, rudder, + bord, side). The supposition that larboard stands for lower-board*, i. e. left side (D. laager, lower, left; cf. E. obs. higher, right), is untenable; and the statement that larboard and starboard are derived, respectively, from the (supposed) It. terms quella borda, 'that side,' questa borda, 'this side,' is gross nonsense.] I. n. Naut., that side of a ship which is on the left hand of a person facing the bow: opposed to starboard, the right-hand side. The term is now obsolete, the word port having been officially substituted in order to avoid confusion, in hearing orders, with the opposite but like-sounding starboard.

Thay layden in on laddeborde and the lofe wynnes.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 106.
All the way vpon his leerebord was the maine ocean.
Hakluyt's Voyages, p. 5.

We have had enough of action, and of motion we,
Roll'd to starboard, roll'd to larboard, when the surge was seething free. Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters (Choric Song).

II. a. Of or pertaining to the left-hand side of a ship; port: as, the larboard quarter.—Larboard boat, or larboard quarter-boat, the mate's boat of a whaler.

larbowlines (lār'bō'linz or -linz), n. [Lar (board) + bowlines.] Naut., the men of the larboard watch. See watch.

larcener (lār'se-nēr), n. [Larceny + -er 1.] One who commits larceny; a thief.

larcenist (lār'se-nist), n. [Larceny + -ist.] Same as larcener.

larcenous (lär'se-nus), a. [< larceny + -ous.] Thievish; pertaining to, characterized by, or tainted with larceny.

The acquittal of any noble and official thief will not fail to diffuse the most heartfelt satisfaction over the larcenous and burglarious world.

Sydney Smith, Peter Plymley's Letters, iv.

larcenously (lär'se-nus-li), adv. In a larcenous or thievish manner; thievishly.

larceny (lär'se-ni), n. [Formerly also larciny; with added suffix -y, prob. to conform the word to burglary, felony, etc.; earlier larcen, larson*, < OF. larrecin, larcin, F. larcin = Sp. Pg. It. latrocinio, < L. latrocinium (> E. latrocinny), robbery, < latrocinari, praetise freebooting or highway robbery, < latro, a hired servant, a mercenary, a freebooter, robber. Cf. Gr. λάτρις, a hired servant.] In law, the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away, by any person and from any place, of the mere personal goods of another, with a felonious intent to convert them to the taker's own use, and make them his own property, without the consent of the owner; theft. Eust. According to some recent authorities, conversion with felonious intent may be larceny although there was no intent to appropriate the thing to the use of the thief himself. At common law appropriation by an employee or bailee already in lawful possession was not larceny, but at most embezzlement. By modern statute, in several jurisdictions acts formerly amounting only to embezzlement have been made larceny.

Larciny, or theft, by contraction for latrocinny, latrocinium, is distinguished by the law into two sorts. Blackstone, Com., IV. xvii.

Compound larceny. See simple larceny.—Grand larceny, larceny of property having a value equal to or more than a certain amount, which the common law in England fixes at 12*d.*, and which is fixed in the United States at $25, in others at $50.—Petty larceny, larceny of property having a value less than that fixed in the case of grand larceny.—Simple larceny, larceny uncombined with any circumstances of aggravation, such as being committed by the owner's clerks or servants, or from the person: when so combined, it is called compound larceny. Robbery is larceny combined with assault, and is thus compound larceny.

larch (läreh), n. [Early mod. E. larche, *< OF. larçe, laricc = Sp. larice = Pg. larico = It. larice = MD. larchen(boom), D. lorken(boom) = OHG. *lurihha, MHG. larche, lërche, G. lërche, lërche (lerchenbaum) = Dan. lørke, lørke(træ) = Sw. lärk(träd), < L. larix (larice), < Gr. λάριξ (λάρικ-), larch. The W. llars-wyddan, llar-wyddan (gwydden, tree) is after E. The mod. F. name is mélèze.] Any coniferous tree of the genus Larix. The common larch of Europe, L. Europæa, is native in the Alps and their vicinity, and is frequently cultivated in England* lard (lärd), n. [< ME. larde, < OF. lard, F. lard, bacon, fat of swine, blubber of whales, etc., = Sp. Pg. It. lardo = NGr. ζαρός, < L. lardum, laridum, larida, the fat of bacon. Cf. Gr. ζαπίδος, fat, ζαρός, sweet, pleasant, nice.] 1. The fat of swine; bacon; pork.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smoking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A savoury bit that serv'd to relish wine.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Banquets and Philemon, l. 107.

2. The fat of swine after being separated from the flesh and membranes by the process of rendering; the clarified semi-solid oil of hogs' fat. It is a very important article of commerce, being used for many culinary and industrial purposes, in pharmacy as the basis of ointments and cerates, etc. See lard-oil.

lard (lärd), v. [< ME. larden, < F. larder = Sp. lardar = Pg. lardear = It. lardare, lurd; from the noun.] 1. trans. 1. To stuff with bacon or pork; introduce thin pieces of salt pork, ham, or bacon into the substance of (a joint of meat) before cooking, in order to improve its flavor.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Vacation.

4. To apply lard or grease to; baste; grease; besmear.

Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., II. 2. 116.

As smart above
As meat and larded locks can make him. Cowper, Task, iv. 642.

5. To fatten.

And mowell mast to the husband did yield,
And with his nuts larded many wine. Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

Live by meat!
By larding up your bodies! 'tis lewd and lazy. Fletcher, Bonduca, i. 2.

II. † intrans. To grow fat.

In the furrow by, where Ceres lies much spill'd,
The unwieldy larding swine his maw then having fill'd, Lies wallowing in the mire. Drayton, Polyolbion, xiv. 108.

lardacein (lärd-dä'se-in), n. [< lardace(ous) + -in.] A proteid substance found as a deposit in certain diseased organs and tissues of the body. It differs from other proteids in resisting the action of digestive fluids, and in coloring red with iodine alone, and violet or blue with iodine and sulphuric acid.

lardaceous (lärd-dä'shius), a. [< lard, n., + -aceous.] Of, pertaining to, containing, or consisting of lard or lardacein; of the nature of lard; resembling lard.—Lardaceous disease, a morbid condition in which lardacein is deposited or formed in various tissues. Also called albuminoid, waxy, or amyloid disease or degeneration.—Lardaceous tissues, tissues containing lardacein.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxvii.

(b) At length; in or to the full extent; fully: as, to discourse on a subject at large.

I will now declare at large why, in mine opinion, Ioue is fitter than feare.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 31.

This is more at large describ'd in the Gazette of that day.
Evelyn, Diary, June 2, 1672.

(c) In general; as a whole; altogether.

The nation at large gained greatly by the revolution.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 1.

(d) For the whole; free from the customary limitation. In the United States a congressman at large is one elected by the voters of a whole State instead of those of a single district, which is done when the existing apportionment by districts does not provide for all the representatives to which the State is entitled. In some places an alderman or a supervisor at large is elected by a whole city or county, in addition to those elected by wards or townships.—Common at large. See common, n., 4.

larger, v. i. [ME. largen; < large, a. Cf. enlarge, of which large is in part an aphetic form.] To get free. [Rare.]

And most especially by the power and wyll of Almyghty God, with meruaylous dyfficultye, we larged frome the shore.
Sir R. Gwyllforde, Pylygrimage, p. 60.

large (lärj), adv. [ME. large; < large, a.] 1†. Largely; broadly; freely; with license.

Al speke he nevere so rudelyche and large.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 734.

2†. Fully; at large.

A greter payne, as more large apperyth in for-sayde autoryte.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 34.

3. Naut., before the wind; with the wind free or on the quarter, or in such a direction that studding-sails will draw: as, to go or sail large.

We continued running large before the northeast tradewinds for several days.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 20.

4†. Full; at full; in all.

My selfe, with many good frends in ye south-collonie of Virginia, have received such a blow that 400. persons large will not make good our losses.
J. Hudson, quoted in Bradford's Plymouth Plantation, [p. 125].

5. "Big"; boastfully. [Colloq.]—By and large. See by, adv.

large-acred (lärj'ä'kërd), a. Possessing much land.

Heathcote himself, and such large-acred men,
Lords of fat E'sham, or of Lincoln fen,
Buy every stick of wood that lends them heat.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. II. 240.

large-handed (lärj'han'ded), a. Having large hands. Hence—(a) Rapacious; grasping; greedy.

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law!
Shak., T. of A., IV. 1. 11.

(b) Profuse; generous: as, large-handed charity.

large-hearted (lärj'här'ted), a. Having a large heart or liberal disposition; sympathetic; generous; liberal; magnanimous.

Such as made Sheba's curious queen resort
To the large-hearted Hebrew's famous court.
Waller, To the Countess of Carlisle.

large-heartedness (lärj'här'ted-nes), n. Largeness of heart; generosity.

In regard of reasonable and spiritual deales, the effects of this affection are large-heartedness and liberality.
Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, xvii.

largely (lärj'li), adv. [ME. largely; < large, a., + *-ly*².] In a large manner; to a great extent; copiously; diffusely; amply; liberally; bountifully; abundantly; fully: as, the subject was largely discussed.

large-minded (lärj'min'ded), a. Liberal; not narrow in ideas; characterized by breadth of view.

I fear we shall find that, instead of training our girls to be large-minded, useful, agreeable women, we shall have trained them to have little or no real interest in anything.
Nineteenth Century, XXIII. 229.

large-mindedness (lärj'min'ded-nes), n. Liberality of ideas; freedom from narrowness; magnanimity.

largen (lärjn), v. [ME. largen + *-en*¹.] I. intrans. To become large or larger; wax. [Rare.]

And the one eye that meets my view,
Idle and strangely largening, too,
Like that of conscience in the dark,
Seems to make me its single mark.
Lovell, Oracle of the Goldfishes.

II. trans. To make large or larger; enlarge; increase. [Rare.]

No more a vislon, reddened, largened,
The moon dips toward her mountain nest.
Lovell, Appledore, vi.

largeness (lärj'nes), n. The condition or quality of being large. (a) Bigness; bulk; magnitude: as, the largeness of an animal.

Circles are prais'd, not that abound
In largeness, but th' exactly round.
Waller, Long and Short Life.

(b) Comprehension; scope; extensiveness: as, largeness of intellect or of a view.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper.
Jeremy Collier, Friendship.

(c) Extension; amplitude; volume: as, the largeness of an offer.

The Umbrlan champaign, breaking away into the valley of the Tiber, spreads in all the largeness of majestically converging mountain slopes.

J. A. Symonds, Italy and Greece, p. 68.

(d) Freedom; breadth; latitude; unrestraint.

The captain was tried by a council of war, and acquitted by the largeness of his commission.

N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 235.

This largeness of style is the result of that long and profound study of nature which teaches the artist how to select and to give due prominence to the parts which are essential to the main idea, every detail not so essential being subordinated, or, if necessary, omitted.

C. T. Newton, Art and Archæol., p. 402.

(e) Magnanimity.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness.
Bacon.

(f) Liberality.

Lo! Laurence for hna largeness! as holy lore telleth,
That hna mede and hus man-hede for eutere-more shal laste; . . .
He gaf godea men godea goodea and nat to crete lordes.
Piers Plowman (C), xviii. 64.

largess, largesse (lär'jes), n. [ME. largesse, < OF. largesse, F. largesse = Sp. Pg. largueza = It. larghezza, a bounty, < LL. as if largitia* (= L. largitio (n-), a bestowing freely: see largition), < L. largiri, give freely, < largus, large, liberal: see large, a.] 1. Liberality; generosity; bounty. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Avarice maketh alwey mokererea to ben hated, and largesse maketh folk cler of renown.

Chaucer, Boëthius, II. prose 5.

I could not bear to see those eyes
On all with wasteful largesse shine.
Lovell, The Protest.

2. A liberal gift or donation; a present; a bounty bestowed.

Ther mette I cryluge many oon,—
A larges! larges!
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1309.

The great donatives and largesses, upon the dishanding of the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courages.
Bacon, Kingdoms and Estates.

I have not lack'd thy mild reproof,
Nor golden largess of thy praise.
Tennyson, Song.

To cry a largess, to ask for a gift or bounty, as was anciently the custom of the minstrels at feasts.

To crye a largesse by-fore oure lorde oure goode looa to shewe.
Piers Plowman (C), viii. 109.

=Syn. 2. Gratuity, etc. See present, n.

larget (lär'jet), n. A length of iron cut from a bar and of proper size to roll into a sheet. It usually has a weight of about 14 pounds. It is heated preparatory to rolling, and is rolled while hot.

larghetto (lär-get'tō), a. and n. [It., somewhat slow, < largo, < L. largus, large: see large.]

I. a. In music, somewhat slow: noting a passage to be rendered in somewhat slow tempo; not so slow as largo, but usually slower than andante.

II. n. A movement intended to be performed in somewhat slow tempo.

largifical† (lär-jif'i-kal), a. [L. largificus, bountiful, < largus, large, + facere, make.] Generous; bountiful; ample; liberal. Blount.

largifluous† (lär-jif'lū-us), a. [L. largifluus, flowing copiously, copious, < largus, copious (large, copiously), + fluere, flow.] Flowing copiously. Bailey, 1727.

largiloquent† (lär-jil'ō-kwent), a. [L. large, abundantly, + loquen(t)-s, prp. of loqui, speak.] Speaking in a bombastic or boasting manner; grandiloquent. Coles, 1717.

Largina (lär-jin'ä), n. pl. [NL., < Largus + *-ina*².] A subfamily of bugs of the family Pyr-rhocoridae, typified by the genus Largus, having large prominent eyes placed obliquely, no ocelli, triangular face with prominent antenniferous tubercles, and five-jointed antennæ. It is an American group, rich in species of varied forms and colors, extending from the southern United States through most of South America. It would be more regularly Larginae.

largition† (lär-jish'on), n. [OF. largition = It. largizione, < L. largitio (n-), a giving freely, < largiri, give freely, < largus, abundant: see large. Cf. largess.] The bestowment of a largess or gift; bounty.

As wise Spotswood says upon Malcolm the Second, necessity is the companion of immoderate largition, and forceth to unlawful shifts.

Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, l. 225.

largo (lär'gō), a. and n. [It., slow, < L. largus, large.] I. a. In music, slow; noting a passage to be rendered in slow tempo and broad, dignified style.

II. n. A movement intended to be performed in such tempo and style.

Largus (lär'gus), n. [NL., < L. Largus, a Roman surname, < largus, liberal; see large.] The typical genus of bugs of the subfamily Largina. L. succinctus is a broadly ovate brownish-black bug marked with red or orange, found in most parts of the United States.

lariat (lär'i-at), n. [< Sp. la reata, < la, the, + reata, a rope used to tie horses and other animals together; see reata.] 1. A rope or cord used for picketing horses while grazing.—2. A thong or noose used for catching wild animals: called in California, Mexico, and farther south a lasso. Also called reata, often spelled riata. [Western U. S.]

Those tribes, as the Utes, who are unable to procure beef or buffalo skins, make beautiful lariats of thin strips of buckskin plaited together.

R. I. Dodge, Our Wild Indians, p. 252.

larid (lär'id), n. A bird of the family Laridae.

Laridae (lär'i-dō), n. pl. [NL., < Larus + -idae.] A family of long-winged, web-footed swimming birds, with a small free hind toe, and pervious lateral non-tubular nostrils, belonging to the order Longipennes and suborder Gaviae; the gull family. This family includes upward of 125 species, found in every part of the world, of fluviatile, lacustrine, and maritime habits. They are strong and buoyant fliers, subsist on fish, insects, and other animal food, and rear the young in the nest, which they usually build on the ground, laying two or three heavily blotched eggs. The prevailing color is snowy-white with a pearly-blue mantle. The Laridae present four types, usually made the basis of division into as many subfamilies: Lestrinae, the jagers or skua-gulls; Larinae, gulls proper; Sternae, terns or sea-swallowers; and Rhynchopinae, skimmer. See these words, and cuts under Chroicocephalus, gull, ivory-gull, etc.

laridine (lär'i-din), a. Pertaining to the Laridae, or having their characters. Cones.

larigot (lär'i-got), n. [OF. Parigot, the flageolet.] A kind of flageolet, or an organ-stop imitating a flageolet.

larin (lär'in), n. [< Ar. Pers. larin (?).] A money of Persia and Arabia, consisting of silver wire about the size of a quill bent over into the form of a hook, and bearing the name of the reigning monarch. The old larins were worth intrinsically about 20 cents in silver; but later disk-shaped bronze coins of this name were struck, the nominal value of which varied from half a United States cent to 2 cents. See hook-money.

Larinae (lä-ri-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Larus + -inae.] A subfamily of Laridae, having the bill more or less strongly epignathous, with continuous covering, and the tail usually square and of moderate length; the gulls. Some of the smaller species closely resemble terns, but the hooking of the bill is usually distinctive. The Larinae are cosmopolitan, abounding on most sea-coasts and large inland waters. They are noisy voracious birds, subsisting chiefly on fish. The number of species is variously reckoned at from 50 to 75. The leading genera are Larus, Fagophila, Rissa, Chroicocephalus, Rhodostethia, and Xema. See gull?

larine (lär'in), a. Pertaining to the Larinae, or having their characters.

Larix (lä'riks), n. [NL. (P. Miller, 1731), < L. larix, larch; see larch.] A genus of coniferous trees with needle-shaped deciduous leaves; the larches. It belongs to the tribe Abietineae with the pines, true cedars, spruces, and firs, from all of which it is distinguished by its deciduous leaves, which are densely subverticillate-fasciculate in the scaly bud. The reflexed cones are provided with persistent scales, each subtended by a conspicuous bract. There are about 8 species, inhabiting Europe, Asia, and North America. (See larch.) Four fossil species have been described from the Miocene deposits of Germany and Austria.

lark¹ (lärk), n. [ME. larke, contr. of laverock, laverock, laveracke (> E. dial. laverock, larrock, laverock, larriek), < AS. lāferce, lāuerce, earlier lāwerce, lāwerce, lāuriceae, lāurice = Fries. lurke = D. lowerik, leuwerik, leuwerik, leuwerk = MLG. lēwerike, lēwerke, LG. lewerke = OHG. lēwarakha, lērakhā, lērēkhā, lērīkhā, MHG. lēwerche, lēwerich, lēwerch, lēwerch, lēreche, G. lerche, G. dial. löwenockerche = Icel. lævirki = OSW. læríkka, Sw. lärka = Dan. lærke, a lark. Origin unknown; the older forms have the semblance of a contracted compound, but no satisfactory explanation of it appears.] 1. A small oscine passerine bird of the family Alaudidae. Larks are mostly inactiver migratory birds of Europe, Asia, and Africa, the only true larks found in the western hemisphere being those of the genus Eremophila, excepting the occasional occurrence of the skylark as a straggler. Africa is the richest in species. They are chiefly birds of the open country; they nest on the ground, and some are famous for soaring and singing. About 100 species are described, leading genera of which are Eremophila, Alauda, Melanocorypha, Certhilauda, Mirafra, Megalophonus, and Pyrhulauda. The few species which are well known are generally distinguished by qualifying prefixes: as, the skylark, Alauda arvensis; the wood-lark, Alauda arborea; the shore-lark, Eremophila alpestris. See the compounds, and cuts under Alauda, Eremophila, and skylark.

Then perted the pepull, presit to there hold,
And loget the long night till the larke sang.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10000.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phœbus' gins arise,
Shak., Cymbeline, li. 3 (song).

2. A bird like or likened to a lark, but not one of the Alaudidae: with a distinguishing prefix: as, the tillark, meadow-lark, bunting-lark, bush-lark, horse-lark, etc. Such birds are chiefly the titlarks or pipits (see Anthus), and various kinds of finches and buntings.—Dusky lark, the rock-pipit, Anthus obscurus.—Horned lark, a bird of the family Alaudidae, Eremophila alpestris, closely related to the true larks, but distinguished by the development of feathers into a horn-like tuft on the head: common to northern Europe and America.—Rock-lark, the rock-pipit, Anthus obscurus.—Sea-lark. (g) The rock-pipit. (b) A kind of sandpiper.—White or white-winged lark, the snow-bunting. [Eng. (Norfolk).]

lark¹ (lärk), v. i. [< lark¹, n.] To catch or hunt larks.

lark² (lärk), n. [A dial. form, with intrusive r (often not pron.), of lake² (pron. läk, also läk), laik, play; see lake².] A merry or hilarious adventure; a jovial prank or frolic; sport: as, to go on a lark. [Colloq. slang.]

"Pip, old chap," said Joe, . . . "when you're well enough to go out for a ride—what larks!"
Dickens, Great Expectations, lvii.

It will be no end of a lark; just when nobody is thinking about tigers, you go off and kill a tremendous fellow, fifteen or sixteen feet long, and come back covered with glory and mosquito bites. F. M. Crawford, Mr. Isaacs, vii.

lark² (lärk), v. i. [< lark², n. Cf. larrikin.] To frolic; make sport; do anything in a sportive haphazard way. [Colloq. slang.]

Don't lark with the watch, or annoy the police!
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 200.

Jumping the widest brook, and larking over the newest gates in the country. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xiv.

lark-bunting (lärk'bun'ting), n. 1. A spur-bunting or spur-heeled bunting; a bird of the genus Centropus: as, the Lapland lark-bunting, C. lapponica: so called from the long straightened hind claw like a lark's. Also called longspur. See cut under Centropus.—2. The common eorn-bunting, Emberiza miliaria. [Prov. Eng.]

larker (lär'kär), n. A catcher of larks.

lark-finch (lärk'finch), n. A bird of the finch family, Fringillidae, Chondestes grammia, abounding in the western parts of the United States, inhabiting prairies and having some resemblance to a lark in habits. It is 6½ inches long; the head is variegated with black, white, and chestnut; the under parts are white, shaded with gray on the sides, and with a dark blotch on the breast; the tail is mostly black, its feathers tipped with white. The bird is a sweet singer, nests on the ground, lays four or five white eggs with dark zigzag lines, and feeds on seeds and insects like other sparrows. Also called lark-sparrow. See cut under Chondestes.

lark-heeled (lärk'hēld), a. Having a long and straight hind claw, like a lark's; spur-heeled: applied to the coucals, or cuckoos of the genus Centropus.

lark-plover (lärk'pluv'ēr), n. A South American plover-like bird of the subfamily Thinocorinae, such as the gachita, Thinocorus rumicivorus.

lark's-heel (lärks'hēl), n. 1. The Indian cross or garden nasturtium. See Tropæolum.—2. Same as larkspur.

lark-sparrow (lärk'spar'ō), n. Same as lark-finch. Cones.

larkspur (lärk'spär), n. Any plant of the genus Delphinium: so called from the spur-shaped formation of calyx and petals. The common or field larkspur is D. consolida; the rocket-larkspur, D. ajacis; the bee-larkspur, D. elatum. Sometimes also called lark's-heel and lark's-claw.

lark-worm (lärk'wärm), n. A kind of tape-worm, Tania platycephala.

larky (lär'ki), a. [< lark² + -y.] Same as larkish. [Colloq.]

The girls felt larky. . . They tripped gayly along.
George MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine.

larne¹, n. [By apheresis from alarm.] An alarm. Paisgrave.

larne² (lärn), n. [F., a tear, < L. lacrima, a tear: see lacrymal.] 1. A rounded form having a point, and supposed to resemble a tear-drop, as in a pattern of lace.—2. In her., the representation of a tear—that is, a drop argent. See gutté.

larmier (lär'miär), n. [< F. larmier, < larne, a tear: see larne.] 1. In arch., another name for the corona; also, any horizontal member or string-course similar in profile to a corona, Larmiers. A, Greek; B, C, mediæval.

projecting from the face of a wall to throw off rain which would otherwise trickle down. Such larmiers are especially common in mediæval architecture.—2. In zool., the tear-bag; a subcutaneous sebaceous gland or follicle of sundry ruminants, as the Cervidae or deer, situated under the skin below each eye, and opening upon the cheek near the inner corner of the eye to discharge its viscid secretion. It is not a lacrimal gland, but of the nature of Meibomian and other sebaceous follicles, which exude an unctuous and usually odorous substance.

laroid (lär'oid), a. [< Larus + -oid.] Pertaining to the Laridae, or having their characters; laridine.

Laroidæ (lä-rei'dō-ē), n. pl. The Laridae rated as a superfamily, divided into Stereorariidæ (the jagers) and Laridæ.

Larra (lär'ä), n. [NL. (Fabricius).] A genus of fossorial hymenopterous insects of the family Sphægidæ, type of the subfamily Larrinae. It is characterized by the truncate marginal cell, the non-emarginate eyes, three submarginal cells of which the second is petiolate, and the elongate metathorax truncate behind and parallel-sided. These wasps generally burrow in the ground, but a Brazilian one makes a nest of the woolly scrapings of plants. L. semirufa has a black head and thorax and reddish abdomen, and preys on the Rocky Mountain locust (Caloptenus spretus), and probably on other grasshoppers.

Larrada (lär'ä-dä), n. [NL.] A form of the word Larra, recently in current usage among entomologists, proposed by Leach, 1817.

Larrea (lär'ē-ä), n. [NL. (Cavanilles), named after J. A. H. de Larrea, a Spanish patron of art and science.] A genus of polypetalous evergreen shrubs of tropical and subtropical America, belonging to the natural order Zygophylleæ. It is distinguished botanically from Guaiacum and other related genera by its sessile ovary, its hairy luteohiscent Branch of Creosote-bush (Larrea mexicana), with flowers and fruit.

a, leaf, showing nervation; b, flower; c, flower cut longitudinally through the pistil, and showing two introrse stamens; d, stamen, seen from without; e, fruit.

fruit, and its bifoliate leaves, the leaflets being cuneate or abruptly pinnate. There are four known species, natives of Texas, Mexico, southern Brazil, and the Andes. They are unpleasantly odorous balsamiferous shrubs, with knotty two-ranked branches, opposite leaves, persistent stipules, and yellow flowers solitary on short, terminal, interstipular peduncles. L. mexicana is the creosote-bush of Mexico and the arid plains of the southwestern United States.

larrick (lar'ik), a. [Origin obscure.] Careless. [Prov. Eng.]

larrikin (lar-i-kin), a. and n. [Cf. larrick.] A local origin is ascribed to the word in the first quotation. I. a. Rollicking; disorderly; rowdy. [Colloq.]

He [James Dalton, a Melbourne police-sergeant of Irish birth] will be best remembered as the originator of the now universally adopted word larrikin. "They were a-larrikin (darking) down the strate, your worship," said he one day, in describing the conduct of some youths, and the Bench had so much difficulty in understanding what he meant, and the expression was repeated so often, that it passed into a catch-word, and was soon applied universally to youthful roughts. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 345.

Such a larrikin phrase as "O criminal" is to be found at least once in his writings. Literary Era, II. 165.

II. n. A rowdy; a rough; a blackguard; a "hoodlum." [Australia.]

A larrikin is a cross between the street Arab and the hoodlum, with a dash of the rough thrown in to improve the mixture. Arch. Forbes, quoted in Echoes, April 4, 1884.

larrikinism (lar-i-kin-izm), n. [Cf. larrikin + -ism.] The conduct of a larrikin. [Colloq.]

Larrinae (lar-rī'ne), n. pl. [NL., < Larra + -inae.] A small subfamily of fossorial hymenoptera of the family Sphegidae, typified by the genus Larra or Larrada. They are of small size and slender form, with narrowly ovoid abdomen, concealed labrum, notched mandibles, and a spine at the base of the middle tibia.

larrup (lar'up), v. t.; pret. and pp. larruped or larrapped, ppr. larruping or larrapping. [Prob. < D. larpen, thresh with flails; cf. larp, a lash. The E. form larrup (for larp*) may represent the strongly rolled r of the D.: so larum, alarum, for alarm.] To flog; thrash. [Colloq. slang.]

There was no rope-dancing for me; I danced on the bare ground, and was larruped with the rope. Dickens, Hard Times, v.

larry (lar'i), n. Same as lorry.

Lars (lärz), n. Same as *Lar*².

larsont, n. See larseny. Bailey, 1731.

larum (lar'um or lär'um), n. [Abbr. of alarum = alarm.] 1. Alarm; a warning sound; a noise giving notice of danger. [Obsolete or poetical.]

The wailfull warre in time doth yeelde to peace,
The larums lowde and trumpete sounde doth cease.

Turberville, Atter Misadventures come Good Haps.

And the first larum of the cock's shrill throat

May prove a trumpet, summoning your ear

To horrid sounds of hostile feet within.

Cowper, Task, iv. 569.

2t. An alarm-clock or alarm-watch.

Of this nature likewise was the larum mentioned by Walchius, which, though it were but two or three inches big, yet would both wake a man and of itself light a candle for him, at any set hour of the night.

Bp. Wilkins, Dædalus, iii.

larum (lar'um or lär'um), v. t. [Cf. larum, n.] To alarm, frighten, or warn with noise.

Down, down they larum, with impetuous whirl,

The Pindars and the Miltons of a Curll.

Pope, Dunciad, iii. 163.

Larus (lä'rus), n. [NL., < LL. larus, < Gr. λάρος, a ravenous sea-bird.] A genus of Laridae; the gulls proper. The name formerly covered most of the family; it is now usually restricted to species of large size, with square tail, hooked bill, normal hallux, and mostly white plumage, with a colored mantle and without a colored hood. L. canus is the common mew-gull or seamew of Europe, etc. L. argentatus is the herring-gull. L. marinus is the great black-backed gull. L. glaucus is the ice-gull or burgomaster. See gull, mew-gull, etc., and cuts under gull, herring-gull, and burgomaster.

larva (lä'r-vä), n.; pl. larvæ (-vê). [Also rarely larve (in def. 2); = D. G. Dan. larve = Sw. larv (< F.); = F. larve = Sp. Pg. It. larva, < NL. larva, larva. < L. larva, a ghost, specter, mask, skeleton.] 1. In Rom. myth., a ghost; a specter; a shade; generally in the plural. Compare *Lar*¹, 1.

The dead were powerful also to do harm, unless they were duly propitiated with all the proper rites; they were spirits of terror as well as of good: in this fearful sense the names Lemures and still more Larvæ were appropriated to them. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 813.

2. In zool.: (a) The early form of any animal which during its development is unlike its parent: thus the tadpole, the larva of the frog, is unlike the frog. It is most familiar as the name for an insect in the caterpillar or grub state; the first stage after the egg in the metamorphoses of insects, preceding the pupa or chrysalis; the first condition of an insect at its issuing from the egg, when it is usually in the form of a grub, caterpillar, or maggot. The term was applied by Linnaeus in the sense that the larval stage of an insect masks or hides the true character or imago of the species. It was long only chiefly an entomological term, but is now commonly extended to other animals than insects, and especially of other arthropods which undergo transformation. See pupa, imago, and cuts under Asterioidea, Cirripedia, Diptera, glass-crab, hay-moth, Holothuroidea, and house-fly. (b) [cap.] A genus of mollusks. Humphreys, 1797. (c) [cap.] A genus of birds: same as Alca. Vieillot, 1816.—Cornute larva. See cornute.—Larva of Lovén, or Lovén's larva, the larval form of an oceanic archannelid worm, Polygordius: so called before the adult had been discovered. See Polygordius, Archannelida.—Larva pupigera, the rat-tailed grub of some dipterous insects, as a syrphid fly, with several pairs of hooked abdominal legs, and a long slim tail carried bent over the body.—Painter's-easel larva. See Pluteus.

larvæform (lä'r-vê-fôrm), a. An erroneous variant of larviform.

larval (lä'r val), a. [= Sp. Pg. larval, < L. larvalis, pertaining to a ghost (NL. pertaining to a larva); < larva, a ghost: see larva.] Of or pertaining to a larva; characteristic of larvæ: as, larval character; larval habits.

The magpie moth . . . attacks in its larval state plums, spricots, and even the sloe and the blackthorn. Edinburgh Rev., CLXIV. 361.

Larval generation, parthenogenesis.
Larvalia (lä'r-vä'li-ä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of larvalis: see larval.] One of two classes of tunicates or ascidians (the other being Saccata), considered as a branch of vertebrates under the name Urochorda (which see). The Larvalia consist of the Appendicularia, or those ascidians which retain the urochord throughout life. E. K. Lankester.

larvarium (lä'r-vä'ri-um), n.; pl. larvariums, larvaria (-umz, -ä). [NL., < larva + -arium.] 1. In entom., a shelter of leaves, silk, or other material constructed by a caterpillar, into which it retreats when not feeding.—2. An entomological hatching-house; a place or appliance for rearing insects.

Larvarium, in which to hatch moths and butterflies. Tutthill, New York Daily Times, May, 1859.

larvate (lä'r-vät), a. [= F. larvé = Pg. larvado = It. larvato, masked, < NL. larvatus, masked (cf. L. larvatus, pp. of larvare, bewitch), < L. larva, a ghost, mask: see larva.] Masked; clothed as with a mask.

larvated (lä'r-vä-ted), a. [Cf. larvate + *-ed*².] Same as larvate: sometimes applied to certain diseases when their ordinary characters are masked or concealed, as typhoid fever. Quain.

larve (lärv), n. and a. [Cf. F. larve, larva: see larva.] I. n. Same as larva. [Rare.]

II. a. Same as larval. [Rare.]

larviform (lä'r-vi-fôrm), a. [Cf. NL. larva, a larva (see larva), + L. forma, form.] 1. Resembling a larva.—2. Larval in form or structure; being a larva, as a grub, maggot, or caterpillar.

larvigerous (lä'r-vij'e-rus), a. [Cf. NL. larva, a larva (see larva), + L. gerere, carry.] Bearing a larval skin, as the pupæ of Diptera.

When ready to change into the larvigerous pupæ they (maggots of the bot-fly) dislodge themselves and crawl out or are ejected by the animal in coughing. Stand. Nat. Hist., II. 428.

Larvipara (lä'r-vip'a-rä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of larviparus: see larviparus.] Insects which bring forth larvæ instead of eggs.

larviparous (lä'r-vip'a-rus), a. [Cf. NL. larviparus, < larva, larva, + L. parere, bring forth.] Bringing forth larvæ; giving birth to young which have already passed from the egg to the larval stage; producing maggots ovoviviparously, as the common blow-fly.

larvivorous (lä'r-viv'o-rus), a. [Cf. NL. larva, larva, + L. vorare, devour.] Devouring larvæ; feeding on grubs, caterpillars, and the like; erucivorous.

larvigeal (lä-rin'jê-al), a. and n. [Cf. larynx (laryng-) + -eal.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the larynx: as, larvigeal vessels, nerves, muscles, etc.; larvigeal sounds.

II. n. A larvigeal nerve or artery.—Inferior larvigeal, recurrent larvigeal, a branch of the pneumogastric nerve which reaches the larynx after winding around a large artery: on the right side of the body, around the subclavian; on the left, around the arch of the aorta.—Superior larvigeal, a branch of the pneumogastric nerve which passes direct through the thyrohyoid membrane to the larynx.

larvigean (lä-rin'jê-an), a. [Cf. larynx (laryng-) + -e-an.] Same as larvigeal. [Rare.]

larvigeotomic (lä'r-in-jek-tom'ik), a. [Cf. laryngectomy + -ic.] Pertaining to laryngectomy.
larvigeotomy (lä-rin-jek'tô-mi), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + ἐκτομή, a cutting out (< ἐκ, out, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμειν, cut).] The excision of the larynx.

larviges, n. Latin plural of larvigeal.

larvigeismal (lä-rin-jis'mäl), a. [Cf. NL. larvigeism(us) + -al.] Pertaining to or characterized by larvigeism.

Tracheotomy in larvigeismal epilepsy. Encyc. Brit., XI. 390.

larvigeism (lä-rin-jis'mus), n. [NL., in form as if < Gr. λαρυγισμός, a shouting (< λαρυγίζειν, shout, bawl, < λάρυξ (laryng-), larynx), but in sense directly < larynx (laryng-) + -ismus, E. -ism: see larynx.] Spasm of the glottis, causing contraction or closure of the opening.—Laryngismus stridulus, spasm of the glottis occurring independently of local trouble, usually associated withrickets, a disease for the most part of young children. Also called thyric asthma, Kopp's asthma, Müller's asthma.

larvigeitic (lä-r-in-jit'ik), a. [Cf. laryngitis + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of laryngitis.

larvigitis (lä-r-in-jit'is), n. [NL., < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + -itis.] Inflammation of the larynx.

larvigo-fissure (lä-ring'gō-fish'ūr), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + L. fissura, a cleaving, fissure: see fissure.] In surg., the division of the thyroid cartilage.

larvigeological (lä-ring-gō-loj'i-käl), a. [Cf. laryngology + -ic-al.] Of or pertaining to laryngology.

larvigeologist (lä-ring-gō'lō-jist), n. [Cf. laryngology + -ist.] One versed in laryngology.

larvigeology (lä-ring-gō'lō-ji), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of the larynx; a treatise on the larynx and its diseases.

larvigeophony (lä-ring-gōf'ō-ni), n. [Cf. Gr. λαρυγγοφωνος, sounding from the throat, < λάρυγξ (laryng-), throat, larynx, + φωνή, sound.] The sound of the voice as heard through the stethoscope applied over the larynx.

larvigeophthisis (lä-ring-gō-ti'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + φθίσις, consumption: see phthisis.] In pathol., tuberculosis of the larynx.

larvigeorrhæa, laryngorrhæa (lä-ring-gō-rê'ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + ροία, a flow, < ρῆν, flow.] In pathol., excessive secretion from the larynx.

larvigeoscope (lä-ring-gō-skōp), n. [= F. larvigeoscope, < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + σκοπεῖν, see.] A contrivance for examining the larynx and trachea. It consists of a plane mirror introduced into the mouth, and placed at such an angle that the light thrown on it from a concave reflector, in the center of which is an aperture, is made to illuminate the larynx, the image of which is reflected back through the aperture in the reflector to the eye of the observer.

larvigeoscopic (lä-ring-gō-skōp'ik), a. [Cf. laryngoscope + -ic.] Pertaining to the laryngoscope, or to inspection of the larynx.

larvigeosopical (lä-ring-gō-skōp'i-käl), a. [Cf. laryngoscope + -al.] Same as larvigeoscopic.

Laryngologists . . . have utilized this property [of cocaine] only in making larvigeosopical examinations. Therapeutic Gazette, VIII. 559.

larvigeoscopically (lä-ring-gō-skōp'i-käl-i), adv. By means of the laryngoscope.

On attempting to examine the throat larvigeoscopically, a most frightful spasm came on. Medical News, XLVIII. 717.

larvigeoscopist (lä-ring-gō-skōp'ist), n. [Cf. laryngoscope + -ist.] One versed in the use of the laryngoscope; one who practises inspection of the larynx.

larvigeoscopy (lä-ring-gō-skō-pi), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + -σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] The art of using the laryngoscope; inspection of the larynx.

larvigeospasm (lä-ring-gō-spazm), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + σπασμός, spasm.] In pathol., spasm of the constrictors of the glottis.

larvigestenosis (lä-ring-gō-stê-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + στενωσις, a being straitened.] In pathol., contraction of the larynx.

larvigeotome (lä-ring-gō-tōm), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + τομή, cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμειν, cut.] An instrument for performing laryngotomy.

larvigeotomic (lä-ring-gō-tom'ik), a. [Cf. laryngotomy + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of laryngotomy.

larvigeotomy (lä-ring-gō-tō-mi), n. [Cf. LGr. λαρυγγοτομία, < Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + τομή, a cutting, < τέμνειν, ταμειν, cut.] The operation of making an incision into the larynx, to relieve respiration when obstructed, to remove foreign bodies, or for other reasons.

larvigeotracheal (lä-ring-gō-trä-kê-al), a. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), throat (larynx), + τραχεία, trachea: see trachea.] Of or pertaining to both the larynx and the trachea.

In all the Amphibia, a glottis, placed on the ventral wall of the oesophagus, opens into a short larvigeotracheal chamber. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 162.

larvigeotracheotomy (lä-ring-gō-trä-kê-ot'ō-mi), n. [Cf. Gr. λάρυγξ (laryng-), larynx, + τραχεία, trachea, + τομή, a cutting. Cf. tracheotomy.] Incision into the larynx and the trachea involving the cricoid and one or more of the upper tracheal rings.

larynx (lar'ingks), n.; pl. larynges, rarely larynxes (lā-rin'jōz, lar'ingks-sez). [NL., < Gr. λάρυγξ (larynx), the upper part of the windpipe, also the throat, gullet.] The part of the windpipe in which vocal sound is made and modulated; the organ of phonation. In man the larynx is the enlarged and modified upper end of the trachea, with some associated parts, as the epiglottis. It opens by the glottis into the pharynx; below, its cavity is directly continuous with that of the trachea or windpipe. It causes the protuberance of the throat called Adam's apple or pomum Adami. The framework of the larynx is cartilaginous and composed of nine cartilages—namely, the thyroid, the largest, in two symmetrical halves, forming most of the walls; the cricoid, the enlarged upper ring of the trachea; a pair of arytenoids, small pyramidal pieces; a pair of cornicula laryngis or cartilages of Santorini; a pair of cuneiform cartilages or cartilages of Wrisberg.

Fig. 1. A, larynx; B, epiglottis, situated above the glottis or entrance to the larynx; C, C, trachea; D, esophagus or gullet. Fig. 2. A, C, trachea; B, hyoid bone; E, E, thyrohyoid membrane; F, thyrohyoid ligament; G, thyroid cartilage; H, cricoid cartilage; P, cricothyroid ligament.

From the arytenoid cartilages, which sit on the posterior part of the cricoid ring, three folds of membrane pass forward on each side: above and from the tips of the arytenoids, inclosing the cornicula laryngis and cartilages of Wrisberg, the aryteno-epiglottic folds pass to the lateral margins of the epiglottis; next below, the false vocal cords run from the anterior surface of the arytenoids to the angle between the two halves of the thyroid, while below this again the true vocal cords are attached behind to the vocal processes of the arytenoid and in front are inserted close to the angle of the thyroid below the insertion of the false vocal cords. The true vocal cords bound the anterior two thirds of the glottis, the posterior third lying between the arytenoid cartilages. Between the true and the false vocal cords on each side there is a recess called a ventricle or sinus of the larynx, which leads into a pouch, the sacculus laryngis. The nerves of the larynx are branches of the vagus. The larynx acts at once as a gate guarding the windpipe and as a vocal organ. It is closed by the approximation of the three mucous folds of one side to those of the other, the epiglottis contributing to the closing of the gap between the aryteno-epiglottic folds. In phonation the arytenoid cartilages are swung around so as to close the rima respiratoria and to bring the vocal cords close to one another and parallel. The vocal cords are drawn taut by intrinsic laryngeal muscles, according to the height of pitch desired. The larynx is larger in men than in women and boys by about one third. The average length of the vocal cords is $\frac{1}{2}$ of an inch in men, $\frac{1}{3}$ in women; of the slit of the glottis, $\frac{1}{4}$ in men, $\frac{1}{5}$ in women. The cracking of the voice in boys at the approach of puberty is due to the rapid growth and change of shape of the larynx: the size is almost doubled in two or three years. In various animals the larynx may be situated anywhere along the windpipe, or even in the bronchial tube. It is generally at the top of the trachea. In birds there are two larynges, one at the top, the other at the bottom of the trachea. The latter is called the syrix. When the syrix is still more inferior in position it is wholly bronchial; then there are a pair, right and left, making, with the one at the top, three larynges. See cut under mouth.

las¹, n. A Middle English form of lace.
las², a. An obsolete variant of less¹.
lascar (las-kär'), n. [Also lashkar, luskur; < Hind. lashkar, a regimental servant, a native sailor, prop. lashkari, belonging to the army, < Pers. lashkari, belonging to the army, military, a soldier, < lashkar (> Hind. lashkar), an army; cf. Ar. ashkar, army.] 1. In the East Indies, a native tent-pitcher, camp-follower, or regimental servant. [A common name, but usually treated as a proper name.]

Some Lascares and Sepoys were now sent forward to clear the road.
Orme, Hist. Military Transac. in Indostan, I. 394.

2. An East Indian sailor. [The more common use.]

The ship's company numbered about two hundred, all told, one-fourth of whom were Lascares and Malays, employed as stokers and coal-trimmers.
J. W. Palmer, Up and Down the Irrawaddi, p. 14.

laset, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of lace.

laser¹ (lä'sér), n. [< ME. laser = F. Pg. laser = Sp. laser = It. lasero, < L. laser, juice of laserpitium.] A gum-resin obtained from the north of Africa, and greatly esteemed by the ancients as an antispasmodic, deobstruent, and diuretic. It is supposed to have been produced by Thapsia Garganica or one of the varieties of that plant. Also called asadulcia.

VI that be soure, eke stamppe a quantitee of laseris with wyne, hem two hemselve,
 And heide it in the croppes.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 115.

laser², n. An obsolete form of leisure.

Laserpiticæ (las'er-pi-ti'ē-ō), n. pl. [NL. (Tausch, 1834), < Laserpitium + -æ.] A subtribe of plants (made by Bentham and Hooker a tribe of the Umbellifera), of which Laserpitium is the type. It contains five genera of tall perennial herbs, distinguished by their subterrene fruit, the carpels often winged; they are native chiefly of the Mediterranean region and the Canary Islands.

Laserpitium (las'er-pish'i-um), n. [NL. (Sp. Pg. laserpitio = It. laserpizio), < L. laserpitium, a plant, also called silphium, from which laser was obtained.] A genus of plants, natural order Umbellifera, type of the tribe Laserpiticæ, containing about 20 species, natives of Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia; the *laserwort*s. They are tall perennial herbaceous plants, with pinnate leaves and compound many-rayed umbels of yellowish or white flowers, the fruit with 8 wing-like appendages. L. latifolium, the herb-frankincense or laserwort, is a native of mountainous districts of Europe, growing in dry and stony places. The root abounds with a gum resin, which is acrid and hitter, and is said to be a violent purgative. L. Siler is a native of the mountains of central and southern Europe.

laserwort (lä'sér-wèrt), n. A plant of the genus Laserpitium, especially L. latifolium.

lash¹ (lash), n. [< ME. lashe, lasshe, lasche, a stroke, the flexible end of a whip, = MD. lasche, lasche, a piece sewed on, a patch, D. lasch, a piece, joint, seam, notch, = MLG. lasche, las, LG. lasche, a flap, dag, = G. lasche, a flap, joint, scarf, = Sw. Dan. lask, a joint, scarf, groove for joining timber; cf. ML. lascia, a flap or dag; perhaps ult. (like lash² and lask¹, q. v.) < L. laxus, loose, or from the same root: see lar¹ and lag¹. The senses of the noun, and esp. of the verb, vary, indicating some mixture with other words; in the noun are prob. involved lace (ME. las) and leash. The Ir. lasg, a lash, whip, whipping, is of E. origin.] 1. The flexible part of a whip, usually a cord of braided strips of leather; hence, anything flexible used for flogging; a whip; a scourge: as, to lay on the lash; punishment by the lash.

Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film,
 Her waggoner a small gray-coated gnat.
Shak., R. and J., I. 4. 63.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it. Addison.

A scourge hung with lashes he bore.
Cowper, Morning Dream.
 I believe that a blow from the cruel lash would have broken her [a mare's] heart. . . . The lash is hardly ever good for the sex.
C. D. Warner, Baddeck, Ill.

2. A stroke with a whip or anything pliant and tough; hence, a stroke of satire; a sarcasm; an expression or retort that cuts or gives pain.

Many a stripe and many a grievous lashe
 She gaven to them that wolden hours be.

Lasioderma (lä'si-ō-dēr'mā), n. [NL., < Gr. λάσιος, hairy, woolly, + δέρμα, skin.] A genus of beetles of the family Ptinidae, of wide distribution. L. serricornis and L. laeve are among the few insects which eat tobacco. Their larvae feed upon the weed in its dried state, doing much damage.

Lasioideæ (lä-si-ōi'dē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. and C. de Candolle), < Lasia + -oideæ.] A tribe of plants of the Aroidae, or arum family, embracing 19 genera. It includes the subtribes Lasiæ, Amorphophallacæ, Nepthytideæ, and Montrichardieæ.

Lasiopetalæ (lä'si-ō-pe-tā'lē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Jacques Gay, 1831), < Lasiopetalum + -æ.] A tribe of plants of the natural order Sterculiaceæ, typified by the genus Lasiopetalum. It embraces, in modern systems, 8 genera, having hermaphrodite flowers destitute of petals (or with the petals reduced to mere scales), five anther-bearing stamens lightly united at the base and alternate with the sepals, the anthers two-celled with the cells parallel, and five or fewer non-anther-bearing stamens opposite the sepals.

Lasiopetalum (lä'si-ō-pet'a-lum), n. [NL. (James Edward Smith, 1798), < Gr. λάσιος, hairy, woolly, + πέταλον, a leaf (petal): see petal.] A genus of sterculiaceae plants, the type of the tribe Lasiopetalæ, distinguished from related genera by having the sepals united without a median nerve. There are about 30 species, growing in extratropical Australia. They are stately pubescent shrubs, with flowers in racemes or branching cymes opposite the leaves or in their axils. Several species (as L. parviflorum, L. ferrugineum, L. macrophyllum) are cultivated as greenhouse-plants.

Lasiurus (las-i-ū'rūs), n. [NL., < Gr. λάσιος, hairy, woolly, + οὐρά, tail.] A genus of American chiropters of the family Vespertilionidae; the red bats. In typical species the back of the inferomembrane is densely furry. The common New York or red bat is L. noveboracensis; the hoary bat is L. cinereus or pruinosus. See cut under bat.

Lasius (lä'si-us), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1804), < Gr. λάσιος, hairy, rough, shaggy, woolly.] 1. A genus of ants of the family Formicidae, having the abdomen not prolonged anteriorly, and the ocelli of the workers very small, indistinct, or wanting. It is widely distributed, with 12 European and 6 North American species; 4 are common to both continents. L. flavus is an example.

2. A genus of bees of the family Apidae. Jurine, 1807. [Not in use.]—3. Same as Lasia, 1. Latreille, 1829.—4. A genus of beetles of the family Malacodermidae: synonymous with Dasytes of Paykull, 1798. Motschulsky, 1845.

lasket (las'ket), n. [Cf. lash¹, n.] Small lines sewed in loops to the bottom of a sail to secure a bonnet.

laspring (las'pring), n. [Cf. lax².] The smelt or young salmon of the first year. [Local, Eng.]

The smolt, or young salmon, is by the fishermen of some rivers called a laspring.
Yarrell, British Fishes.

lasque, n. See lask⁵.

lass¹ (lās), n. [< ME. lasse*, lysse (rare); perhaps contr. < W. lodes, fem. of lward, a lad: see lad¹. The word is usually explained, in its mod. form (the ME. form being hitherto unnoticed), as a contr. of laddess; but laddess is an affected form, rare, and not found before the 18th century. Lass is now regarded as simply the fem. of lad¹.] 1. A girl: in familiar language often applied to a woman of any age.

The last of thos lefe children was a lysse faire, Polexena the port, prise of all other.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 1499.

And with your piteous layes have learnt to breed Compassion in a country lasses hart.

Spenser, Astrophel, Prol.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever Ran on the greensward. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 156.

God yeve this monk a thousand last quad year [cargoes of bad years].
Chaucer, Prof. to Prioress's Tale, l. 4.

2. A load of some commodity with reference to its weight and commercial value; hence, a particular weight or measure, varying in amount in different localities and for different commodities. As an absolute measure, a last is generally reckoned at 4,000 pounds; but the word is now rarely met with, and only in local or technical use. A last of flax or feathers is 1,700 pounds; of wool, 12 sacks; of corn, 10 quarters or 80 bushels; of meal or ash, 12 barrels; of gunpowder, 24 barrels; of codfish or white herrings, 12 barrels; of red herrings, 20 cades (of 500 or 720 fishes each); of pitch or tar, 14 barrels. A last of leather is given as 20 dickers of 10 hides each; but a last of hides is 12 dozen.

They will pay . . . for a last of hides to be carryed out of our realm and dominion haife a marke above that which heretofore was payed.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 137.

Even as in ships of war, whose lasts of powder
 Are laid, men think, to make them last,
Chapman, Bussey D'Ambos, v. 1.

These flashing ships doe take yeerly two hundred thousand last of fish, twine barrels to a last, which amounta to 300000 pounds by the fishermen's price.
 Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 217.

On before the freshening gale,
That fills the snow-white lateen sail,
Swiftly our light felucca flies.

Longfellow, Golden Legend, v.

We set two huge triangular lateen sails on our low masts, which raked forwards instead of backwards.

R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 15.

Lateen yard, a yard on which a lateen sail is spread.

lateener (la-tē'nēr), n. A lateen-rigged boat.

A two-masted lateener. Harper's Mag., LXXV. 462.

lately (lāt'li), adv. Recently; of late; not long ago; not long before.

The Marquis of Northampton and Sir Henry Gates, lately before condemned to die, were now pardon'd, and set at liberty. Baker, Chronicles, p. 317.

Many a fair cheek was blanched with woe, which had lately mantled with secret admiration.
Irving, Gransda, p. 101.

latent, n. An early form of latten.

latence (lāt'ens), n. [< laten(t) + -cc.] Same as latency.

Infinite Love,
Whose latence is the plenitude of all.
Coleridge, Destiny of Nations.

latency (lāt'ēn-si), n. [< laten(t) + -cy.] The state of being latent or concealed; unobserved or undeveloped existence.

Algae, seeds of phanerogamic plants, infusoria, and even Mollusca and leeches, were found to be thrown into a condition of sleep, or latency. Science, IV. 210.

With minor criminals, what society ought to aim at is the reduction of the criminal anomaly to latency. Mind, XIII. 452.

In disinfecting filth, the work . . . ought to be repeated several times, remembering the law of latency in connection with disease-germs. Sanitarium, XIV. 145.

lateness (lāt'nes), n. 1. The state of being late or tardy, or of coming or appearing after the usual or proper time: as, the lateness of harvest.—2. Time far advanced in any particular period: as, lateness in the season.

Your lateness in life . . . might be improper to begin the world with, but almost the eldest men may hope to see changes in a court. Swift, To Gay, Nov. 23, 1727.

3. Reeney, absolute or comparative; recent origin, discovery, etc.

latent (lāt'tent), a. [= F. latent = Sp. Pg. It. latente, < L. laten(t)-s, pp. of latere, lurk, lie hidden, be concealed; cf. Gr. λᾰθάνειν, λᾰθάνω, be hidden.] 1. Hidden; concealed; not visible or apparent; not manifested: as, latent motives; latent germs of disease.

They are shut and latent in dead bodies, though they be open and manifest in live.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 194.

The glittering helm by moonlight will proclaim
The latent robber, and prevent his game.
Dryden, Speeches of Ajax and Ulysses, l. 172.

Every breach of veracity indicates some latent vice, or some criminal intention, which an individual is ashamed to avow. D. Stewart, Outlines of Moral Philosophy.

To evoke the latent genius of the nation, and to direct it to the spheres in which it is most fitted to excel, is one of the highest ends of enlightened statesmanship.

Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., III.

2. In bot., dormant or undeveloped: said of buds which are not externally manifest until stimulated to growth.—Latent ambiguity, a doubt as to the meaning of a document, not apparent on the face of the document, but raised by evidence of some extrinsic fact. Thus, a legacy "to my cousin John Doe" is not ambiguous until it appears that the testator had two cousins of the same name; and the doubt raised by this fact is called a latent ambiguity, as distinguished from one that is patent or obvious on the mere reading of the document.—Latent fault, in law, a blemish or defect in goods purchased which was concealed from or not observable by the buyer before acceptance of the goods.—Latent function, a function formed by subtracting the same variable from every constituent of the principal diagonal of a matrix, and then forming the determinant of the resulting matrix.—Latent heat. See heat, 2.—Latent hypermetropia. See hypermetropia.—Latent idea, in psychol., an unconscious mental modification, as an idea having a tendency to reproduce itself in consciousness.—Latent period of a disease, the period that elapses before the presence of the disease is manifested by symptoms. Thus, the latent period of smallpox, measles, etc., is the time that elapses from the moment of infection to the appearance of the symptoms. Also called period of incubation.—Latent roots of a matrix, in math., the roots of the equation formed by subtracting an unknown quantity from each of the constituents of the principal diagonal of the matrix, and then regarding it as a determinant. = Syn. J. Covert, Occult, etc. See secret.

latently (lā'tent-li), adv. In a latent manner.
later (lā'tēr), adv. At a subsequent time or period; afterward; hereafter: also used with (redundant) on: as, I will see you later; it may be done later on.

But when the wreath of March has blossom'd, . . .
Or later, pay one visit here.

Ternyson, To F. D. Mauricie.

latera, n. Plural of latus.

laterad (lat'ē-rad), adv. [L. latus (later-) + -ad]. In zool., to or toward the side; laterally in direction.

Caudal cells were connected with the postero-lateral column, while cephalad and laterad they could be seen to be connected with the direct cerebellar tract.

Amer. Jour. Psychol., 1. 492.

lateral (lat'ē-rāl), a. and n. [= F. latéral = Sp. lateral = It. laterale, < L. lateralis, belonging to the side, < latus (later-), a side. Cf. collateral, bilateral, trilateral, quadrilateral, etc.] 1. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the side; situated at, proceeding from, or directed to a side: as, a lateral projection; lateral shoots or branches; a lateral view.

Thwart of these, as fierce,
Forth rush the Levant and the Pomet winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise.

Milton, P. L., x. 705.

I at length found my way to a lateral portal, which was the every-day entrance to the mansion.

Iring, Sketch-Book, p. 334.

The central aisle is twice the width, and more than twice the height, of the lateral aisles, and has a well-defined clerestory.

J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., 1. 508.

2. In anat. and zool., situated on either side of the median vertical longitudinal plane of the body; lying laterad of the meson: as, the lateral ventricles of the brain; the lateral line of a fish; the lateral margin of a thorax, elytrum, or abdomen.—3. In conch., specifically, situated on either side of the hinge: contrasted with cardinal: as, the lateral tooth of a bivalve. Also admedian.—4. In bot., belonging to or borne upon the side of any organ: sometimes contrasted with terminal (as, lateral buds), sometimes with medial (as, lateral ribs or nerves of a leaf or glume).—5. In physics and mech., at right angles to a line of motion or of strain. Lateral is also sometimes inaccurately used for transverse, or at right angles to the longest axis of a body: thus, lateral (in place of transverse) pressure and strength are spoken of.

The lateral expansion of the ice from internal pressure explains in a clear and satisfactory manner how rock-basins may be excavated by means of land-ice.

J. Croll, Climate and Cosmology, p. 254.

Lateral axes of a crystal, those axes situated in a plane parallel to the base.—Lateral callosities of the metanotum, more or less inflated spaces on the sides of the metathorax, seen in many Diptera.—Lateral conjugation. See conjugation.—Lateral cuneate funiculus. Same as funiculus of Rolando (which see, under funiculus).—Lateral curvature of the spine. See curvature.—Lateral equator, a linear equation.—Lateral eyes, eyes on the outer sides of the head, as in bees.—Lateral fin, one of the paired side fins of a fish, as the pectoral and ventral; opposed to vertical fin.—Lateral force, a force at right angles to the direction of the motion of the particle to which the force is applied.—Lateral foveolæ. See foveola.—Lateral gemination. See gemination.—Lateral ginglymus. Same as cycloarthrosis.—Lateral line, in ichth. See line, 2.—Lateral lists. See list, 4.—Lateral lobes, in the Hemiptera, two divisions of the anterior part of the head, one on each side of the tylus or central lobe.—Lateral moraine motion, etc. See the nouns.—Lateral operation, in surg., a mode of cutting for stone, in which the prostate gland and neck of the bladder are divided laterally. See lithotomy.—Lateral sclerosis of the spinal cord, primary apastic paraplegia. See paraplegia.—Lateral stress, a stress at right angles to the strain which produces it.—Lateral sulcus, a groove on the outer side of the crus cerebri, marking the boundary between the crista and tegmentum.—Lateral ventricle, one of the two ventricles of the cerebral hemispheres.—Lateral vibration, in acoustics, a vibration in a plane at right angles to the length of the vibrating body, as in a violin-string; a transverse vibration: opposed to longitudinal vibration.

II. n. 1. In conch.: (a) A lateral or admedian tooth of a bivalve, as distinguished from a cardinal tooth. See cut under bivalve. (b) One of the uncini, or uncinial teeth of the radula.

For the uncinif he (E. R. Lankester) adopts the term laterals, which I venture to think is undesirable.

W. H. Dall, Science, IV. 81.

2. A side branch or division of anything; a part projecting from one side; specifically, in a grape-vine, one of the side shoots which spring from the axils of the leaves of a main shoot.

These stocks were budded in the main stem, not on laterals as now.

Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 359.

A symmetric pair of perfect laterals spring from its [the moraine's] graceful curve like the tangent from its chord.

Amer. Jour. Sci., XXIX. 388.

laterality (lat'ē-rāl'i-ti), n. [< lateral + -ity].

1. The quality of being lateral.—2. The state or condition of having sides.

We may as reasonably conclude a right and left laterality in the ark or naval edifice of Noah.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., lv. 5.

laterally (lat'ē-rāl-i), adv. In a lateral manner, direction, or position; laterad; sidewise.

lateral-temporal (lat'ē-rāl-tēmp'ō-rāl), a. An epithet applied to one of three principal fossæ of the skull of Lacertilia, situated between the squamosal and the postfrontal above, the jugal and quadrate in front and behind, and the quadratojugal ligament below. Huxley.

Lateran (lat'ē-rān), a. [< L. Lateranus, a Roman family name: see def.] Pertaining to or connected with a locality in Rome called the Lateran: as, the Lateran palace or basilica; the Lateran councils. The site so named belonged in the first century to the family Lateranus, was confiscated by Nero, and was given by Constantine to the Bishop of Rome, together with the palace and the basilica built upon it. This Lateran basilica, originally called the Church of Christ the Saviour, has since the tenth century borne the name of St. John Lateran, from the adjoining monastery of St. John, and is the Pope's cathedral church, officially styled "mother and head of all churches of the City [Rome] and the world." It was consecrated in A. D. 324, and has been rebuilt several times, the present structure, which dates from the fourteenth century, having been modernized in the seventeenth. The Lateran palace was the residence of the popes for nearly a thousand years (till 1309), was afterward burned and rebuilt, and is now used as a museum, containing both classical and Christian antiquities. Adjoining the basilica is the ancient baptistery in which, according to tradition, Constantine was baptized.—Lateran councils, eleven councils held in the Lateran basilica, including an important synod convened against the Monothelites in 649, and five general councils of the Western Church (1123, 1179, 1215, and 1512-1517), regarded by Roman Catholics as ecumenical, the fourth being the most important.

latered, a. [ME., < AS. lætræde, slow of counsel, < læt, slow, late, + ræd, counsel: see read, 1, red, 1, -red.] Given to procrastination; inclined to delay or postpone.

Thanne comth the synne that men clepen tarditas, as when a man is to latered or tarynge or he wol turne to God.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

lateraceous (lat'ē-rish'us), a. [Also lateritious; < L. latericius, lateritius, consisting of bricks, < later, a brick, tile.] Like bricks; of the color of bricks.—Lateraceous sediment, a sediment in urine resembling brick-dust, consisting of uric acid.

latericorn (lat'ē-ri-kōrn), n. [< L. latus (later-), side, + cornu = E. horn.] In ornith., the lateral one of the several horny pieces into which the sheath of the bill of some birds, as albatrosses, is divided.

latericum (lat'ē-ri-kūm'bent), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + cumbere*, lie: see cumbent.] Lying on the side.

Latericum, with a block transversely under the neck.

Wüder and Gage, Anat. Tech.

lateriflection, lateriflexion (lat'ē-ri-flek'shon), n. [< L. latus (later-), side, + flexio(n)], a bending: see flection, flexion.] A bending laterad or sidewise; curvature to either side, right or left: as, lateriflection of the spine. Also lateroflection, lateroflexion.

laterifolious (lat'ē-ri-fō'li-us), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + folium, a leaf: see foliage.] In bot., growing by the side of a leaf at its base: as, a laterifolious flower.

Laterigradæ (lat'ē-rig'rā-dē), n. pl. [NL.: see laterigradæ.] A group of spiders which for the most part run sidewise or backward, and make no web, but stitch leaves together to form a nest or retreat. The group has been rated as a family, tribe, and suborder of araneida. It includes the family Thomisidæ. Also Laterigrada.

laterigrade (lat'ē-ri-grād), a. and n. [< L. latus (later-), side, + grad, step: see grad, 1.] 1. a.

Running sidewise, as a spider; pertaining to the Laterigradæ, or having their characters.

The Thomisidæ, or laterigrade spiders.

Amer. Nat., XXI. 966.

II. n. A spider of the group Laterigradæ, and a thomisid.

laterinerved (lat'ē-ri-nērvd), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + nervus, nerve, + E. -ed]. In bot., having lateral nerves: applied to leaves.

laterite (lat'ē-rit), n. [< L. later, a brick, a tile, + -ite]. A rock of peculiar character, found in India and some parts of southwestern Asia. Its essential features are that it is highly ferruginous and that it forms the superficial covering of the country. In its normal form it is a porous argillaceous rock, largely impregnated with the peroxid of iron, some kinds containing as much as 25 or 30 per cent. of metallic iron. Although the laterite is in process of formation at the present time, some of it dates back to the Tertiary, and perhaps as far back as the Eocene. There are two rather distinct forms of this rock. One is extensively developed on the west coast of India, where it forms the surface-rock of the country over wide tracts of the low land near the sea. This, which is called the low-level laterite, is clearly of detrital origin, and it rests indifferently on various older rocks. The iron it contains appears to be due to the fact that it is formed, in part at least, from the debris of the high-level laterite, and in part to the large quantity of iron ore present in the old volcanic rocks of the region. The origin of the high-level laterite, which is found extensively on the highlands of central and western India, is more difficult to explain. It appears, beyond doubt, to have resulted in considerable part from the decomposition in situ, by atmospheric agencies, of the volcanic rock which it overlies.

lateritic (lat'ē-rit'ik), a. [< laterite + -ic]. Pertaining to or characterized by laterite.

The lateritic deposits of Madras.

Nature.

lateritious (lat'ē-rish'us), a. See lateraceous.

lateritypic (lat'ē-ri-tip'ik), a. [< laterity + -ic]. Characterized by laterity; bilaterally symmetrical.

lateritypy (lat'ē-ri-ti-pi), n. [< L. latus (later-), side, + Gr. τυπος, type.] Same as bilateral symmetry (which see, under bilateral).

latermore, a. [< later + -more]. Secondary; of less importance. Also latermore.

Is it mete that the carnal be first, & that thing to be latermore which is apiritual & gostly?

J. Udall, On Mark 1.

Lateritaria (lat'ē-rā'ri-ti-ri-ā), n. [NL., < L. laterna, another form of lanterna, a lantern (see lanterna), + -aria.] A Linnean genus of hemipterous insects of the family Fulgoroidea; the lantern-flies. See cut under lantern-fly.

laterocaudal (lat'ē-rō-kā'dal), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + cauda, tail: see caudal.] In zool., lateral and hinder; situated on the side posteriorly; posterolateral.

Latero-caudal angles of the head unarmed.

Comstock, Introd. to Entom. (1888), p. 219.

laterodorsal (lat'ē-rō-dōr'sal), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + dorsum, back: see dorsal.] In zool. and bot., situated on the side of the upper surface: as, a laterodorsal spot or line on an insect, or the upper rows of leaves in the foliose Jungernanniacea.

lateroflection, lateroflexion (lat'ē-rō-flek'shon), n. Same as lateriflection.

lateromarginal (lat'ē-rō-mār'ji-nal), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + margo (margin-), edge: see marginal.] Situated on the lateral margin or side edge.

A few postero-marginal or caudal, but never a continuous series of latero-marginal setæ.

W. S. Kent, Man. Infaunaria, II. 792.

lateronuchal (lat'ē-rō-nū'chal), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + M.L. nucha, nape: see nuchal.] Situated on the side of the nape.

Latero-nuchal feathers elongated, rigid, with long disconnected fibrillæ.

Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 734.

laterostigmatal (lat'ē-rō-stig'ma-tal), a. [< L. latus (later-), side, + N.L. stigmata.] In entom., situated on the side, just above the stigmata or breathing-pores: as, laterostigmatal spines: used principally in describing larvæ. Also laterostigmatic.

lateroversion (lat'ē-rō-vēr'shon), n. [< L. latus (later-), side, + (M.L.) versio(n)], a turning: see version.] A turning to one side.

Lates (lā'tēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λάτος, a fish of the Nile.] 1. A genus of serranoid fishes. Lates nilotica is known as the Nile perch.—2. [L. c.] A fish of this genus; the Nile perch. It sometimes grows to the length of 3 feet.

latescence (lā'tēs-ens), n. [< latescen(t) + -ec]. The quality or condition of being latescens; the state of becoming obscured or lost to view.

This obscuration can be conceived in every infinite degree between incipient latescence and irrecoverable latency.

Sir W. Hamilton.

latescent (lā-tes'ent), a. [L. latescen(t)s, ppr. of latere, to be hidden, < latere, lurk, lie hidden: see latent.] Becoming latent or obscure; not obvious to perception or cognizance.

It is too familiar to be notorious, lying, in fact, unexpressed and latescent in every concrete application.

Sir W. Hamilton.

latesome¹ (lāt'sum), a. [ME. latsome, < AS. latsum, slow, late, < lat, late: see *late*¹ and -some.] Somewhat late; backward. [Rare.]

latesome² (lāt'sum), a. [ME. latesom, layt-som, latsome, < AS. wātsum, hateful, < wātian, be disgusted. In the first sense now merged in loathsome; in the second confused with *latesome*¹.] 1†. Loathsome; hateful.

But to here of Cristis passoun,

To many a man it is ful layt-som.

MS. Ashmole, 60, l. 5. (Halliwell.)

2. Tiresome; tedious. [Prov. Eng.]

He es swytt to speke on hys manere,

And latsome and slawe for to here;

He prayes awide men and haldes thaim wyse.

Hampole, MS. Bowes, p. 35. (Halliwell.)

latest (lā'test), a. [Superl. of late: see *late*¹ and *last*⁵.] Last; final.

Even he who long the House of Com-ns led,

That hydra dire, with many a gaping head,

Found by experience, to his latest breath,

Envy could only be subdu'd by death.

Jenyns, Imit. of Horace's Epistle, l. 1.

latewaker (lāt'wāk), n. A corruption of like-wake.

lateward (lāt'wārd), a. [*late*¹ + -ward.] Somewhat late; belated; backward.

Lateward trait.

Huloet.

They deserue much more to be reprehended than I will vouchsafe to attempt in this my lateward treatise.

Holinshed, Descrip. of Scotland, xlii.

If it should fall out so lateward a breaking vp of the river.

Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 453.

latex (lā'teks), n. [L., a liquid, fluid, juice.] A milk-like liquid occurring in many plants in special vessels (called laticiferous, or sometimes cinechymatous), and exuding when the plant is wounded. It may be white, like that of the milkweeds and many species of Euphorbia; or yellow, as in the prickly poppy, Argemone; or orange, as in eelandine, Chelidonium. It consists of a watery fluid holding in solution small quantities of sugar, gum, alkaloid and acid matters, etc., and, suspended in this, numerous minute granules (giving the milky appearance) which coagulate when exposed to the air. It has sometimes an economic importance, as in the case of opium (the dried latex of the poppy) and of India-rubber. — Latex-cells, latex-tubes, the vessels which contain latex. See laticiferous.

lath¹ (lāth), n. [ME. lathc, lathe, laththe, prob. < *AS. lathth, found only in the altered form lattu, pl. lattu, ME. latte, E. dial. lat = MD. latte, D. lat, a lath, = OHG. latta, lata, MHG. latte, late, lat, G. latte, lath, thin plate, = Sp. Pg. lata = F. latte, a lath, = It. latta = Pg. lata, tin-plate (see latten); akin to MHG. lade, laden, G. laden, a board, plank, sash, shutter (but prob. not to *lath*¹ or *lath*²). Hence ult. latten and lathie.] 1. A thin narrow strip of wood, used in building to form the groundwork for a roof or for the plastering of walls and ceilings. For the former purpose the laths are nailed to the rafters to support the tiling, slating, or other roof-covering. Laths for walls and ceilings, much narrower and thinner, are nailed to the studs, with small spaces between them, into which a part of the plaster sinks when applied, forming a key or hold for the remainder. Iron laths have been used in fire-proof buildings. See *lathing*¹.

Come and get thee a sword, though made of a lath.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 2.

2†. The bow-part of a crossbow.

Their bows are for form and length not unlike the lath of a large crosse-bow, made of the horns of Buffaloes.

Sandys, Travailles, p. 50.

Dagger of lath. See *dagger*¹. — Lath and plaster, a wall-surface formed of laths plastered over; a slight partition formed of laths and plaster.

I traced the blood [of the rats] . . . through the openings in the lath and plaster.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, III. 21.

Lath floated and set fair, three-coat plaster-work in which the first coat is termed pricking up, the second floating, the third finishing. The last is done with fine stuff. — Lath laid and set, two-coat plaster-work, in which the first coat is called laying, and is often scratched with a broom. — Lath-sawing machine, a machine for sawing laths from the board, or directly from the bolt. The cylindrical log is mounted upon journals on gravitating guide-bars and is rotated by rollers. The laths are sawed from its periphery by saws cutting rectangularly to each other. E. H. Knight. — Lath-shaped crystals. See ophitic structure, under ophitic. — Metallic lath. See *lathing*¹.

lath¹ (lāth), v. t. [*lath*¹, n.] To cover or line with or as with laths.

A small kiln consists of an oaken frame, *lath*ed on every side.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

lath² (lāth), n. See *lath*³.

lath-brick (lāth'brik), n. A kind of brick, 22 inches long and 6 inches broad, used in kilns to dry malt on. Lath-bricks are so named from being used as a substitute for laths.

lath-coop (lāth'kōp), n. Same as lath-pot.

lath-cutter (lāth'kut'er), n. A power-machine for cutting laths from a plank or bolt.

lathe¹ (lāth), n. [Ice. lödh (ladh-), pl. ladhar, = Dan. lat, a smith's lathe. Connection with *lathe*² is improbable, unless Ice. lödh stands for orig. hlödh*; see *lathe*².] 1. A machine for working wood, metals, or other substances by causing the material to turn with greater or less speed, according to the nature of the material and the work to be performed, before a tool which is held at rest relatively to the peripheral motion of the object operated upon.

Lathes are used for turning, cutting, chasing, filing, polishing, screw-cutting, engraving, and shaping, as in metal-spinning. They range in size from a jeweler's lathe for polishing the finest metal-work, through the various wood-turning lathes, to the large machine-lathes for turning locomotive-wheels, and the heavy machines for polishing stone and marble columns for architectural purposes. The ancient potter's wheel is probably the prototype of the modern lathe. The common wood-turning lathe may be taken as a type of these machines. It consists essentially of the bed or main horizontal frame, the poppets, and the rest or support of the tool used in operating the lathe. The poppets can be moved into different positions and clamped on the bed, and form at the left the live or moving head-stock, connected directly with the source of power, and at the right the dead or stationary head-stock, sometimes called tail-stock. The work or material is placed between these, and is supported by a live-centre in the live head-stock and a dead-centre in the dead head-stock; and in the ordinary lathe the cutting is performed concentrically with the axis joining these centers, the material being rotated by the live head-stock. By the adjustment of the poppets on the bed the lathe may be adapted to receive different lengths of material. Usually the dead head-stock only is moved toward or away from the live head-stock in making this adjustment. Facing the work, and clamped to the bed between the poppets, is the tool-rest, on which, in hand-turning, the tool rests as on a fulcrum at a point very near the work, being held in the working position by the hands of the turner, which grasp the outwardly projecting handle of the tool. Such a lathe is driven at high speed, and the amount and character of the turning are controlled by the workman who holds the tool on the tool-rest and before the work. The side-rest is a movable tool-rest carrying an adjustable tool-stock or tool-post in which the tool is rigidly clamped. It slides on longitudinal guideways formed on the bed of the lathe, this movement being controlled by a screw and sometimes being automatic. The tool-rest may be double, presenting two tools, one on each side of the work, as in the duplex lathe. The tool may also be controlled by a templet or model, and shift its position automatically, as in the lathe for turning irregular forms, the milled-work lathe, spoke-lathe, and last-lathe, of which the Blanchard lathe is the original type. Iron-turning requires a much slower speed than brass-turning, and wood-turning a higher speed than brass. Large metal-lathes are said to be of large swing; that is, the space between the centers and the bed is great, to admit of turning large objects. In one form of these machine-lathes an opening is made in the bed to permit the work to turn or to give large swing, as in the gap-bed lathe. In many kinds of turning the dead head-stock is not used, the material to be turned being attached to a lathe-chuck, or to a face-plate carried by the live head-stock. Lathes are nearly all described by their names, as beadwork-lathe, button-lathe, foot-lathe, shafting-lathe, etc., the name sometimes referring to some feature of the construction, as the hollow mandrel lathe, and sometimes to the material or work, as the hat-ironing lathe.

Could turn his word, and oath, and faith,

As many ways as in a lathe.

S. Butler, Hudibras, III. ii. 376.

2. That part of a loom in which the reed is fixed, and by the movements of which the weft-threads are laid parallel to each other, shot after shot, in the process of weaving. According to the greater or less impulse of the lathe, the weft is laid more or less closely together in the plane of the web. Also called batten and lay. — Beadwork-lathe, a lathe specially adapted or devoted to turning beadwork. — Blanchard lathe, a lathe in which the tool-position is shifted by a pattern or model to turn irregular forms. Gun-stocks, ox-yokes, wagon-wheel spokes, shoe-lasts, certain styles of carvings, columns, etc., are made in lathes working on this principle, the lathes taking their special names from the kind of work they perform, as spoke-lathe, last-lathe, gun-stock lathe, etc. This lathe is named from its original inventor, Thomas Blanchard of Massachusetts (1788-1864), who patented it in 1819, and subsequently, with others, adapted it to a great variety of uses. — Button-lathe, a kind of chuck-lathe used in manufacturing buttons. — Car-wheel lathe, a double lathe for turning off the rims of locomotive driving-wheels or car-wheels. It is so arranged that two wheels fitted on one axle may be turned together, or, when desirable, two wheels may be turned independently, as each face-plate can be driven separately. — Compound lathe, a lathe for turning or engraving geometric forms; a geometric lathe or rose-engine. — Copying lathe, a form of lathe adapted for turning articles from a pattern on the principle of the Blanchard lathe. — Cutting-off lathe, a lathe for cutting rods, bars, and pipes to length. The object to be cut is passed through a collet at the rear end of the spindle, a concentric chuck holding it in front. — Duplex lathe, a lathe with two or more cutting-tools, so distributed about the work as to balance the transverse pressure and avoid springing it. — Eccentric lathe, a lathe having a compound face-plate or sliding frame, and guides which present the object in such a way that the tool works an oval upon it. — Gap-bed lathe, a lathe having an opening in its bed to admit of turning objects of larger radius than would be possible with a continuous bed. Also called gap-lathe, break-lathe. — Geometrical lathe, an instrument used by bank-note engravers, watch-case manufacturers, etc., to make complicated patterns of fine lines. It forms the stars, rosettes, ornamental borders, etc., on plates for bank-notes, designed as a precaution against counterfeiting. Also called rose-engine. — Gun-stock lathe. See Blanchard lathe. — Hat-ironing lathe, a lathe used for ironing hats. The hat-block is chucked in the lathe, and the heated iron is held against the nap while the block is turned. — Hollow-mandrel lathe, a lathe in which the mandrel of the live head-stock is hollow. It is much used for cutting screws upon, or for turning off the ends of long and slender rods, which are thrust through the hollow mandrel with the end of the rod which is to be turned projecting from the nose of the mandrel, and held in position for turning by a universal chuck or other suitable holder. See *chuck*⁴ and mandrel. — Parallel lathe, a small hand-machine for jewelers', watchmakers', or dentists' use. It is arranged to run simultaneously, if desired, several grinding-wheels of different sizes, a brush, a drill, etc. — Roughing-lathe, a lathe used by electrotypers as a substitute for a planer in "surfacing up" the backings of electrotypes preparatory to mounting them on wooden blocks. The plates are chucked upon a true face-plate attached to the mandrel of the lathe, with their printing-faces against the face-plate, and the backing-metal is turned off by a sharp cutting-tool controlled by a gage. The back surface is thus made parallel with the printing-surface, and the plate is reduced to the required thickness. — Screw-cutting lathe, a lathe especially planned for cutting screws. Some examples of this type of lathe are adapted also for boring cylinders, for turning shafting, and for miscellaneous work. Same as screw-cutting machine. See screw. — Sphere-turning lathe, a lathe adapted for turning objects to a true spherical shape. — Wood-turning lathe, a high-speed lathe the construction of which is specially adapted to wood-turning. It is the simplest form of lathe. The tools consist of a great variety of chisels and gouges of different widths, with long wooden handles, by which leverage is obtained upon the tool-rest as a fulcrum, for holding the tools firmly yet delicately with their cutting edges in proper relation with the material in the lathe. The same kind of lathe is also used for turning ivory, horn, bone, etc., the speed being regulated and the forms of the tools being varied to suit the nature of the materials. (See also bench-lathe, carving-lathe, center-lathe, chuck-lathe, column-lathe, gage-lathe.)

lathe² (lāth), n. [Also lath; < ME. lathe, < Ice. hladha = Dan. lade = Sw. lada, a barn, shed (in comp. Dan. bog-lade = Sw. bok-låda, bookstore), = G. laden, a booth, shop, stall, orig. Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 163.

lathe⁵, a. A Middle English form of loath. lathe⁶, v. A Middle English form of loathe.
lathe-bearer (lāTH'ber'ēr), n. Same as lathe-carrier.

The grinder is laid upon the lathe-bearers or other support.
O. Byrne, Artisan's Handbook, p. 140.

lathe-carrier (lāTH'kar'ēr), n. An appliance fastened to an object under operation in a lathe. It causes the object to rotate with the mandrel and faceplate of the live head by means of a projection which collides with the stud or pin on the latter. Also called lathe-dog, lathe-bearer.

lathe-center (lāTH'scn'tēr), n. A piece of hardened steel, round and tapered, having the smaller end cut off squarely and the larger end of the form of a cone. One of these centers is fitted to a socket in the nose of the mandrel of the live head-stock, and the other into a socket in the spindle of the dead head-stock. The former is called the live-center; the latter, the dead-center. The piece to be turned (for example, a piece of shafting) is prepared for placing in the lathe by centrally countersinking the ends. The conical ends of the lathe-centers are made to engage the countersunk ends of the piece in the countersinks, and the spindle of the dead head-stock is then clamped in position. The piece to be turned is then clamped to the mandrel by means of a chuck or a lathe-carrier. The spindle of the dead head-stock is usually provided with an adjusting-screw and a clamping-screw by which the dead-center is adjusted to and firmly held in position.

lathe-chuck (lāTH'chuk), n. A device screwed to the mandrel of a lathe and grasping the object to be turned, bored, ground, polished, or the like. E. H. Knight.

Lathe-chuck.
B, B, the dogs, are advanced or caused to recede by the action of a wheel, C.

lathe-cords (lāTH'kōrdz), n. pl. Cords used to turn lathes. They are made of the intestines of horses, cleaned and prepared by the separation of the mucous membrane.

lathe-dog (lāTH'dog), n. Same as lathe-carrier.

lathe-drill (lāTH'dril), n. A horizontal lathe used for drilling.

lathee, lathi (lāt'ē), n. [Hind. lathi, a stick, club; cf. lath, a staff, pillar.] In India, a stick; a bludgeon, usually of bamboo and often loaded with iron. Also lattee.

The natives use a very dangerous weapon, which they have been forbidden by Government to carry. . . . It is a very heavy lathi, a solid male bamboo, 5 feet 5 inches long, headed with iron in a most formidable manner.
Fanny Parkes, Wanderings in Search of the Picturesque, ii. 133.

lathe-head (lāTH'hed), n. 1. The poppet, poppet-head, or head-stock of a lathe.—2. A small dental or laboratory lathe that may be fitted to a bench. It carries a single spindle on two curved arms, and is used by fitting laps, grinding-wheels, small brushes, and other light circular tools to the ends of the spindle. It is operated by a treadle and a light belt.

lathe-hoist (lāTH'hoist), n. A device for raising work in the lathe to the height of the lathe-centers.

lathen (lāTH'en), a. [*lath*¹ + *-en*².] Made of lath. [Rare.]

Lathen daggers. Ainsworth, Lancashire Witchea, iii. 9.

lather¹ (lāTH'ēr), n. [ME. lather, < AS. læthor, a kind of niter used for soap, lather, = Icel. lauthr, mod. lödhr, froth, foam, a kind of niter or soap used in washing, = Sw. lödder, soap.] 1. Foam, froth, or suds made from soap moistened with water, as by a brush for shaving.

Soap containing small proportions of glycerin . . . forms a very tenacious lather. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 204.

2. Foam or froth formed in profuse sweating, as of a horse.

He made the round of the hill and came back, his horse covered with lather and its tail trembling.

C. Reade, Love me Little, xiv.

lather¹ (lāTH'ēr), v. [*ME. læthren, < AS. læthrian, læthrian, lather, smear (= Icel. lauthra, wash), < læthor, lather: see *lather*¹, n.] 1. intrans. To form a foam or suds, as soap and water; become froth or frothy matter.

Choose water pure,
Such as will lather cold with soap. Baynard.

It is said that soap thus made has a beautifully mottled appearance, lathers freely, and has a smooth surface.

Watt, Soap-making, p. 123.

II. trans. 1. To spread lather on or over; apply lather to, as the face in shaving.

The damsel with the soap-ball lathered him with great expedition, raising flakes of snow.

Smollett, tr. of Don Quixote, III. 281.

'Tis waste of soap to lather an ass.

Macmillan's Mag., July, 1860, p. 210.

2. To flog; leather. [Vulgar.]

Do you think that to lather a man all through eleven pages, and then tell him he isn't to blame after all, is treating yourself right?

New Princeton Rev., V. 53.

The lathers and shoemakers want ten hours' pay and eight hours' work.

Philadelphia Times, May 1, 1886.

lather³, n. A dialectal variant of ladder. Palsgrave; Collier's Old Ballads, pp. 33, 105. (Halliwel.)

lathe-reeve, n. [No AS. term is found.] In Anglo-Saxon hist., an officer who presided over a lathe. See *lathe*³.

These [counties] had formerly their lathe-reeves and rape-reeves, acting in subordination to the shire-reeve.

Blackstone, Com., Int., § 4.

lathe-saw (lāTH'sā), n. A small circular saw or fret-saw which can be fitted upon an ordinary lathe and operated by its mechanism.

lathe-tool (lāTH'tōl), n. Any one of the various turning-tools used in tool-posts of lathes. — Lathe-tool holder, a socket or holder for a lathe-tool. The shank is held by a set-screw on the post of the slide-rest. E. H. Knight.

lath-hammer (lāTH'ham'ēr), n. Same as lathing-hammer.

lathi, n. See lathee.

lathing¹ (lāTH'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *lath*¹, v.] A foundation of lath or other material on a wall or ceiling, under the plaster; also, the material used for such a foundation. Metallic lathing is now used in the form of perforated and corrugated sheet-metal, rods, bars, and wire netting. The last form, under the name of woven-wire lathing, is the most usual kind. Such lathing is used in constructing fire-proof walls and ceilings, and in general to take the place of the common and dangerous wooden lathing for the support of plastering.

lathing² (lāTH'ing), n. [ME. lathing = AS. lathing = OFries. lathenge, ladinge = OHG. ladunga, MHG. ladunge, G. ladung, a calling, invitation; verbal n. of *lathe*⁴, v.] An invitation. Bailey, 1731; Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

lathing-clamp (lāTH'ing-klamp), n. A clamp to hold a set of spaced laths while they are being nailed to the studding. E. H. Knight.

lathing-hammer (lāTH'ing-ham'ēr), n. In carp., a hammer which has a small hatchet-face on the side opposite the hammer-head and in line with it, the hatchet being used for cutting laths, and the hammer for nailing them to the studs. The hatchet has usually a small lateral nick for drawing out nails. Also called lath-hammer.

lath-mill (lāTH'mil), n. A gang-saw for cutting laths from the log.

lath-nail (lāTH'nāl), n. A small cut nail used for fastening laths to studding. E. H. Knight.

lath-pot (lāTH'pōt), n. In U. S. fisheries, a coop or trap made of laths or thin strips of wood.

The term lath-pot is almost universally employed to designate the common forms of closed lobster traps, whether semi-cylindrical or rectangular in shape, providing they are constructed of laths or of any narrow strips of wood. Other names by which they are known to the fishermen are "box-traps," "house-pots," "attek-pots," and "lath-coops." Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 666.

Lathraea (lāTH-rē'ē), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), so called as growing in concealed places, < Gr. λᾶθρα, secret, hidden; cf. λάθρα, λάθρον, secretly, < λανθάνειν, λᾶθειν, hide: see latent.] A genus of plants of the natural order Orobanchaceae, or broom-rape family, with a bell-shaped, broadly lathridiid (lath-rid'i-id), n. A beetle of the family Lathridiidae.

4-cleft calyx, and short dense spike or somewhat longer loose racemes of white, yellowish, or bluish flowers, sometimes tinged with pink. Three species are known, one of which is chiefly confined to western Europe, while another is widely distributed throughout Europe and Asia, and the third is restricted to Japan. L. squamaria, or toothwort, is a parasitical plant, growing on the roots of trees and shrubs. It has a simple fleshy erect stem, a foot or less in height, with fleshy scale-like bracts in place of leaves, and drooping flesh-colored flowers. It occurs throughout Europe and in Asia.

Lathridiidae (lath-ri-dī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lathridius + -idae.] A family of elaticorn coleoptera having the dorsal segments of the abdomen partly membranous, ventral segments free and nearly equal, tarsi three-jointed with second joint not dilated, wings not fringed with hairs, and elytra entire. See Lathridius.

Lathridius (lath-rid'i-us), n. [NL., < Gr. λαθρίδιος, poet. for λάθριος, later form of λαθραῖος, secret, hidden: see Lathraea.] The typical genus of Lathridiidae, having the antennal club three-jointed. They are small beetles, living under bark and stones. More than 100 species are known, mainly European and Asiatic, but 15 are North American, as L. tenuicornis. Usually Lathridius, as Herbst, 1793.

Lathrobiidae (lath-rō-bi'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lathrobium + -idae.] A family of brachelytrous coleoptera, taking name from the genus Lathrobium, or merged in Staphylinidae. Also written Lathrobiade, Lathrobiade.

lathrobiiform (lath-rō'bi-i-fōrm), a. [NL. Lathrobium + L. forma, form.] Having the form of the Lathrobiidae; pertaining to the Lathrobiiformes.

Lathrobiiformes (lath-rō'bi-i-fōr'mēz), n. pl. [NL.: see lathrobiiform.] A group of beetles. See Lathrobiidae.

Lathrobium (lath-rō'bi-um), n. [NL., for Lathrobium*, < Gr. λαθραῖος, hidden (see Lathraea), + βίος, life.] The typical genus of Lathrobiidae. Also written Lathrobium. Billberg, 1820.

lathwork (lāTH'wērk), n. Lathing; any work in laths, or resembling lathing.

lathy (lāTH'i), a. [*lath*¹ + *-y*¹.] Long and slender, like a lath.

The which he tossed to and fro again,
And et his lathy falchion brandished.
West, Abuse of Travelling.

A lathy young man, bent sideways over a spar, was struggling, with a very red face, to right himself.
B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 204.

lathyrism (lath'i-rizm), n. [Lathyrus + -ism.] A condition produced by the use of the seeds of Lathyrus Cicera and other species as food. It is characterized by formication, tremors, and paraplegia.

Lathyrus (lath'i-rus), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < Gr. λᾶθρος, a kind of pulse.] A genus of leguminous plants of the tribe Viciae, or vetch family, agreeing in the structure of the flowers with Pisum, the true pea, except that its style is not grooved on the back. See Pisum. There are probably about 120 species of these plants, inhabiting the northern hemisphere and South America. They are vines creeping or climbing by tendrils, often with large and handsome flowers. Several species are known in cultivation, and the wild species are generally known as peas, with qualifying names, that of everlasting pea being applicable to the genus in general. L. macrorrhizus, a European species, is the bitter-vetch, caramele, heath-pea, or mouse-pea; L. maritimus, of wide distribution on the sea-coast, is the beach-pea; L. odoratus, a native of Sicily, is the common sweet pea of the gardens; L. latifolius, the everlasting pea of the gardens, is a cultivated variety of the European species L. silvestris. Thirteen species are native in the United States, several of which, as L. ornatus and L. venosus (see cut), have broad leaflets and handsome, showy flowers.

latialite (lā'shā-līt), n. [L. Latialis, Latin (< Latium, a country of Italy: see Latin), + *-ite*2; or for latiolite* (†), < L. Latium + Gr. λίθος, a stone (see -lite). The mineral is so called because found in the volcanic rocks of that part of Italy corresponding to the ancient Latium.] Same as haüyne.

Latian (lā'shān), a. [L. Latium (see def.) + -an.] Belonging or relating to Latium, one of the districts or countries of ancient Italy; Latin. [Rare.]

By the right wheel rode Mamilius, Prince of the Latian name.

Macaulay, Horatius.

latibulize (lā-tib'ū-līz), v. i.; pret. and pp. latibulized, ppr. latibulizing. [L. latibulum + -ize.] To hibernate; retreat and lie hidden. [Rare.]

The tortoise latibulizes in October. Shaw.

latibulum (lā-tib'ū-lum), n.; pl. latibula (-lā). [L., a lurking-place, < latere, lurk: see latenti.] A hiding-place; a cave; a burrow. [Rare.]

laticiferous (lat-i-sif'ō-rus), a. [L. latex (latic-), a liquid, + ferre = *E. bear*1.] In bot., bearing or containing latex.

The fiber or "inner bark," on the other hand, usually contains woody fibre in addition to the cellular tissue and laticiferous canals of the preceding.

W. B. Carpenter, Micros, § 372.

Laticiferous cells, tubes, or vessels, a kind of vegetable tissue, consisting of soft-walled cells, containing latex. They are usually distributed throughout the plant to which they belong. The tubes are either articulate (De Bary), composed of long cells, freely branching, and anastomosing with others into a complex reticulated system, or non-articulate, consisting of single cells, elongating with the growth of the plant, much branched, but little if at all confluent with others.—Laticiferous tissue, laticiferousa vessels taken collectively.

In many orders of Phanerogams tissues are found whose component elements contain a milky or colored fluid—the latex. To these, although varying greatly in structure and position, the general name of laticiferous tissues has been given.

Bessey, Botany, p. 76.

Laticiferous hyphae, latex-yielding filaments occurring in the sporophores of Lactarius and other fungi of the order Agaricinae.

laticlave (lat'i-klāv), n. [L. laticlavus, a broad stripe, < L. latus, broad, + clavus, a stripe.] 1. One of two broad stripes of purple woven in the stuff of the tunic worn by Roman senators and persons of senatorial rank, extending vertically from the neck down the front, and serving as a badge of their dignity. See angusticlave. Hence—2. The tunic ornamented with these bands or stripes, or the dignity of which it was a mark.

laticostate (lat-i-kos'tāt), a. [L. latus, broad, + costatus, ribbed: see costa.] Broad-ribbed.

latidentate (lat-i-don'tāt), a. [L. latus, broad, + dentatus, toothed: see dentate.] Broad-toothed.

latifoliate (lat-i-fō'li-āt), a. [L. latus, broad, + foliatus, leafy, < folium, a leaf.] Broad-leaved, as a plant.

latifolius (lat-i-fō'li-us), a. [L. latifolius, broad-leaved, < latus, broad, + folium, a leaf.] Same as latifoliate.

latifundium (lat-i-fun'di-um), n.; pl. latifundia (-iā). [L., a large landed estate, < latus, broad, + fundus, estate: see fund.] In Rom. hist., a great estate. In their origin through conquest or military reward, and in the organization of serf or peasant labor upon them, the latifundia resembled the early English baronial manors. In the plural, the term is used to designate the resulting system of aggrandizement, tending to concentration of the land in the hands of a few and to excessive poverty of the masses.

For the small properties of the earlier period were substituted the vast estates—the latifundia—which, in the judgment of Pliny, were the ruin of Italy.

Encyc. Brit., XIX, 350.

latigo-strap (lat'i-gō-strap), n. [Sp. látigo, a thong (origin uncertain), + E. strap.] A strong tapering leather strap used for tightening the cinch or girth in packing. See pack-saddle. [Western U. S.]

latilid (lat'i-lid), n. A fish of the family Latilidae.

Latilidae (lā-til'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Latilus + -idae.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Latilus, with an elongated compressed body, compressed head, a very long dorsal fin whose foremost rays only are spinose, an elongated anal fin, normal pectorals with branched rays, and thoracic or sub-jugular perfect ventral fins. The species are about 10 in number, referred to about 5 genera. They inhabit tropical and temperate seas, some of them reaching a large size, but have little economic importance.

Latilinae (lat-i-lī'nō), n. pl. [NL., < Latilus + -inae.] A subfamily of fishes of the family Latilidae, including the genera Latilus, Caulotililus, and Lophotililus. They have the dorsal fin continuous, the body scaly, and the upper jaw usually provided with posterior canines. These fishes form in Günther's classification a group called Pinguipedina, referred to the Trachinidae. Species of Caulotililus are called blanquillo or whitefish, and yellowtail. (See cut under blanquillo.) Lophotililus chamaeleonticeps is known as the tile fish.

latiloid (lat'i-loid), a. and n. [NL. Latilus + Gr. εἶδος, form.] 1. a. Pertaining to the Latilidae, or having their characters.

2. n. A fish of the family Latilidae; a latilid. Latilus (lat'i-lus), n. [NL., < L. latus, broad.] A genus of fishes, typical of the family Latilidae Latilus argentatus.

and subfamily Latilinae. Curier and Valenciennes.

latimer† (lat'i-mēr), n. [ME. latimer, lutmyer, < AF. latymor, a corruption of latiner: see Latiner.] A corrupt form of latiner.

Latimer is the corruption of Latiner; it signifies he that interprets Latin; and though he interpreted French, Spanish, or Italian, he was called the King's Latimer—that is, the King's interpreter. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 179.

A popular etym. connected the name with latere, lie hid (see latent), and made Saturn 'lie hid' here from his son.] 1. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or derived from ancient Latium or its inhabitants: as, the Latin cities; the Latin wars; the Latin language.—2. Pertaining to or having affinity with the ancient Latins in the wider sense of the word: so applied from the spread of the language and civilization of the people of Latium throughout Italy and the Roman empire: as, the Latin races of southern Europe; the Latin arts.

But Turkish force and Latin fraud

Would break your shield, however broad.

Byron, Don Juan, iii. (song).

3. Relating or pertaining to, or composed in, the language of the ancient Latins or Romans: as, a Latin idiom; a Latin poem. See II., 3. Remuneration! O, that's the Latin word for three farthings. Shak., L. L. L., iii. 1. 138. It is an unjust way of compute to magnify a weak head for some Latin abilities, and to undervalue a solid judgment because he knows not the genealogy of Hector. Sir T. Broune, Christ. Morals. John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, founded (St. Paul's school) in the year 1510 . . . for free education of children of all nations and countries. . . . They were to be instructed. . . . "In good and chere Latyn literature," . . . to the exclusion of all which he terms "barbarous and corruption, and Latyn adulterate," and such as he says "may rather be called blotterous than literature." Blackwood's Mag., II, 465.

Dog Latin. See dog-Latin.—Latin Christianity, that form of Christian doctrine and church life which grew up among and was dominated by the Latin race: used in ecclesiastical history generally in contradistinction from Greek and sometimes from Teutonic Christianity.—Latin Church. (a) The Western Church, which from very early times down to the Reformation everywhere used Latin as its official language, whether among Latin, Celtic, or Teutonic races, as distinguished from the Greek or Oriental Church. (b) The Roman Catholic Church.—Latin cross. See cross.—Latin empire, the name given to the empire of Constantinople while under the rule of Latin (chiefly French) emperors, from 1204 to 1261.—Latin kingdom, the Christian kingdom of Jerusalem under the French or Latin kings, from 1099 to 1187, when the Christians were expelled, though the title "king of Jerusalem" was maintained long afterward.—Latin league, a confederation of the cities of Latium existing in Italy in the earliest historic times, and continuing till 333 B. C., when the Latin towns were finally incorporated in the dominion of Rome. According to the earliest tradition, the league included thirty cities, among which Alba Longa held the preeminent place. After the fall of Alba, Aricia, Lanuvium, and Tusculum, with other important communities not originally included, were united with the league. The confederation held assemblies in the grove of Ferentina, below Marino in the Alban hills, and had a common religious sanctuary in the temple of Jupiter Latiaris on the summit of the Alban Mount (Monte Cavo), where annual sacrifices were celebrated.—Latin Union, a monetary alliance of France, Belgium, Italy, and Switzerland, formed by convention December 23d, 1855, and joined by Greece in 1868. Its object was the maintenance and regulation of a uniform interchangeable gold and silver coinage, based on the French franc. Its limited term was continued by two renewals (1875 and 1885), Belgium withdrawing on the latter occasion and adopting the single gold standard.—Syn. See Roman.

II. n. 1. A member of the race that inhabited ancient Latium in central Italy, including Rome; afterward, one to whom the Latin language was vernacular; an ancient Roman, Italian, etc.—2. In modern application, a member of one of the races ethnically and linguistically related to the ancient Romans or Italians, by descent or intermixture: as, the Latins of Italy, France, Spain, and Portugal.—3. The language of ancient Rome; the language originally spoken in Latium, and afterward extended over all the integral parts of the Roman empire in Europe, which is the basis of the modern Romance languages (see Romance), and has supplied the greater part in bulk of the vocabulary of modern English (see English). Latin belongs to the Italian branch of the Indo-European or Aryan family, together with Oscan, Umbrian, and other dialects of which hardly any remains are extant. Its nearer relations with the other branches of the family are matters of doubt and dispute. It was formerly, on insufficient grounds, believed especially akin with Greek; more recently, it has been thought closer to Celtic. Latin, with its literature, is divided chronologically into several periods—in this dictionary, in the etymologies, into five, namely Old Latin, Classical Latin, Late Latin, Middle Latin, and New Latin. See below.

Seynt Jerome, that was a Preest and a Cardynalle, that translated the Bible and the Paniterre from Ebrew in to Latyn. Manderille, Travels, p. 71. The King of France . . . shall name your highness . . . thus in Latin, Præclarissime illius noster Henricus. Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 369.

I love the language, that soft bastard Latin [Italian], Which melts like kisses from a female mouth. Byron, Beppo, st. 44. 4. A member of the Latin or Roman Catholic Church; the designation most frequently used by Greek Catholics and other Oriental Christians for Roman Catholics.

The Latins in Palestine are not numerous, the country villages, when Christian, belonging generally to the Greek Church. Encyc. Brit., XIII, 644.

5. A member of a civil community in Turkey composed of such subjects of the Sultan as are of foreign ancestry and of the Roman Catholic faith.—6. An exercise in schools, consisting in turning English into Latin.

By nine aduice, he shall not use the common order in common scholes, for making of latines. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 25.

The divisions and periods of the Latin vary more or less with different writers. As generally adopted, and as somewhat more precisely discriminated in this dictionary and systematically followed in the etymologies, they are here defined in chronological order: Old Latin, Latin before the classical period, including Plautus, Fanius, Terence, Cato, and other early Latin authors (so far as they retain traces of the older language), and inscriptions of early date.—Classical Latin, the Latin of the writers commonly called classical (Lucrétius, Catullus, Cæsar, Cicero, Sallust, Virgil, Nepos, Horace, Ovid, Livy, Tibullus, Curtius, Persius, Petronius, Seneca, the Plinys, Statius, Tacitus, Juvenal, Suetonius, etc.), from about 75 B. C. to about A. D. 175 or 200; the standard Latin of the grammars and dictionaries.—Late Latin, Latin immediately following the classical period, from about A. D. 175 or 200 to about 600, including the writings of Augustine, Claudian, Lampadius, Orosius, Cassiodorus, Boethius, etc., and the early church fathers, Tertullian, Lactantius, Jerome, Augustine, etc.—Middle Latin, or Medieval Latin, the Latin of the middle ages, from about A. D. 600 to 1500. During this period the Latin vocabulary received enormous accessions from the Greek and Teutonic and Oriental tongues, as well as from the Romance tongues, the vernacular representatives of the ancient Latin, such accessions being fully accommodated to the Latin, or merely provided with Latin terminations, or received unchanged. Also called Low Latin, sometimes Barbarous Latin, especially with reference to its foreign elements.—New Latin, or Modern Latin, Latin as written in modern times, from about A. D. 1500 to the present time. It now includes especially the Latin used by scientific writers in description and classification. New Latin, like Middle Latin, possesses a huge literature, but the language in this form is now used almost exclusively in theological, philological, and scientific works. Its main basis is serve, with the Greek vocabulary, now in large part incorporated in New Latin, as the common vocabulary of civilization, the tendency being in each civilized tongue to form the terms required by the progress of science upon an actual or potential New Latin type.

Law Latin. See *law*1.—Low Latin. See Middle Latin.—Thieves' Latin, thieves' language; thieves' cant or slang. A very learned man, I promise you, and can vent Greek and Hebrew as fast as I can Thieves' Latin. Scott, Kenilworth, xxix.

The English neyronym has a Latin form: it is Latiniform; but it presents for the time an English face and dress.
B. G. Wilder, Jour. Nervous Diseases, xii, 1885.

Latinisation, Latinise. See Latinization, Latinize.

Latinism (lat'in-izm), n. [= F. Latinisme = Sp. Lat. It. Latinismo, < ML. Latinismus*, < L. Latinus, Latin; see Latin.] A Latin idiom; a mode of expression peculiar to the Latin language; use of Latin forms or derivatives.

I owe also to Fentou the participle meandered, and to Sir W. D'Avenant the latinism of funeral fillet.
Harte, Religious Melancholy, Advertisement.

He [the author of "Piers Plowman"] disdained their exotic fancies, their Latinisms, their Gallicisms, and their Italianisms.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I, 214.

Milton's Latinism was so pronounced as to be un-English.
Sedman, Vict. Poets, p. 161.

Latinist (lat'in-ist), n. [= F. Latiniste = Sp. Lat. It. Latinista, < ML. Latinista, one who speaks Latin, < Latinus, Latin; see Latin.] One skilled in Latin; a Latin scholar.

This interpretation also do both the mooste number and the best learned of the latinistes best allowe.
Bible of 1551, Pa. iv., note.

Every Latinist cannot understand them [words].
Coryat, Cruities, I, 5.

Possibly Landor was a more ready Latinist, but no Englishman has written Greek elegiac to equal . . . the dedication of "Atalanta."
Sedman, Vict. Poets, p. 398.

Latinistic (lat-i-nis'tik), a. [L. Latinist + -ic.] Of or pertaining to Latinism; having a Latin style or idiom. Coleridge.

Latinitaster (lat'in-i-tas'tēr), n. [L. Latinita(-s), Latinity, + -aster, a pejorative suffix.] One who has a smattering of Latin. Walker. [Humorous and rare.]

Latinity (lā-tin'i-ti), n. [= F. latinité = Sp. latinidad = Pg. latinidade = It. latinità, < L. latinita(-s), Latinity, the Latin language, < Latinus, Latin; see Latin.] Use of the Latin language; method of speaking or writing Latin; Latin style or idiom.

If the author's [Lyly's] Latinity is not always perfect, it rises with a readiness which might excite the envy of modern University senate-houses, had not Latin ceased to be familiar even to their venerable walls.
A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., I, 155.

The poems of Leo XIII. are remarkable for their exquisite Latinity.
The Century, xxx, 92.

English writers who were composing in French, and the more learned who displayed their clerkship by their Latinity.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I, 134.

Latinization (lat'in-i-zā'shən), n. [= F. latinisation; as Latinize + -ation.] The act of rendering into Latin. Also spelled Latinisation.

Latinize (lat'in-iz), v.; pret. and pp. Latinized, pp. Latinizing. [= F. latiniser = Sp. latinizar = Pg. latinisar = It. latinizzare, < LL. latinizare, translate into Latin, < L. Latinus, Latin; see Latin.] 1. trans. 1. To translate into Latin.—2. To convert into Latin forms, as words; adapt to Latin spelling or inflection; intermix with Latin elements, as a style of writing.

The macaronian is a kind of burlesque poetry, consisting of a jumble of words of different languages, with words of the vulgar tongue latinized, and Latin words modernized.
Cambridge, Scriberia, ii., note 16.

II. intrans. To use words or phrases borrowed from the Latin.

He latinizes less in the poems which follow, because it is more difficult to do it in verse.
Ticknor, Span. Lit., III, 18.

Also spelled Latinise.

Latinly (lat'in-li), adv. With purity of Latin style.

You shall hardly find a man amongst them [the French] which can make a shift to express himself in that [the Latin] language, nor one amongst an hundred that can do it Latinly.
Heylin, Voyage of France, p. 296.

lation (lā'shən), n. [L. latio(n-), a bearing, < latius, used as pp. of ferre = E. *bear*¹. Cf. ablation, collation, legislation, etc.] The act of bearing or carrying from one place to another; transportation; translation.

Make me a heaven; and make me there
Many a lease and greater sphere;
Make me the straight and oblique lines,
The motions, latios, and the signs.
Herrick, Hesperides, p. 48.

latipennate (lat-i-pen'āt), a. [L. latus, broad, + pennatus, winged; see pennate.] In ornith., broad-winged.

latipennine (lat-i-pen'in), a. [L. latus, broad, + penna, wing, + *-ine*¹.] Same as latipennate.

latirostral (lat-i-ros'tral), a. [L. latus, broad, + rostrum, bill, beak.] In ornith., broad-billed; of or pertaining to the Latirostres.

latirostrate (lat-i-ros'trāt), a. Same as latirostral.

Latirostres (lat-i-ros'trēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. latus, broad, + rostrum, bill, beak.] 1. In Sundevall's classification of birds, the fifth phalanx of the cohort Cichlomorphæ, embracing seven families more or less nearly related to the true flycatchers of the Old World (Muscicapidae).—2. In Selater's system of 1880, a group of laminiplatar oscine Passeres, embracing the Hirundinidæ or swallows: equivalent to the Cathidonomorphæ of Sundevall.

latirostrous† (lat-i-ros'trus), a. [L. latus, broad, + rostrum, bill, beak.] Same as latirostral.

Latirostrous or flat-billed birds.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v, 1.

latiseptæ (lat-i-sep'tē), n. pl. [NL., < L. latus, broad, + septum, septum, a partition.] In bot., cruciferous plants having the dissepiment broad in proportion to the thickness between the valves.

latissimus (lā-tis'i-mus), n.; pl. latissimi (-mī). [NL. (sc. museulus, muscle), superl. of L. latus, broad, wide; see latitude.] The broadest muscle which lies upon the back; one of the muscles of the anterior extremity, arising from the spines of numerous vertebrae, and some other parts, and inserted into the upper part of the humerus: commonly called more fully latissimus dorsi. See cut under muscle.—Latissimus colli, a former name of the broadest muscle of the neck, now called platysma myoides. See platysma.

latisternal (lat-i-stēr'nal), a. [L. latus, broad, + NL. sternum, < Gr. στέρνον, the breast, chest.] Having a broad and flat breast-bone: as, a latisternal ape. The anthropoid or anthropomorphic apes agree with man in this respect, whence the term is apically applied to them.

latitancy† (lat'i-tan-si), n. [L. latitan(t) + -cy.] The state of lying concealed; latency; hibernation.

It cannot be denied it [the chameleon] is (if not most of any) a very abstemious animal, and such as by reason of its frugidity, paucity of blood, and latitancy in the winter . . . will long subsist without a visible sustentation.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii, 21.

latitant† (lat'i-tant), a. [L. latitan(t)-s, pp. of latitare, freq. of latere, lie hidden, lurk; see latent.] Lying hidden; latent; hibernating.

Snakes, lizards, snails, and divers other insects latitant many months in the year . . . do long subsist without nutrition.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii, 21.

latitat (lat'i-tat), n. [L., he lies hidden, 3d pers. sing. pres. ind. of latitare, lie hidden; see latitant.] In Eng. law, an old writ by which a person was summoned to the King's Bench to answer, as on the supposition that he lay concealed.

I desire him also to conceal himself as he can, if he cannot get a special pardon, to wear a Latitat about his neck.
N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 72.

latitation† (lat-i-tā'shən), n. [L. latitatio(n-), a hiding, < latitare, lie hidden; see latitant.] The act of skulking or lying concealed. E. Phillips, 1706.

Latitores (lat-i-tō'rēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. latitare, lie hidden; see latitant.] In Blyth's system (1849), the skulkers; an order of birds corresponding to the Macroductyli of Cuvier. [Not in use.]

latitude (lat'i-tūd), n. [ME. latitude, < OF. latitudo, F. latitude = Sp. latitud = Pg. latitudo = It. latitudine, < L. latitudo, breadth, width, < latus, broad, OL. slatus (appearing in fem. slata, a broad strip), ult. a var. of stratus, pp. of sternere, spread out, strew; see stratum, strew.] 1. Extent from side to side, or distance sideways from a given point or line; breadth; width. Provided the length do not exceed the latitude above one third part. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture. Thy yet close-folded latitude of boughs.
Cowper, Yardley Oak.

2. Extent within limits of any kind; scope; range; comprehensiveness: as, to be allowed great latitude of motion or action; latitude of meaning or of application.

This doctrine of eieches hath a more ample latitude and extent than is perceived.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii, 225.
Then, in comes the benign latitude of the doctrine of good-will, and cuts asunder all those hard pinching corda.
South, Sermona.

The nation was less governed by laws than by customs, which admitted a great latitude of interpretation.

Hume, Hist. Eng., I, App. 1.
Latitude of action should not be given to a relief party who on a known coast are searching for men who know their plaus and orders.
Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 33.

Hence—3. Extent of deviation from a standard; freedom from rules or limits: as, latitude of conduct.

In human actions, there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged.
Jer. Taylor.

Augustus . . . reproved his daughter for her excess in apparel, and both rebuked and imprisoned her for her immodest latitudes.
Penn., No Cross, No Crown, ii.

4. The elevation of the pole of the heavens at a station, or the angle at which the plane of the horizon is cut by the earth's axis; the total curvature or bending of a meridian between the equator and a station; the angle which the plumb-line at any place makes with the plumb-line at the equator in the same plane; on a map, the angular distance of a point on the earth's surface from the equator, measured on the meridian of the point: as, St. Paul's, London, is in lat. 51° 30' 48" N.; Cape Horn is in lat. 55° 59' S. Latitude is determined by different methods, according as circumstances may require. At sea the instrument exclusively used is the quadrant or sextant, the latter being simply a more accurately constructed and therefore more expensive form of the instrument. With this the altitude of the sun is observed when on the meridian, and from this altitude, with the aid of the declination taken from the Nautical Almanac, with certain corrections for dip, refraction, etc., the latitude is obtained. The same method is used on land (with the aid of an artificial horizon in place of the natural) in cases where no great accuracy is required, as in ordinary geographical reconnaissance. More accurate results are secured by increasing the number of observations by the method of circummeridian altitudes, several observations being taken just before and just after noon (or, if a fixed star is observed, before and after its culmination), from which, with suitable corrections, a mean result is attained more accurate than that furnished by a single observation. A much higher degree of accuracy is reached by the use of the zenith-telescope, which is a portable instrument, but considerably less so than the sextant, which the observer holds in his hand. With this instrument the latitude is determined by measuring microscopically the difference of the meridional zenith-distances of two stars near the zenith, one north and the other south of it. The zenith-telescope is used for latitude determinations by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey at the stations belonging to the primary triangulation. The most accurate method of determining the latitude in a fixed observatory is by observing, with the meridian circle, the altitude of a circumpolar star at its transits above and below the pole. This method is independent of the declination of the star, and not necessarily liable to great errors of refraction. Another method sometimes employed in fixed observatories is to observe the transit of a star with a transit-instrument in the prime vertical, the time of the transit being observed with the instrument pointing east, and again with the same instrument pointing west, whence the altitude of the pole may be deduced. There are other methods of determining the latitude, but they are much less important than those mentioned.

5. In astron., the angular distance of a star north or south of the ecliptic, measured on that secondary to the ecliptic which passes through the body. Secondaries to the ecliptic are called circles of celestial latitude, and parallels to the ecliptic are called parallels of celestial latitude. Latitude is geocentric or heliocentric according as the earth or the sun is taken as the center from which the angle is measured.

6. The quantity of the interval between two latitudes, either in the geographical or the astronomical sense: as, to sail through 30° of latitude.

The zodiak in heavens is ymaged to ben a superficie contienyng a latitude of 12 degrees.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, l. 21.

7. A place or region as marked by parallels of latitude: as, to fish in high latitudes (that is, in places where the latitude is a high number); the orange will not ripen in this latitude (that is, it will not do so in any place on the same parallel of latitude as the place spoken of); you are out of your latitude (that is, literally or figuratively, you have committed an error of navigation, so that the latitude you have assigned to the ship's place is not the true one).

Those latitudes and altitudes where no crops will grow.
W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 1st ser., p. 103.

Argument of the latitude. See argument.—Ascending latitude. See ascending.—Calm latitudes. See calm.—Celestial latitude. See def. 5, above.—Circle of latitude. See circle.—Geocentric, reduced, or central latitude. See circle, the angle, measured at the center of the earth, between a straight line to any place and the line to the equator in the same meridian.—Heliocentric latitude. See heliocentric.—Hellographic latitude. See heliographic.—Latitude by account (naut.), the latitude deduced from the course and distance sailed since the last observation.—Latitude by observation (naut.), the latitude deduced from an observation of some heavenly body.—Middle latitude, in naut., the latitude of the parallel midway between two places situated in the same hemisphere. It is equal to half the sum of the latitudes of the two places when they are on the same side of the equator; when they are on opposite sides, it is equal to half the difference of their latitudes.—Middle-latitude sailing, a combination of plane and parallel sailing, so named from the use of the middle latitude—that is, the latitude of the parallel which is equally distant from the parallel left and the one arrived at. See sailing.—Parallel of latitude. Same as circle of latitude (b).

latitudinal (lat-i-tū'di-nal), a. [= Sp. latitudinal, < L. latitudo (-din-), breadth, + -al.] Pertaining to latitude; being in the direction of latitude.

latitudinarian (lat-i-tū-di-nā'ri-an), a. and n. [Cf. F. latitudinaire; < NL. latitudinarius, < L. latitudo (-din-), breadth; see latitude.] I. a. 1. Embracing a wide circle or range; having free scope; not conforming to a strict code of morals; roving; libertine.

Latitudinarian love will be expensive, and therefore I would be informed what is to be gotten by it.
Jeremy Collier, Kindness.

2. Characterized by latitude or independence of thought, or by forbearance from strict insistence upon the usual standards of belief or opinion; especially, not rigidly strict in religious principles or views; tolerant of free-thinking or heresy; as, latitudinarian opinions or doctrines. The word is generally used opprobriously. It is specifically applied in church history to certain Episcopal divines of the seventeenth century (see below), but in later times to all who regard specific creeds, methods of church government, and forms of worship with comparative indifference.

A man bred among Dutch Presbyterians, and well known to hold latitudinarian opinions about robes, ceremonies, and bishops.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

Men of broad views, of tolerant, if not latitudinarian, temper.
H. N. Ozenham, Short Studies, p. 9.

Locke . . . was a theologian, and a sincere if latitudinarian Christian.
Leslie Stephen, Eng. Thought, i. § 21.

II. n. 1. In Eng. church hist., one of a school of Episcopal divines who in the seventeenth century strove to unite the dissenters with the Episcopal Church by insisting only on those doctrines which were held in common by both, and who, while they maintained the wisdom of the episcopal form of government and ritual, denied their divine origin and authority.

They wished that things might have been carried with more moderation, and they continued to keep up a good correspondence with those who differed from them in opinion, and allowed a great freedom both in philosophy and in divinity; from whence they were called "men of latitude"; and upon this men of narrow thoughts fastened upon them the name of latitudinarians.
Ep. Burnet.

2. Hence, in later times, one who regards with comparative indifference specific creeds, methods of church government, and forms of public worship; generally used opprobriously.

latitudinarianism (lat-i-tū-di-nā'ri-an-izm), n. [latitudinarian + -izm.] The doctrine of a latitudinarian or of the latitudinarians; freedom or liberality of opinion in religion, philosophy, politics, etc.; laxity or indifference in regard to doctrines and forms.

He [Jortin] was a lover of truth, without hovering over the gloomy abyss of scepticism; and a friend to free enquiry, without roving into the dreary and pathless wilds of latitudinarianism.
Parr, Tracts by a Warburtonian.

Fierce sectarianism bred fierce latitudinarianism.
De Quincy.

Extreme contrasts of doctrine have come to be openly treated as simply differences of opinion. Sacerdotalism and latitudinarianism finding a common home in an undivided Church.
Contemporary Rev., L. 21.

latitudinous (lat-i-tū'di-nus), a. [latitudo (-din-), breadth; see latitude.] Very broad; having a wide extent or scope.

latont, n. A Middle English form of latten.
Chaucer.

Latona (lā-tō'nā), n. [L., < Gr. Λητώ, Doric Λατώ; see def.] 1. In classical myth., the Roman name of the Greek goddess Leto, mother by Jupiter of Apollo and Diana. See Leto.

Mygale, the symbol of Latona or Night.
Knight, Anc. Art and Myth, (1876), p. 57.

2. In zool.: (a) A genus of mollusks. (b) A genus of cladoceros crustaceans of the family Sididae. (c) A genus of rove-beetles or Staphylinidae having the anterior tarsi dilated. There are two species, both from the United States of Colombia. Guérin, 1844. (d) A genus of spiders. C. Koch, 1866.

Such a metal was used throughout the middle ages and later, commonly in thin sheets, for the manufacture of various utensils, and for the brasses of repulsive monuments. The term appears to be now restricted to kinds of brass that are worked into articles for ecclesiastical use.

He hadde a croys of latoun ful of stones.
Chaucer, Gen. Procl. to C. T., l. 699.

The doores or gntes are covered with fine Latten of Corinth: one of which (they imagine) was made of the wood of Noahs Arke.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 298.

The candlestick was seven-branched, made of laton or brass, so that it could be easily set up or taken to pieces again.
Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. l. 244.

2. Same as latten-brass.—Black latten, a dark-colored latten in milled sheets, sometimes beaten into wire.—Gold latten. See gold.—Latten wire, wire made from strips of latten beaten with a mallet until round. Such wire was made before the introduction of wire-drawing machines.—Roll latten, latten polished on both sides ready for use. Simmonds.—Shaven latten, a thinner kind of latten.

latten-brass (lat'en-brās), n. A metallic compound into which scrap-brass and other ingredients enter, and which is rolled in thin plates.

Hear counsel, and receive instruction, that thou mayest be wise in thy latter end.
Prov. xix. 20.

2. Coming after another person or thing in consideration or relation; being the second of two or of a dual division in order of existence or of mention; opposed to former: as, I prefer the latter proposition to the former.

I hold it ever,
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater Than nobleness and riches; careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend.
Shak., Pericles, III. 2. 29.

This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato.
Swift, Sent. of Ch. of Eng. Man, i.

3. Last; latest; final.

Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., II. 5. 38.

Latter end, Lammas, etc. See the nouns.—The former and the latter rain. See rain.

latter-born (lat'er-bōrn), a. Born later; younger.

My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Itad fasten'd him unto a small spare mast.
Shak., C. of E., I. 1. 79.

latter-day (lat'er-dā), a. Belonging to recent or present times, as opposed to early or former periods.

Two charming expressions of another of Mr. Lang's latter-day moods.
The Academy, Dec. 29, 1888, p. 396.

lattice (lat'is), n. [Early mod. E. also lattise, lattis; < ME. latis, < OF. lattis, F. lattis, a lattice, < latte, a lath: see lath.] 1. Work with open spaces formed by crossing, interlacing, or joining laths, bars, or rods of wood or metal.

Lattice-window.

So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement need not open, for I look through thee.

Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 225.

The upper part of the window, which is most commonly shut, is made of glasse or lattice.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 50.

2. Anything made of or covered with strips interwoven so as to form a sort of network; specifically, a window, window-blind, or screen made of laths or strips which cross one another like network, so as to leave open interstices. Lattices are used especially when air rather than light is to be admitted. They were once general in England. Also lattice-blind, lattice-window.

Holding a lattice still before his face,
 Through which he still did peep as forward he did pace.

Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 15.

The mother of Sisera looked out at a window and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming?

Judges v. 28.

Backward the lattice-blind she flung.

Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

3. In her., a bearing representing a series of perpendicular and horizontal strips crossing one another over the field or a part of it. These strips may be interlaced or not, and if interlaced should be so blazoned. A lattice differs from a surface fretty in being palewise and barwise, while fretty is always bendwise. According to some writers, the lattice should never be interlaced, and it is allowed by them that the strips may be bendwise, dexter and sinister, the difference between this and a surface fretty being in the circumstance that they do not interlace.—Red lattice, a frame of lattice-work painted bright-red, formerly used to fill the windows of an ale-house: considered a sign or mark of a tavern.

His Saint Valerio,
 That knows not of what fashion dice are made,
 Nor ever yet look'd towards a red lattice.

Chapman, All Fools, v. 1.

A' calls me e'en now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 2. 86.

lattice (lat'is), v. t.; pret. and pp. latticed, ppr. latticing. [lattice, n.] 1. To furnish with a lattice.

The windows were latticed with small panes.

Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 5.

2. To give the form or appearance of a lattice to.

O'er their heads
 Huge alders weave their canopies, and shed
 Disparted moonlight through the latticed boughs.

Glover, Athenaid, xxvii.

Every morning when the sun peeps through
 The dim, leaf-latticed windows of the grove.

Longfellow, Birds of Killingworth.

Latticed cells, in bot., same as cambriform cells. See cambriform.—Latticed leaves, in bot., cancellate leaves. See cancellate.—To lattice up, to hide from the light of day; render obscure; eclipse.

lattice-braid (lat'is-bräd), n. A narrow braid made on the lace-pillow and having the appearance of a fine lattice, all the principal openings being of the same size.

lattice-bridge (lat'is-brij), n. A bridge in which the web between the chords, or the combination of the main compression and tension members, is formed so as to resemble lattice-work. It is a frequent form of construction in Europe, where bridges of this kind have been built of more than 300 feet span. In these bridges the tendency to lateral deflection, due to the lightness of the web, is counteracted by making the trusses double and properly connected, thus forming a kind of openwork box-girder. See cut under bridge.

lattice-girder (lat'is-gér'dér), n. A girder of which the web consists of diagonal pieces arranged like lattice-work.

latticeleaf (lat'is-léf), n. A name of the Madagascar water-plants Aponogeton (Ouvirandra) fenestralis and A. (O.) Berneriana. They are remarkable for their skeleton leaves, the cellular tissue be-

2. That part of divine worship which consists in praise.—3. Music or a song in praise or honor of any one.

She chanted snatches of old lauds.

Shak., Hamlet (ed. Collier), iv. 7. 178.

4. pl. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., and in the Anglican Ch. as a monastic or devotional office, a religious service, forming, in combination with matins, the first of the seven canonical hours: so called from the reiterated ascriptions of praise to God in the last of the psalms (cxlviii., cxlix., cl.) which it contains. The usage in the Greek church is similar. See canonical hours, under canonical.

The belle of laudes gan to ryng,
 And freera in the chauncel gonne syng.
 Chaucer, Miller's Tale, I. 469.

These nocturns should begin at such a time as to be ended just as morning twilight broke, so that the next of her services, the lauds, or matinae laudes, might come on immediately after, like gladsome thankfulness for a new day then dawning, an emblem of Christ's second coming.

Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. ii. 6.

laud (lâd), v. t. [ME. lauden = F. louer = Sp. laudar, loar = Pg. louvar = It. laudare, lodare, < L. laudare, praise, < laus (laud-), praise: see laud, n. Cf. allow.] To praise in words; speak or sing in praise of; especially, to extol or praise highly: as, to laud one to the skies.

laurel-tree (lâ'rel-trê), n. The laurel.

laurel-water (lâ'rel-wâ'têr), n. A medicinal water distilled from the leaves of the cherry-laurel. It is employed in Europe as a sedative narcotic, identical in its properties with a dilute solution of hydrocyanic acid. U. S. Dispensatory.

Laurentian (lâ-ren'shign), a. and n. [Lawrence, ML. Laurentius (see defs.), + -ian.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to Laurentius or Lorenzo dei Medici, or to the Laurentian Library in Florence, named from him.—2. Of or pertaining to the river St. Lawrence: applied in geology, in 1854, by Sir W. E. Logan, to a series of rocks occupying an extensive area in the region of the Upper Lakes, and previously called by him the metamorphic series, and by Föster and Whitney the azoic series. These rocks, which unquestionably underlie, unconformably, the oldest known fossiliferous strata, are now (following the lead of J. D. Dana) more generally denominated archæan; and the same is true in regard to rocks of similar lithological character and of supposed similar stratigraphical position, which occur in other parts of the world, and which have been more or less vaguely and indiscriminately called Laurentian. Those who hold that the absence of traces of organic life is a matter of fundamental importance, and that the unavailing search for fossils in these rocks during half a century is at least a strong indication that none will be found, and that this fact should be recognized in the nomenclature, still adhere to the name azoic, in preference to archæan.—Laurentian Library, a celebrated library at Florence, founded by Pope Clement VII. (1523-34) from previous collections of the Medici family, to which he belonged, and named in honor of Lorenzo dei Medici. It contains many rare books, but is famous chiefly for its large collection of early and valuable manuscripts. Also called the Medicean or the Mediceo-Laurentian Library.

Branch of Laurel (Laurus nobilis), with male flowers. a, male flower with base of the inflorescence, showing two involucre leaves; b, female flower; c, stamen, showing the dehiscence of the anther; d, fruit.

II. n. In geol., the Laurentian series. laureoler (lâ'rê-ôl), n. [Early mod. E. lauriel, < ME. lauriol, < OF. laureole, < F. laurcole = Sp. laurcola = Pg. It. laureola, the laureole, < L. laureola, a little laurel garland, a laurel-branch, dim. of laurea, a laurel garland, fem. of laureus, of laurel, < Laurus, laurel: see laurel.] Spurge-laurel, Daphne Laureola.

Lauriol, centaure, and fumetere. Chaucer, Nun's Pricat's Tale, I. 143.

laurert, n. [ME., also lawrer, lorer, var. of laurer, q. v.] The laurel.

laurer-crowned, a. Crowned with laurel. Chaucer, Troilus, v. 1107.

laurestine (lâ'res-tin), n. Same as laurustine.

lauriel, n. See laureole.

lauriferous (lâ-rif'ê-rus), a. [= Sp. laurifero = It. laurifero, < L. laurus, laurel, + ferre = E. bear.] Producing or carrying laurel. Cotes, 1717.

laurin (lâ'rin), n. [L. laurus, laurel, + -in.] A fatty crystalline principle (C₂₂H₃₀O₃) contained in the berries of the laurel.

laurine (lâ'rin), a. [ME. lawryne, < OF. laurin, < L. laurinus, of laurel, < Laurus, laurel: see laurel.] Of laurel.

As oil lawryne is lentscyne of take, Whooa vigour hoot water must underslake. Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 59.

Laurineæ (lâ-rin'ê-ê), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1813), < Laurus + -ineæ.] A natural order of apetalous plants, the laurel family, typified by the genus Laurus. It embraces 42 genera and about 900 species of trees or shrubs, found for the most part in the warmer regions of America, Asia, Australia, and the islands of the Pacific. It is divided by modern authors into four tribes, the Persæceæ, Litæceæ, Cassythææ, and Hernandiææ, the last two abnormal and consisting each of a single genus. The plants of this order have strong properties, usually aromatic or medicinal. To it belong, besides the laurel, the genera Cinnamomum (producing cinnamon and camphor) and Sassafras, as well as other plants of economic importance. Also Lauraceæ.

Laurinium (lâ-rin'i-um), n. [NL. (Unger, 1850), < Laurus + -inium.] The generic name applied to fossil wood having an internal structure resembling that of Laurus.

Laurinoxylon (lâ-rin-ok'si-lon), n. [NL. (Felix), < Laurus (Laurinium) + Gr. ξύλον, wood.] Same as Laurinium. Also Laurinoxylum.

lauriol, n. See laureole.

laurionite (lâ'ri-on-it), n. [Irreg. < Laurion (see def.) + -ite.] An oxychlorid of lead occurring in prismatic crystals at Laurium (Laurion), Greece, and produced by the action of sea-water upon the ancient lead slags.

laurite (lâ'rit), n. [So called by Wöhler, a German chemist, after a lady whose Christian name was Laura.] A sulphid of osmium and ruthenium, a rare mineral, occurring in regular octahedrons, of an iron-black color and bright metallic luster, found in the platinum-washings of Borneo. It occurs also in Oregon.

laurize (lâ'riz), v. t. [L. laurus, laurel, + -ize.] To crown with laurel; laureate.

Our humble notes, though little noted now, Lauriz'd hereafter. Sylvester, Posthumous Sonnets, III.

Laurophyllum (lâ-rô-fil'um), n. [NL. (Goppert, 1848), < Laurus + Gr. φύλλον, leaf.] The generic name given to fossil leaves having the shape and nervation of those of Laurus, with which genus, however, their identity has not been established. Such leaves are found in the Tertiary of Italy, Java, and New Zealand, and in the Cretaceous of Kansas and the British Northwest Territories.

Laurus (lâ'rus), n. [NL. use of L. laurus, the laurel-tree, applied by Linnæus to the genus:

see laurel.] A genus of apetalous trees, type of the natural order Laurineæ, falling within the tribe Litæceæ. It is characterized by polygamous flowers in clusters of four together in an involucre, a perianth of 4 segments, and usually 12 to 20 stamens. Only 2 species are known, one, L. nobilis, the true laurel, inhabiting the Mediterranean region, the other, L. Canariensis, confined to the Canary Islands. They are small trees having alternate, entire, evergreen leaves, with the flower-clusters borne in their axils. The fruit is an ovoid berry. (See laurel.) An immense number of fossil leaves agreeing in all essential respects with those of Laurus have been found, ranging from the Lower Cretaceous of the British Northwest Territory and the Middle Cretaceous of Kansas, Greenland, and Bohemia to the Miocene and Quaternary of Europe, showing clearly that the plants of this genus and closely related types were much more abundant formerly than now. L. Canariensis is also thus proved to have existed on the continent of Europe in Miocene time.

laurustine (lâ'rus-tin), n. [Also laurestine; < NL. laurustinus: see laurustinus.] Same as laurustinus.

laurustinus (lâ-rus-ti'nus), n. [NL., orig. Laurus Tinus: L. laurus, laurel; tinus, a plant, Viburnum Tinus.] A plant, Viburnum Tinus, a popular evergreen garden shrub or tree, native in southern Europe.

laust, a. A Middle English variant of loose. Chaucer.

lause, v. A Middle English variant of lose.

lautitious (lâ-tish'us), a. [L. lautitia, elegance, splendor, magnificence, < lautus, neat, elegant, splendid, lit. washed, pp. of lavare, wash: see lave.] Sumptuous.

To sup with thee thou did'st ne home invite, And mad'st a promise that mine appetite Sho'd meet and tire on such lautitious meat, The like not Hellogabalus did eat. Herrick, The Invitation.

lava (lâ'vâ), n. [= D. G. Dan. Sw. lava = F. lave = Sp. Pg. lava, < It. lava, a stream, esp. of molten rock, < lavare, wash, < L. lavare, wash: see lave.] Molten rock which issues from a volcano during an eruption; the same when cooled and hardened. Lavas after hardening differ much in structure and texture. Some are entirely made up of an interlaced mass of crystals, others are entirely vitreous, as in the case of obsidian or volcanic glass. Others, again, have a partially glassy matrix, in which crystals are embedded—this last being the most common arrangement. Lavas also vary much in respect to compactness; some have an open cellular structure, while others are very compact. The specific gravity of lava varies in the different kinds from 2.37 to 3.22. The heavier or more basic kinds contain much magnetite or titaniferous iron, together with augite and olivin. These contain from 45 to 50 per cent. of silica, and to this class belong the basalts, dolerites, and nepheline and feldite lavas. The lighter or more acid varieties of lava contain from 60 to 80 per cent. or more of silica. In this class are included the trachytes and rhyolites, as well as most of the pitchstones, obsidians, and pumice. There are also varieties intermediate between the acid and the basic, such as augite andesite and hornblende andesite. Many volcanoes—at least during certain stages of their existence—throw out fragmentary materials only, and these are sometimes ejected during the same period of activity in which molten lava is poured forth. Among these fragmentary materials are ash, sand, lapilli, and even large angular masses occur. Portions of the molten material within the pipe of the crater are sometimes hurled aloft, and fall in the form of bombs, or in rough irregular masses, like furnace-slag. Some volcanoes consist entirely of these fragmentary materials; others are chiefly made up of lava which became consolidated after ejection; in many cases, however, the mass of the cone has been built up by alternations of fragmentary and fluid material, and the whole is frequently bound together by dike and sheets of lava forced into cracks formed during the operation.—Lava millstone, a hard and coarse basaltic millstone, obtained from quarries near Andernach on the Rhine. Simmonds.—Lava-ware, a kind of coarse ware resembling lava, made from iron slag, cast into urns, tiles, table-tops, etc.

lavabo (lâ-vâ'bô), n. [L. lavabo, 1st pers. sing. fut. ind. of lavare, wash: see lave.] 1. Eccles., in the Roman Catholic Church, and in many Anglican churches, the ritual act of washing the celebrant's hands after the offertory and before entering upon the more solemn part of the eucharistic service: so called from the priest's reciting at the time the last part of the 26th psalm, beginning with the sixth verse, "I will wash my hands in innocency," in Latin, "Lavabo manus meas in innocentia." In the Greek Church this takes place in the prothesis, before vesting.—2. In many monasteries of the middle ages, a large stone basin from which the water issued by a number of small orifices around the edge, for the convenient performance of ablutions before religious exercises or meals. The lavabo was usually placed in a room, itself called lavabo, adjoining the cloister, and sometimes, as at the Cistercian Abbey of Fontenay, was the occasion of noteworthy architectural dispositions. Also known in medieval times as lavatorium. Hence.—3. A convenience of similar object and arrangement in some modern schools or institutions; a lavatory. lavage, a. An obsolete form of lavish. Cath. Angl., p. 210.

lavage² (lā'vāj), n. [= F. lavage = Pg. lavagem; as *lave*² + -age.] A laving or washing; in med., the process of cleansing by injection of fluids; specifically, the washing out of the stomach, as in gastritis.

Lavage of the stomach has accomplished . . . wonderful results in the treatment of gastric affection. Therapeutic Gazette, VIII. 530.

lavaltot, n. An obsolete variant of lavolta.

lavander, n. See *lavender*¹.

Lavandula (la-van'dū-lā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < ML. lavandula, lavendula, lavender: see *lavender*².] A genus of labiate plants, containing the lavenders, of the tribe Oeimoideae, and constituting the subtribe Lavanduleae. It is characterized by having the calyx tubular (with 13 to 15 striae) and 5-toothed, and small flowers in spikes. There are about 20 species, chiefly natives of the Mediterranean region, but ranging from the Canary Islands to India. They are perennial herbs, undershrubs, or shrubs, with the leaves often crowded at the base, and whorls of flowers, blue or violet, arranged in cylindrical spikes, and subtended by bracts which are often large and colored. See *lavender*².

Lavender (Lavandula vera).
1, lower part of plant; 2, inflorescence; 3, flower; 4, pistil.

Lavanduleæ (lav-an-dū'lē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Lavandula + -æ.] A subtribe of labiate plants of the tribe Oeimoideae. It is characterized by having the lobes of the corolla nearly equal, the upper lip twice cleft, the lower thrice cleft, and the stamens included within the tube of the corolla. It embraces the genus Lavandula, or lavender-plants, only.

lavanger, n. [Cf. OF. lavache, lavace, lavasse, a heavy rain, an inundation, < laver, wash: see *lave*².] Same as lavant.

lavant (lā'vant), n. [Also levant; appar. < OF. lavant (applied to a spring), ppr. of laver, wash: see *lave*². Cf. lavange.] A shallow and more or less intermittent spring. [Prov. Eng.]

The land-springs, which we call lavants, break out much on the downs of Sussex, Hampshire, and Wiltshire. Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, II. 19.

lavaret (lav'ā-ret), n. [F.] A kind of white-fish, Coregonus lavaretus, found in European lakes, as of Switzerland, Germany, and Sweden. Also called adelfisch.

lavast, a. An obsolete form of lavish.

Lavatera (la-vā'tē-rā), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), dedicated to the two Lavaters, physicians and naturalists of Zurich.] A genus of malvaceous plants of the tribe Malvæ, subtribe Eumalvæ. It is closely related to Malva, the true mallows, but differs from that genus in having from 6 to 9 bractlets under the flowers (these being united at the base), and in the projecting and dilated carpels. There are over 20 species, chiefly natives of the Mediterranean region and western Europe, but 2 occur on the Canary Islands, 1 in central Asia, and 1 in Australia. They are tomentose or hirsute herbs, shrubs, or small trees, with angled or lobed leaves, and variously colored flowers, either solitary in the axils or in terminal racemes. L. arborea, the best-known species, is the tree-mallow or sea-mallow of Europe, which grows wild on the rocky coasts from Spain to Scotland. In cultivation it attains a height of 8 or 10 feet. It has pale purple-red flowers in long racemes at the ends of the annually flowering branches. It contains an abundance of mucilaginous matter, and yields a poor fiber. In common with other soft-leaved malvaceous plants, it is sometimes called velvetleaf. Nearly all the species of this genus are sometimes cultivated.

lavatic (lā-vat'ik), a. [< lava + -atic.] Consisting of or resembling lava; lavic.

lavation (lā-vā'shōn), n. [= OF. lavacion = Sp. lavacion = It. lavazione, < L. lavatio (n.), a bath, < lavare, wash: see *lave*².] A washing or cleansing.

Such filthy stuff was by loose lewd varlets sung before her (Berecynthia's) charet on the solemn day of her lavation. Hakevill, Apology, IV. l. § 7.

Opposite to these are placed the appurtenances of lavation, richly wrought in frosted silver. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, p. 197.

lavatory (lav'ā-tō-ri), a. and n. [I. a. < L. as if lavatorius*, adj., < LL. lavator, a clothes-washer, < lavare, pp. lavatus, wash: see *lave*². II. n. < ME. lavatory = F. lavatoire = Sp. Pg. lavatorio = It. lavatoio, < LL. lavatorium, a place for bathing, neut. of lavatorius*: see I.] I. a. Washing, or cleansing by washing.

II. n.; pl. lavatories (-riz). 1. A room or place for washing, or where anything is washed. They baptized in rivers or in lavatories, by dipping or by sprinkling. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 136.

We landed at a floating lavatory, where the washerwomen were still beating the clothea. R. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 201.

2. A sort of concave stone table upon which, in the middle ages, dead bodies were washed Lavatory, Abbey of Cluny.

(From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. de l'Architecture.") before burial, in monasteries, hospitals, and elsewhere.—3. In med., a wash or lotion for a diseased part.

lavature (lav'ā-tūr), n. [= It. lavatura, < L. lavatus, pp. of lavare, wash: see *lave*².] A wash or lotion. Holland.

lave¹ (lāv), v.; pret. and pp. laved, ppr. laving. [< ME. laven, < AS. lāfan, gelaflan (rare), pour out or sprinkle water, = D. laven = OHG. lābōn, lābēn, MHG. laben, wash, G. laben, refresh; cf. Gr. λάβω, ἀλατίζω, empty out. Connection with *lave*², < L. lavare, wash, is uncertain. The two words in E. seem to have become confused. Hence lavish.] I. trans. 1. To pour or throw out, as water; lade out; bail; bail out.

Pounding of water in a mortar, laving
The sea dry with a nutshell.

B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, v. 2.

And now, as we were weary with pumping and laving out the water, almost sinking, it pleas'd God on the sudden to appease the wind. Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 11, 1644.

A fourth with labour laves
The intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves.

Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xi. 448.

2. To draw, as water; drink in.

He [Orpheus] . . . soong in wepyng al that ever he hadde reaveyvyd and laved [tr. L. lavavit] out of the noble welles of his modyr Calyope the goddes. Chaucer, Boethius, iii. meter 12.

3. To give bountifully; lavish.

He lavet his gyftez as water of dyche.

Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 607.

II. intrans. 1. To run down or gutter, as a candle. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To hang or flap down. Compare lave-eared. [Prov. Eng.]

Basins, and ewers, to lave her dainty hands.

Shak., T. of the S., II. 1. 350.

The left presents a place of graves,

Whose wall the silent water laves.

Parnell, A Night Piece, Death.

II. intrans. 1. To wash one's self; bathe. Ever since I heedlessly did lave
In thy deceitful stream. Keats, Endymion, II.

2. To serve for washing or bathing; wash or flow as against something.

But, as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heaven open'd her eternal doors.

Milton, P. R., I. 280.

These waters blue that round you lave. Byron.

lave³ (lāv), n. [< ME. lave, laif, lafe, < AS. lāf (= OS. lāba = OFries. lava = OHG. leiba, leipa, MHG. leibe = Icel. leif, pl. leifar = Dan. lev (frequent in local names: Haderslev, Snoldelev, etc.) = Goth. laiba), what is left, < lifan*, remain: see *lave*¹.] What is left; the remainder; the rest. [Scotch.]

We had better lose ane than lose a' the lave.

Archib. of Ca'feld (Child's Ballads, VI. 93).

Weel pleased to think her balrn's respected like the lave. Burns, Cottar's Saturday Night.

lave-eared (lāv'ērd), a. Long-eared; flap-eared. [Prov. Eng.]

A lave-eard asse with gold may trapped be.

Sp. Hall, Satires, II. ii. 64.

laveer† (la-vēr'), v. i. [= G. lavieren, laviren, < D. laveeren, now laveren, tack, lavec, < OF. louvier, F. louvoyer, beat to windward, luff, < louf, lof, loof, luff: see *loof*², luff.] Naut., to sail back and forth; tack.

But those that 'gainst stiff gales laveering go

Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too.

Dryden, Astrea Redux, I. 65.

laveerer†, n. One who tacks or works up against the wind.

They [the schoolmen] are the best laveerers in the world, and would have taught a ship to have caught the wind, that it should have gained half in half, though it had been contrary. Clarendon, Essays, I. 253.

lavel (lā'vel), n. [Prob. a var. of label.] The flap that covers the top of the windpipe. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lave-lugged (lāv'lugd), a. Same as lave-eared. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lavement† (lāv'mēt), n. [< F. lavement = Pr. lavament = Sp. lavamiento = Pg. It. lavamento; as *lave*² + -ment.] 1. The act of laving; a washing or bathing.—2. A clyster.

lavender¹† (lav'en-dēr), n. [< ME. lavender, lavinder, lavander, lavendre (also contr. launder, launderre, landar, < mod. E. launder), < OF. lavandier, lavendier, m., lavandiere, lavendiere, f., = Sp. lavandero, lavandera = Pg. lavandeira, = It. lavandaja, m., lavandaja, lavandara, f., < ML. lavandarius, m., lavandaria, lavandaria, f., a washer, < L. lavandus, gerundive of lavare, wash: see *lave*².] A washer; a washerwoman; a laundress.

Envye ys lavendere of the court alway;

For she ne parteth neither nyght ne day

Out of the hous of Cesar, thus saith Daunte.

Chaucer, Good Women, I. 357.

lavender¹ (lav'en-dēr), v. t. [< lavender, n. Cf. launder, v.] To launder; wash. [An archaism.]

Concealing that the smell of soap, from the lavendering in the back-yard, gave a stain to such flowers . . . as were born there. N. P. Willis, New Mirror (1843).

lavender² (lav'en-dēr), n. and a. [< ME. lavendere, lavendre, lavandre = OF. lavendre* = Sp. (obs.) lavandula = It. lavandula = D. laevendel = MHG. lavendele, lavendel, G. lavendel = Dan. An aromatic plant of the genus Lavandula, primarily L. vera, the true lavender, which is used as a perfume. See Lavandula.

Here's flowers for you;

Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram.

Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 104.

Crowned lilies, standing near Purple-spiked lavender.

Tennyson, Ode to Memory.

2. The color of lavender-blossoms; a very pale lilac-color, which in consequence of its paleness appears less reddish. A mixture of color-diaka $\frac{1}{4}$ white + $\frac{1}{4}$ artificial ultramarine + $\frac{1}{4}$ vermilion gives a lavender. A very pale lavender is called a lavender-gray; a still paler color a French white.—Oil of lavender, or lavender-oil, an essential oil obtained by distillation from the flowers and flower-stems of lavender. It is an aromatic stimulant and tonic. An inferior lavender-oil, called oil of spike, is yielded by Lavandula Spica, which, together with that from L. Stechas, is used by porcelain-painters and artists in the preparation of their varnishes.—French lavender, Lavandula Spica.—Sea-lavender, the plant Statice Limonium.—To lay in lavender. (a) To lay carefully, as clothes, with sprigs of lavender among them.

And a black sattin suit of his own to go before her in; which suit (for the more sweet'ning) now lies in lavender. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, III. 3.

Hence—(bt) To put in pledge; pawn. [Old slang.]

To lay to pawne, as we say to lay in lavender. Florio.

Good faith, rather than thou shouldst pawn a rag more,
I'll lay my ladyship in lavender, if I knew where.
Marston, Jonson, and Chapman, Eastward Ho.

II. a. Of the color of lavender-blossoms; very pale lilac.

A pair of lavender gloves which fitted her exactly.
Yates, Land at Last, I, 210.

lavender² (lav'en-dér), v. t. [< lavender², n.] To sprinkle or scent with lavender.

The solemn clerk goes lavendered and shorn.
Hood, Two Peacocks of Bedford, st. 25.

It shall be all my study for one hour
To rose and lavender my horliness.
Tennyson, Queen Mary, III, 5.

lavender-cotton (lav'en-dér-kot' n), n. See cotton¹.

lavender-drop (lav'en-dér-drop), n. Compound tincture of lavender.

lavender-oil (lav'en-dér-oil), n. See lavender².

lavender-thrift (lav'en-dér-thrift), n. The sea-lavender, Statice Limonium.

lavender-water (lav'en-dér-wá'tèr), n. A liquor used as a perfume, composed of spirits of wine, essential oil of lavender, and ambergris.

lavendrey, n. An obsolete form of laundry. Hallivell.

laventine (lav'en-tin), n. A thin silk, used especially for sleeve-linings.

laver¹ (lá'ver), n. [Formerly also lavor; < ME. laver, lavor (= D. lavor, > G. lavor), < OF. lavar, lavur, lavor, laveour, lavoir, F. laver, < LL. lavatorium, a place for washing; see lavatory.]

1. A basin, bowl, trough, or cistern to wash in. The laver mentioned in the Old Testament was a large basin which stood upon a foot or pedestal in the court of the Jewish tabernacle, and subsequently in the temple, and contained water for the ablutions of the priests, and for the washing of the sacrifices in the temple service.

Basins, lavours eek, or men hem bye.
Chaucer, Prologue to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 287.

Thou shalt also make a laver of brass. . . . Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat.
Ex. xxx. 18.

It gushes into three ample lavours rais'd about with stone.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 12, 1644.

2. In her., a colter or plowshare when used as a bearing.

laver² (lá'ver), n. [< L. laver, a water-plant, also called ston.] 1. Either of two species of algae of the genus Porphyra, P. laciniata and P. vulgaris, known in Ireland and Scotland as sloke or slokan. They are used as food, either stewed or pickled, and eaten with pepper, vinegar, and oil; and they are said to be useful in scrofulous affections and glandular swellings. Also laverwort.

2. A dish composed of one of the above algae or of some similar seaweed. See laver-bread.—Green laver, Ulva latissima and U. lactuca, used for the same purposes as Porphyra laciniata or P. vulgaris, but inferior.—Purple laver, a general name in England for plants of the genus Porphyra.

laver³, a. [Cf. lave¹, v. i., 2.] Hanging.

Let his laver lip
Speak in reproach of nature's workmanship.
Marston, Satires, v. 159.

laver-bread (lá'ver-bred), n. A sort of food made from green laver (Ulva latissima): sometimes called oyster-green.

laverock (lav'er-ok), n. [Also lavrock, leverock; see lark¹.] An obsolete or dialectal form of lark¹.

There mighte men see many flokkes
Of turtles and laverokes.
Rom. of Rose, l. 662.

Now lav'rocks wake the merry morn,
Aloft on dewy wing.
Burns, Lament of Mary Queen of Scots.

Sandy laverock, the sand-lark or ring-plover, Egialites hiaticula; also, the common sandpiper, Tringoides hypoleucos. Also called water-laverock.

laver-pot (lá'ver-pot), n. In her., a ewer when used as a bearing.

laverwort (lá'ver-wèrt), n. Same as laver², 1.

lavic (lá'vik), a. [= F. lavique; as lava + -ic.] Relating to or like lava.

lavish (lav'ish), a. [Early mod. E. also (appar. by corruption) lavis, laves, lavas; also in another formation lavyl, q. v.; *< ME. lavish, lavagé; < lave¹ + -ish¹.] 1. Expending or bestowing with profusion; profuse; prodigal; as, to be lavish of expense, of praise, or of blood.

She, of her favourite place the pride and joy,
Of charms at once most lavish and most coy.
Crabbe.

He was ambitious of acquisitions, but lavish in expenditure.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., l. 15.

2. Unrestrained; wild.

In all other thing so light and laves [are they] of their tongue.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 250.

When his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 4. 64.

Lewd and lavish acts of sin. Milton, Comus, l. 465.

3. Expended or bestowed with prodigality or in profuseness; existing in or characterized by profusion; superabundant.

Let her have needful, but not lavish, means.
Shak., M. for M., II, 2. 24.

For lavish grants suppose a monarch tame,
And more his goodness than his wit proclaim.
Dryden, Abn. and Achil., l. 385.

The eyes that smiled through lavish locks.
Whittier, Hermist of the Thebald.

4. Rank, as grass, etc. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.] = Syn. 1 and 3. Profuse, etc. See extravagant.

lavish (lav'ish), v. t. [< lavish, a.] To expend or bestow with profusion; give or lay out prodigally; as, to lavish encomiums on a person; to lavish money on a friend, or for gratification.

Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride.
Addison, Letter from Italy.

Even as a war minister, Pitt is scarcely entitled to all the praise which his contemporaries lavished on him.
Macaulay, William Pitt.

lavish† (lav'ish), n. [< lavish, v.] Waste; squandering.

Such lavish will I make of Turkish blood.
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, II, l. 3.

Would Atropos would cut my vital thread,
And so make lavish of my loathed life.
Wily Beguiled (Hawkins's Eng. Dramas, III, 323).

lavisher (lav'ish-ér), n. One who lavishes; one who expends or bestows profusely or excessively; a prodigal.

God is not a lavisher, but a dispenser of his blessings.
Fotherby, Atheomastix, p. 189.

lavishly (lav'ish-li), adv. In a lavish manner; with profuse expense; prodigally.

lavishment (lav'ish-ment), n. [< lavish + -ment.] The act of lavishing; profuse bestowal or expenditure; prodigality.

Ah, happy realm the while
That by no officer's lewd lavishment,
With greedy lust and wrong, consumed art.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, vi.

lavishness (lav'ish-nes), n. The state or quality of being lavish; profusion; prodigality.

First got with gulle, and then preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness.
Spenser, F. Q., II, vii. 12.

lavolt† (la-volt'), n. [< lavolta.] Same as lavolta.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 4. 58.

lavolta† (la-vol'tä), n. [Also, erroneously, lavolto; < It. la volta, the turn; It. (< L. illa, that); volta, a turning round; see vault, n.] A lively round dance, of Italian origin, popular in England in the time of Elizabeth and later. It probably resembled the polka or the waltz.

For io! the liveless Jacks lavoltos take
At that sweet music which themselves do make.
Brome's Songs (ed. 1661), p. 133. (Hallivell.)

They teach us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift corantos.
Shak., Hen. V., III, 5. 33.

lavolta† (la-vol'tä), v. i. [Also, erroneously, lavolto; < lavolta, n.] To spring or whirl as in the lavolta.

Do but make him on your walls, any morning at that season, how he sallies and lavoltos.
Nashe, Lenten Stuffe (Harl. Misc., VI, 164).

lavolteter† (la-vol'tè-tèr), n. [For lavoltateer*, < lavolta + -t- (a mere insertion) + -eer.] One who dances the lavolta; a dancer.

The second, a lavolteter, a saltatory, a dancer with a kit at his bum; one that, by teaching great madonnas to foot it, has miraculously purchased a ribanded waistcoat.
Beau. and Fl., Fair Maid of the Inn, III, 1.

lavolt†, v. i. See lavolta.

lavort, lavourt, n. Obsolete forms of laver¹.

lavrock (lav'rok), n. A variant of laverock, for lark¹.

lavy¹ (lá'vi), a. [< lave¹ + -y¹. See lavish.] Lavish; liberal. Hallivell. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

lavy² (lá'vi), n.; pl. lavies (-viz). Same as lavy¹.

law¹ (lá), n. [< ME. lave, laghe, lage, lahe, < AS. lagu (rare, the usual words being w. L. jus, and dóm, L. decretum, statutum) = OS. lag = Icel. lög (for lagu*), law (cf. lag, a stratum, order), = Sw. lag = Dan. lov, a law (cf. L. lex (leg-), a law, from the same ult. root); lit. 'that which lies' or is fixed or set (cf. G. gesetz, AS. gesetnes, a law, dóm, a law, doom, Gr. θεσμός, law, L.

statutum, a statute, all of similar etymological import), < Ilegan (pret. lay), lie; see lie¹.] 1. A rule of action prescribed by authority, especially by a sovereign or by the state: as, the laws of Manu; a law of God.

We must define Laws to be Rules of Conduct which we are morally bound to obey, . . . or, more briefly, Commands imposed by Rightful Authority.

H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 209.

Our human laws are but the copies, more or less imperfect, of the eternal laws so far as we can read them, and either succeed and promote our welfare, or fail and bring confusion and disaster, according as the legislator's insight has detected the true principle, or has been distorted by ignorance or selfishness. Froude.

Specifically—(a) Any written or positive rule, or collection of rules, prescribed under the authority of the state or nation, whether by the people in its constitution, as the organic law, or by the legislature in its statute law, or by the treaty-making power, or by municipalities in their ordinances or by-laws.

It is essential to the idea of a law that it be attended with a sanction; or, in other words, a penalty or punishment for disobedience. A. Hamilton, Federalist, No. 15.

(b) An act of the supreme legislative body of a state or nation, as distinguished from the constitution: as, the constitution, and the laws made in pursuance thereof. (c) In a more general sense, the profession or vocation of attorneys, counsellors, solicitors, conveyancers, etc.: as, to practise law. (d) Litigation: as, to go to law.

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust? I Cor. vi. 1.

2. Collectively, a system or collection of such rules. Specifically—(a) The principles and regulations of human government in their application to property and conduct; those general rules of external human action which are enforced by a sovereign political authority (Holland); the aggregate of rules set by men as politically superior or sovereign, to men as politically subject (Austria); rules of human conduct prescribed by established usage or custom, or by a constitution adopted by the people, or by statutes or ordinances prescribed by a legislative power, or by regulations of judicial procedure, or recognized and enforced by judicial decision. Modern difference of opinion as to the proper definition of law chiefly results from the fact that writers of the analytic school, proceeding by an analysis of the usual mental conception of law under monarchical government, have commonly defined it as in essence command by a superior to an inferior; and as perhaps the larger part of modern law—such, for instance, as the law of negotiable paper and of contracts generally—does not consist of commands or prohibitions, this definition is supported by the argument that what the sovereign permits he commands, or at least indirectly commands, shall not be prevented. Writers of the historical school, on the other hand, tracing government by law back to its early development, have defined law as essentially consisting of what is judicially ascertained to be usual and regular. In either view it is agreed that a true law in the sense of jurisprudence is one which deals with a class of things, acts or omissions, as distinguished from particular commands and awards. Law, as it actually exists in modern society, is the aggregate or system of rules by which a political community or congress of communities regulates or professes to regulate the conduct and the rights and powers of its members and its own interference with their freedom; and any rule answering this description is, if authoritatively promulgated, a law. Every new judicial decision, also, is part of the law in the sense that it actually regulates conduct, rights, or powers. (b) The system of law, often slightly personified: as, in the eye of the law; in the custody of the law; the law presumes or intends.

No man e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law.
J. Trumbull, McFingal, III, 490.

(c) The mosaic system of rules and ordinances.

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. Mat. v. 17.

Hence—(d) The books of the Bible containing this system; the books of the law.

After the reading of the law and the prophets, the miers of the synagogue sent unto them. Acts xiii. 15.

(e) The preceptive part of the Bible, especially of the New Testament, in contradistinction to its promises.

And worche many Myracles, and preche and teche the Feythe and the Lace of Cristene Men unto his Children. Manderiville, Travels, p. 1.

Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Gal. vi. 2.

3. A proposition which expresses the constant or regular order of certain phenomena, or the constant mode of action of a force; a general formula or rule to which all things, or all things or phenomena within the limits of a certain class or group, conform, precisely and without exception; a rule to which events really tend to conform. A mere empirical formula which satisfies a series of observations sufficiently, but would not hold in extreme cases, is not considered as a law. A special fact is not a law; but a subordinate principle, as that planets revolve in ellipses, is or is not a law according to the shade of meaning with which that word is used.

I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind. Rom. vii. 23.

The laws of nature are the rules according to which effects are produced; but there must be a cause which operates according to these rules. The rules of navigation never steered a ship, nor the law of gravity never moved a planet. Reid.

Law means a rule which we have always found to hold good, and which we expect always will hold good.

Huxley, Lay Sermons, p. 340.

Thus the belief in an unchanging order—the belief in law, now spreading among the more cultivated throughout the civilized world, is a belief of which the primitive man is absolutely incapable.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 488.

4. One of the rules or principles by which anything is regulated: as, the laws of the turf; the laws of versification.—5. A rule according to which anything is produced: as, the mathematical law of a curve.—6. An allowance in distance or time granted to an animal in a chase, or to a weaker competitor in a race or other contest; permission given to one competitor to start a certain distance ahead of, or a certain time before, another, in order to equalize the chances of winning.

These late years of our Civil Wars have been very destructive unto them; and no wonder if no Law hath been given to Hares, when so little hath been observed toward men.

Fuller, Worthies, Cambridgeshire.

Her Grace saw from a turret "sixteen bucks, all having favre laws, pulled down with greyhounds in a laund or lawn."

Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 71.

Two well-known runners, chosen for the hares, . . . started off. . . Then the hounds clustered round Thorne, who explained shortly, "They're to have six minutes' law."

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 7.

7. Custom; manner. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

—Act and operation of law, such a mode of the creation or transfer of rights as does not depend on the intention of the parties, but on rules of law, applied, it may be, irrespective of their intention. Thus, where an owner of land dies intestate, the title is cast upon the heir by act and operation of law; and where a man becomes bankrupt, his property may be divested by act and operation of law, as distinguished from a transfer by devis or voluntary act.—

Adjective law, rules of procedure, as distinguished from substantive law (which see, below).—Agrarian laws. See agrarian.—Alien and sedition laws. See alien.—Avogadro's law, in physics, the law that equal volumes of different gases, under like conditions of pressure and temperature, contain the same number of molecules.—Baer's law. [Named from Karl Ernst Baer, 1792–1876.] The doctrine that the evolution of an individual of a certain animal form is determined by two conditions: first, by a continuous perfecting of the animal body by means of an increasing histological and morphological differentiation, or an increasing number and diversity of tissues and organic forms; second (and at the same time), by the continual transition from a more general form of the type to one more specific.—

Bankrupt laws, bankruptcy laws. See bankruptcy.—Bell's law, the law that the anterior spinal nerve-roots are motor and the posterior sensory.—Bode's law, an empirical formula supposed to express approximately the distances of the planets from the sun in terms of the distance from the sun of the innermost two. The rule is that the distances of the third, fourth, fifth, etc., planets from the orbit of the first are respectively twice, four times, eight times, sixteen times, etc., that of the second planet. It holds very roughly for all the planets except Neptune, and for the satellites of Saturn and Uranus.—Boyle's law, in physics, the law that at any given temperature the volume of a given mass of gas varies inversely as the pressure which it bears. It was discovered by Robert Boyle, and published by him about 1662; but Edme Mariotte having published a book concerning it (about 1679), the law was for a long time called Mariotte's law.—

Brehon laws. See brehon.—Canon law. See canon.—Case law, law established by judicial decision in particular cases, as distinguished from statute law. Thus, when the courts are applied to for redress under novel circumstances—as in certain instances of boycotting—for which no positive law exists, case law necessarily results whichever way the courts decide; for if they hold that the person aggrieved is entitled to injunction or damages, they establish the unlawfulness of the act complained of; and if they decide that the action cannot be maintained, because there is no positive law to sustain it, they establish the lawfulness of the act, and, as a consequence, the lawfulness of incidental agreements to combine or render services in the promotion of such an act. The great body of the common law has grown up thus as case law, constantly modified, however, by statutes, which in their turn commonly give rise to new developments of case law called forth by controversy as to the interpretation and application of the statutory provisions.—

Charles's law, the law that equal increments of temperature add equal amounts to the product of the volume and pressure of a given mass of gas. It was discovered by the French physicist Jacques Alexandre César Charles (1746–1823), the inventor of the Charliere or hydrogen balloon, but was formerly often attributed to Dalton and to Gay-Lussac.

Charles's law—that, if the temperature be varied while the pressure upon the gas remains the same, the gas increases by $\frac{1}{273}$ of its volume at zero centigrade for every degree of centigrade added to the temperature, or, which in combination with Boyle's law is the same thing, that if the density be constant, the pressure is directly proportional to the temperature measured from the point -273° centigrade, this point being called the zero of absolute temperature.

Encyc. Brit., XVI. 611.

Cincian law, in Rom. hist., a law passed under the tribune M. Cincius Alimentus, 204 B. C., forbidding an advocate to receive compensation for the pleading of a case, and restricting ill-considered or unwise gifts of any nature by requiring certain legal forms of gift to be observed in almost all cases. The law was confirmed by a senatus consultum under Augustus, and so modified under Claudius as to permit a restricted compensation to lawyers.—Civil, commercial, common, consuetudinary, criminal law. See the adjectives.—Conclusion of law. See conclusion.—Conflict of laws. See conflict.—Crown-er's quest law. See crown-er.—Crown law. See crown, a.—Customary law. Same as consuetudinary law.—Dalton's law, a law enunciated by John Dalton, that in a mixture of gases which do not enter into chemical reaction, but are in equilibrium, the total pressure is the same as the sum of the pressures which would be exerted by each constituent if the others were not present. The ordinary statement that each portion of gas behaves as a vacuum to all the rest is in a sense true, but tends to convey a wrong idea.—Due process of law. See due.—Dulong and Petit's law, in physics, the law that the product of the specific heat of any element in the solid state multiplied by its atomic weight is (approximately) constant; or, in other words, that the different elementary substances have (nearly) the same atomic heat.—

Ecclesiastical law. See ecclesiastical.—Eight-hour law. See hour.—Empirical law. See empirical.—Enforcement law, a United States statute of 1870 (16 Stat., 140) for enforcing the right of citizens to vote, and punishing offenses against the equal enjoyment of suffrage. It was specially directed to the protection of emancipated slaves recently admitted to citizenship.—Exceptional law. See exception.—Ex post facto law. See ex post facto.—

Falk laws. Same as May laws.—Faraday's laws, in elect., certain principles established by Faraday governing the electrolysis of compounds. The most important are: (1) that the quantity of an electrolyte decomposed in a given time is proportional to the strength of the current; (2) that the weights of the elements separated are proportional to their chemical equivalents; and (3) that the strength of the electrolytic action is the same for cells in any part of the same circuit.—

Fechner's psychophysical law, the law that as the physical force of excitation of a nerve increases geometrically the sensation increases arithmetically, so that the sensation is proportional to the logarithm of the excitation. Thus, if with a given degree of attention we just perceive the difference between the sensations of pressure produced by 1 pound and 1.1 pounds, we shall also just perceive the difference produced by 2 pounds and 2.2 pounds. The differences of sensation are thus the same in the two cases, and so are the differences of the logarithms of the pressures. According to Fechner, the total sensation varies directly with the logarithm of the stimulus divided by the stimulus just sufficient to give an appreciable sensation, or $s = k \log \frac{S}{s}$. This is Fechner's formula.—Federal law, that law which is prescribed by the supreme power in the United States, and regulates the organization of the federal government and its intercourse with the people, and that of the people with each other in matters of a national character, or with citizens of foreign states, as distinguished from state law, or that which is prescribed by the supreme power in any individual state, and regulates, in all matters not of a national character, the intercourse of such state with its own people, and that of its people among themselves. Robinson.—Forest law, formal law, Galilean law. See the adjectives.—Four years' limitation law. See limitation.—Fugitive-slave law. See fugitive.—Gay-Lussac's law. Same as Charles's law.—General law, law not local, nor confined in application to particular persons; a statute so expressed as to be capable of application throughout the jurisdiction of the lawgiver. Some controversy has existed as to whether the test is in the form of the law or in the existence of the subject to which it applies; but it is now generally held that a law which in terms purports to apply to all persons or places of a specified class throughout the state is a general law, although at the time when it is passed there may be only one such person or one such place in the state.—

Gibbet law. See Halifax law.—Gotthard sea laws. See laws of Wisby, below.—Gresham's law, in polit. econ., the tendency of the inferior of two forms or classes of currency in circulation together to circulate more freely than the superior: a law shortly stated in the maxim that "bad money drives out good." It results from the disposition of those who hold both to get rid of the inferior by passing it, and to hoard the superior, or, if coin, to select it for exportation. The law was named from a former master of the English mint, who observed and commented on it.—

Grimm's law, in philol., a law announced by Jacob Grimm, a great German philologist, though previously stated in part by Erasmus Rask, a Danish philologist, formulating certain changes or differences which the mute consonants undergo or exhibit in corresponding words in the Germanic or Teutonic branches of the Aryan family of languages. According to this law, stated briefly, the labials p, b, f in Greek, Latin, or Sanskrit become f, p, b in Gothic (with which English and the other Low German languages agree), and b (v), f, p in Old High German; the dentals t, d, th in Greek, etc., become th, t, d in Gothic, and d, z, t in Old High German; and the gutturals k, g, ch in Greek, etc., become h (not quite regularly), k, g in Gothic, and g, ch, k in Old High German. But the Old High German shifting (which is a second and much later shifting, beginning about A. D. 600, from the completed Low German shifting) is incomplete and not wholly regular; it is best exhibited among the dental mutes. The following table shows the changes and the usual correspondences: (1) Aryan (Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, etc.). (2) Low German (Gothic, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, English, etc.). (3) High German (Old High German, Middle High German, New High German).

(1) p b f (ph, bh) t d th (dh) k g ch (kh, gh)
(2) f (v) p b th t d h k g
(3) b (v) f p d z (ts) t g (h) ch (k) (g).

For example, Skt. pitrī (pitar) = Gr. pater = L. pater = Goth. fadar = OHG. vatar = E. father; Skt. tvam = Gr. tu = L. tu = Goth. thu = OHG. du = E. thou; Skt. gānu (for gānu*) = Gr. gōnu = L. genu = Goth. kniu = OHG. chniu, chneo = E. knee, etc. In the application of Grimm's law numerous inconsistencies and anomalies appear, due to interference, conformation, particular position or sequence of sounds, variations of accent, and other causes explained by other philological laws, or remaining in small part occult. The most important of these other laws is Verner's law (which see, below). See also the articles on the separate letters.—

Haeckel's law, a concise statement of the fact that every individual organism, in its development from the ovum (or its ontogeny), goes through a series of evolutionary stages in each of which it represents a stage of the evolution of the class to which it belongs (the evolution of the class being phylogeny); and that every such organism

"breeds true" (or shows palingeny) in so far as it is influenced by heredity, and becomes modified (or shows kenogeny) in so far as it is influenced by conditions of environment. See kenogeny, ontogeny, palingeny, and phylogeny.—Halifax law or inquest, a hasty trial followed by immediate punishment; an irrevocable punishment inflicted upon a summary trial without adequate opportunity of defense, so that subsequent proof of innocence becomes unavailing. The phrase originated from the so-called gibbet law or custom in the forest of Hardwick, coextensive with the parish of Halifax, England, under which the frith burghers summarily tried any one charged with stealing goods to the value of 13*d.*, and could condemn him to be beheaded on the market-day.—

Health laws. See health.—Heir at law. See heir.—Higher law, a law paramount to human law or statute. This phrase was used by William H. Seward in a speech in the United States Senate, March 11th, 1850, on the admission of California as a State, and became celebrated in connection with the slavery question, as intimating that, if the Constitution and laws did not condemn it, the law of a common humanity and justice should be appealed to.—

See intentment.—Issue of law. See issue, 10.—Joule's law, in elect., the law that the number of heat-units developed in a conductor is proportional to the product of the square of the strength of the current, the resistance of the conductor, and the time during which the current flows.—

Judiciary law, that part of law the source and evidence of which is the adjudications of the courts, as distinguished from statutes or positive law. See case law, above.—Jurin's law, in physics, the law that the ascent of a given liquid in a capillary tube is inversely proportional to its diameter.—

Kepler's laws, three laws of planetary motion, discovered by Johann Kepler (1571–1630), who announced the first two in his "De Motibus Stellae Martis," in 1609, and discovered the third on March 8th, 1618. The three laws are as follows: (1) The orbits of the planets are ellipses having the sun at one focus. (2) The areas described by their radii vectores in equal times are equal. (3) The squares of their periodic times are proportional to the cubes of their mean distances from the sun.—

Kirchhoff's laws, in elect., two laws stated as follows: (a) At any junction-point in a network of conductors the sum of all the currents which flow toward the junction is equal to the sum of all the currents which flow away from the junction (called the condition of continuity). (b) In any complete electric circuit the sum of the electromotive forces, reckoned in order round the circuit, is equal to the sum of the products of the current through and the resistance of each conductor forming the circuit.—

Kopp's law of boiling-points. See boiling-point.—Law French, the form of Old French (Norman French) used in all common-law proceedings from the time of William the Conqueror to that of Edward III., and to some extent long afterward in certain formal state proceedings.—

Law language, the technical phraseology used in legal writings and forms.—Law Latin, Latin as used in law and in legal documents. It is a mixture of Latin with Old French and English words adapted to Latin inflections.—

Law merchant, commercial law; the body of principles and rules, drawn chiefly from the customs of merchants, by which the rights and obligations arising in commercial transactions are determined.—

Law of absorption of light, the law that the proportion of homogeneous light transmitted varies geometrically as the thickness of the absorbing medium varies arithmetically.—

Law of action and reaction, law of causation, law of citations, law of color. See action, causation, citation, color.—Law of continuity. See continuity, 3.—Law of continuity of demand and supply, of equivalents. See continuity, demand, equivalent.—

Law of disgregation, the law that the work of disgregation is proportional to the absolute temperature.—Law of error. See error, 5.—Law of evidence, of facility, of heterogeneity, of homogeneity, of integrity, of mortality, of nature. See evidence, etc.—

Law of independence. See laws of motion, under motion.—Law of nations, international law. The phrase law of nations, originally adopted to designate those ethical principles of law deemed obligatory on all nations as the law of a particular nation is conceived as applicable to all persons within that nation, has been superseded by the more appropriate term international law (which see, under international), which includes the results of conventions and treaties.—

Law of parsimony, the logical principle that we ought not to suppose the existence of anything not necessary to account for admitted facts.—Law of perseverance. See laws of motion, under motion.—Law of reciprocity of prime numbers, the proposition that if p and q are two prime numbers, then, if p is a quadratic residue of q, q is also a quadratic residue of p, unless both leave the remainder 3 when divided by 4, when, if p is a quadratic residue of q, then q is not a quadratic residue of p.—

Law of the affinity of ideas. See affinity, 7.—Law of the Burgundians. See Papien code, under code.—Law of the flag, the law of the country to which a ship belongs.—Law of the forum. See forum.—Law of the land. (a) In constitutional provisions securing its protection to persons and property, due process of law.

By the law of the land is more clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that any citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of general rules which govern society. D. Webster.

(b) The established law of a country.

As soon as a nation has assumed the obligations of international law, they become a portion of the law of the land to govern the decisions of courts, the conduct of the rulers, and that of the people.

2†. The practice or act of cutting off the claws and balls of the feet of an animal, as of the fore feet of a dog, to incapacitate it from following game. See law¹, v. t., 4.

And such lawing shall be done by the assise commonly used: that is to say, that iii. claws of the forefoote shall be cut off by the skin.

Rastall, Collect. of Statutes, fol. 185, iv. The cruel mutilation, the lawing as it was called, of all dogs in the neighbourhood of the royal forests.

E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, v. 108.

3. A reckoning at a public house; a tavern-bill. Also lawin. [Scotch.]

Late at e'en, drinking the wine,
And ere they paid the lawing,
They set a combat them between,
To fight it in the dawning.

The Dowie Dens of Yarrow (Child's Ballads, III. 65).

lawk (lâk), interj. [Also lauk, lawks (cf. law⁴); a trivial euphemism for Lord.] An exclamation expressing wonder or surprise.

Lauk, Mr. Weller, . . . how you do frighten one!
Dickens, Pickwick, xxxix.

Lauk help me, I don't know where to look.
Hoed, The Lost Heir.

lawk-a-day (lâk'a-dâ), interj. A variant of lackaday. Miss Hawkins, The Countess and Gertrude, III. 196.

lawks (lâks), interj. A variant of lawk.

"Lawks!" exclaimed Mrs. Partington, "what monsters these master-builders must be!"
The Pioneer (New York), Oct., 1836.

lawland (lâ'land), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of lowland.

lawless (lâ'les), a. [ME. laweles, lazeleuse (= Icel. löglauss = Sw. laglös = Dan. lovløs); < law¹ + -less.] 1. Not subject or not submissive to law; uncontrolled by law, whether natural, human, or divine; licentious; unruly; ungoverned; as, lawless passions; a lawless tyrant or brigand.

And wrong repressed, and establish right,
Which lawless men had formerly fordonc.
Spenser, F. Q., v. i. 2.

To be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and uncertain thought Imagine howling!
Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 127.

For him Antea burn'd with lawless flame,
And strove to tempt him from the paths of fame.
Pope, Iliad, vi. 201.

2. Contrary to law; opposed to the laws of the land or of order; illegal; disorderly: as, a lawless claim; lawless proceedings.

He needs no indirect nor lawless course.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 4. 224.

3. Destitute of law; not conformable to rule or reason; abnormal; anomalous: as, lawless eccentricities; lawless prosody.

Mastering the lawless science of our law.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

4. Deprived of legal rights; beyond the pale of the law.—Lawless churches, formerly, in England, churches and chapels exempted from the visitation of the ordinary, the ministers of which usually celebrated marriage without license or banns.—Lawless court. See court.—Lawless man, a man who is deprived of the benefit or protection of the law; an outlaw. Compare lawful man, under lawful.

lawlessly (lâ'les-li), adv. In a lawless manner, or in a manner contrary to law; unlawfully; without regard for law.

lawlessness (lâ'les-nes), n. The condition or quality of being lawless, or of being unrestrained, unauthorized, or uncontrolled by law; want of legality or legitimacy.

But Barton is not so much fanciful as capricious; his motion is not the motion of freedom, but of lawlessness.
De Quincey, Rhetoric.

lawlike, a. [< law¹ + like². Cf. the older form lawly.] 1. Lawful; allowed by law.

To affirm the giving of any law or lawlike dispense to sin for hardness of heart is a doctrine of extravagance from the sage principles of piety.
Milton, Divorce, il. 7.

2. Regulated as by law; characterized by respect for law and order.

Let not my verse your lawlike minds displeas.
Gascogne, Fruits of War.

law-list (lâ'list), n. An annual publication in England containing matters of information regarding the administration of law and the legal profession, such as lists of the judges, queen's counsel, serjeants at law, benchers, barristers, attorneys, magistrates, law-officers, sheriffs, etc. A similar publication is issued for Scotland.

"Can you give a fellow anything to read in the mean time?" . . . Smallweed suggests the Law List.
Dickens, Bleak House, xx.

law-lord (lâ'lôrd), n. 1. A peer in the British Parliament who holds or has held high judicial office, or has been distinguished in the legal profession. Since 1876 all cases appealed to the House of Lords are brought for decision before a specially constituted court. See lord of appeal in ordinary.

They [the Peers] sit only during half the year. The law-lords, whose advice is required to guide the unlearned majority, are employed daily in administering justice elsewhere.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

2. A judge of the Court of Session, the supreme court of Scotland.

lawly (lâ'li), a. [< ME. lawelyche, < AS. lahlic (= Icel. lögligr = Sw. laglig = Dan. lovlig), lawful, < lagu, law: see law¹ and -ly¹.] Lawful.

lawly (lâ'li), adv. [< ME. laweliche, lazelice, < AS. lahlice (= Icel. lögliga), lawfully, < lahlic, lawful: see lawly, a.] Lawfully.

lawmaker (lâ'mâ'kér), n. One who enacts or ordains laws; a legislator; a lawgiver.

lawman (lâ'man), n. [< ME. laweman, lazamon (as a man's name, Lazamon, Layamon, the author of the "Brut") (ML. lagamannus, lagamannus), < AS. lahmann, a man acquainted with the law, and whose duty it was to declare it, prop. a Scand. form (= Icel. lögmaðr, OSw. lagman), < lagu, law, + mann, man.] 1. A man authorized to declare the law. Specifically—(a) The chief citizen or first commoner of an ancient Scandinavian community or state, who was the spokesman of the people against the king and court at public assemblies, etc., the guardian of the law, and president both of the legislative body and of the law-courts. (b) The president of the supreme court of Orkney and Shetland while the islands remained under Norse rule.

The Odaller [of Orkney and Shetland] owned no vassalage to king, earl, lawman (chief judge), or holding, but with characteristic love of system and deference to lawful authority, he yielded to each in his degree the obedience of a subject. Memorial for Orkney, quoted in Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 688.

2. One of a body of aristocrats who held magisterial office in towns of Danish origin in early England.

A member, doubtless the foremost member, of the Danish civic Confederation, it [Lincoln] still retained a Danish patriote of twelve hereditary Lawmen. . . . The Lawmen of Lincoln enjoyed the rights of territorial lords. All twelve were clothed with the judicial powers of sac and sec. . . . And it is to be noticed that three of these great officers were men in holy orders.
E. A. Freeman, Norman Conquest, IV. 208.

lawmonger (lâ'mung'gér), n. A low practitioner of law; a pettifogger.

Though this chattering lawmonger be beld to call it wicked.
Milton, Colasterion.

lawmpast, n. An obsolete spelling of lampas¹. Fairholt.

lawnd¹ (lân), n. [A corruption of lawnd¹, lawnd¹: see lawnd¹.] 1. An open space in a forest or between or among woods; a glade.

Oroves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm; . . . Betwixt them lawns, or level downs. Milton, P. L., iv. 252.

Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.
Gray, Elegy.

These long, rank, dark wood-walks drench'd in dew,
Leading from lawn to lawn. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. An open space of ground of some size, covered with grass, and kept smoothly mown, as near a dwelling or in a pleasure-ground.

Four courts I made, East, West, and South and North.
In each a squared lawn. Tennyson, Palace of Art.

lawnd² (lân), v. t. [< lawnd¹, n.] To make into lawn; lay down in grass as a lawn. [Rare.]

Give me taste to improve an old famly seat
By lawning an hundred good acres of weed.
Anstey, New Bath Guide, Conclusion.

lawn² (lân), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also lawne, lawne, < ME. lawnde, lawnde; origin uncertain; by some regarded as a peculiar use of lawnd¹, either "because from its fineness it was bleached on a lawn or smooth grassy sward" (Imp. Diet.) (whereas the word existed in the form lawnd¹, lawnd¹, at a time when the other word lawn, earlier lawnd¹, lawnd¹, had not the sense of "a bleaching-lawn"), or because, as "a transparent covering," it might be derived from the sense of "a vista through trees" (Wedgwood). The probable source is that pointed out by Skeat, namely, F. Laon (formerly also Lan), a town near Rheims. Lawn was formerly also called "cloth of Rheims," and Rheims is not far from Cambray and Tournay, which have given cambric and dornick respectively (Skeat). For the form, cf. fawn, < F. faon.] I. n. 1. Fine linen cambric, used for various purposes: also applied in the trade to various sheer muslins. Lawn is notably used for the sleeves and other parts of the dress of bishops of the Anglican Church. The word is hence much used in allusion to bishops, like ermine in allusion to judges.

In that chamber ther was an hanged hedde,
Of sylk and gold full curiously wrought,
And ther vpon a shete of lawnde was sprede,
As clenly dressed as it cowde be thought.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 73.

The next to it in goodness is the line called Byssus, the fine lawne or tiffante whereof our wives and dames at home set so much store by for to trim and deck themselves.

Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 1.

They threw off their doublets both,
And stood up in their sarks of lawn.
Duel of Wharton and Stuart (Child's Ballads, VIII. 263).

An awful period for those who ventured to maintain liberal opinions; and who were too honest to sell them for the ermine of the judge or the lawn of the prelate.
Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, ii.

2. In ceram., a fine sieve, generally of silk, through which slip for glazing is passed to bring it to uniform fineness and fluidity.—Bishop's lawn, cobweb lawn, cypress lawn, etc. See the qualifying words.

II. a. Made or consisting of lawn.—Lawn sleeves, sleeves of lawn; the sleeves of an Anglican bishop. See bishop-sleeve.

Suppose the Church, your present mistress, dressed in lawn sleeves, on one hand, and Miss Sophia, with no lawn about her, on the other, which would you be for?
Goldsmith, Vicar, vii.

For you, right rev'rend Osnaburg,
Nane sets the lawn-sleeves sweeter.
Burns, A Dream.

My lords of the lawn-sleeves have lost half their honours new.
Thackeray, Virginians, lii.

lawnd¹, n. An earlier form of lawnd¹.

lawnd², n. An earlier form of lawnd².

lawn-mower (lân'mô'ér), n. One who or that which mows a lawn; specifically, a machine, either pushed over the ground by hand or drawn by a horse, according to its size, for cutting the grass on a lawn. The lawn-mower consists essentially of a double-edged spiral knife, or a series of spiral knives, set in the periphery of a cylinder, which is caused by gearing to rotate in contact with the edge of a stationary rectangular knife placed tangentially to the cylinder at the height from the ground at which the grass is to be cut. The knives thus clip off the grass upon the principle of scissors.

lawn-sprinkler (lân'springk'lér), n. A contrivance for irrigating a lawn or garden gently and evenly. A common form consists of a vertical pipe supported on a stand, and having an attachment for a hose at the lower and a swivel cellar at the upper end. From the swivel cellar project one or more short branches with small perforations, and all turned laterally in the same direction with reference to the center. When the water is turned on, its escape from these holes causes the swivel cellar to revolve rapidly, and the water is by centrifugal force spread in fine drops over a circle of moderate diameter.

lawn-tennis (lân'ten'is), n. A game played with a ball and rackets on a lawn or other smooth surface by two, three, or four persons. A space, 78 by 27 feet if two play, 78 by 36 if three or four play (called a court), is laid out, and is divided lengthwise into two equal parts by the line L F, and crosswise by a net, C I, 3 feet high in the middle, and 3 feet 6 inches at the ends C and I; service-lines B J and D H are also drawn on each side 21 feet from the net. A player standing on the base-line L K must serve (that is, knock) the ball with his racket over the net into that part of the court lettered C N O D, and his opponent must return the ball on the first bound into any part of the court on the side of the net opposite to him; the original player or his partner must return the ball again, striking it on the fly or the first bound; and thus the ball is driven back and forth over the net until one side fails to return it or knocks it out of the opponent's court. Failure to serve the ball (known as a fault), on two trials, into the proper part of the court, or failure to return a ball at any time during play, counts 15 for the opposing side, a second such failure makes the opposing score 30, a third 40, and a fourth game. Should both sides, however, attain a score of 40, such a situation in the game being known as deuce, one side to win must secure two points in succession; or, if one side has an advantage or vantage—that is, the first point gained after deuce—the other side must make three points in succession in order to win.

Lawn-tennis is a modern adaptation of the first principle of tennis, in the simplest form, to a ball-game played on grass with rackets. Encyc. Brit., XXXIII. 181.

lawny¹ (lâ'nî), a. [< lawnd¹ + -y¹.] Like a lawn; level, and covered with smooth turf.

Thro' forests, mountains, or the lawny ground
If 't happ you see a maid.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 1.

lawny² (lâ'nî), a. [< lawnd² + -y¹.] Made of or resembling the fabric called lawn.

It was as angry with her lawny veil,
That from his sight it enviously should hide her.
Drayton, Moses, i.

That undefeud'd and unblemishable simplicity of the Gospel—not she herself, for that would never be, but a false-whited, a lawny resemblance of her.
Milton, Church-Government, ii. 3.

law-officer (lá'of'í-sér), n. An officer of the law; one vested with legal authority in respect to the administration of justice.

law-piece (lá'pés), n. In fishery, an addition to the leader of a pound. [Local, U. S.]

Some fishermen had an excess of 25 feet to the end of the leader, which addition was known as the law-piece, and, when it was braided up, it left the leader as complete and effectual for guiding the fish into the pound as before.

Conn. Rep., 1871, p. 30.

law-puddering† (lá'pud'ér-ing), n. Meddling or "pottering" in the law. [Rare.]

Declaring his capacity nothing refined since his law-puddering, but still the same it was in the pantry and at the dresser.

Milton, Colasterion.

Lawsonia (lá-só'ni-jū), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after John Lawson, M. D., author of "A New Voyage to Carolina" (1709).] A genus of polypetalous shrubs, consisting of a single species, L. inermis, the celebrated henna-plant of the East. See henna. The genus belongs to the natural order Lythraceae, or Lythraceae, the loosestrife family, and to the tribe Lythreae, being closely related to the crane-myrtle. (See Lagerstræmia.) It has a 4-parted calyx, 4 petals, 8 stamens, a globose 4-celled capsule bursting irregularly, opposite, short-petioled, ovate-lanceolate, entire leaves, and white flowers crowded in fascicles or short axillary corymbs. The plant is probably indigenous to northern Africa, Arabia, and the East Indies, but is cultivated and naturalized throughout the tropics. In England it is often called Egyptian priet, and in the West Indies it goes by the name of Jamaica mignonette.

Lawson's cypress, n. See cypress, 1 (b).

law-stationer (lá'stā'shon-ér), n. A stationer who keeps on sale the articles required by lawyers, such as parchment, tape, foolscap, brief-paper, etc., and who sometimes, in England, takes in drafts or writings to be fairly copied or engrossed for lawyers.

lay¹ (lā), v.; pret. and pp. laid (formerly also layed), ppr. laying. [ME. leyen, leien, leggen (pret. leide, leyde, lezde, pp. leid, leyd, i-leid, i-leyd, etc.), < AS. leggan (pret. legde, rarely contr. lēde, pp. ge-legged, rarely contr. ge-lēd) (= OS. leggian = OFries. lega, leia, leidsu, lidsia = D. MLG. leggen = OHG. leggan, lekan, legen, MHG. G. legen = Icel. leggja = Dan. lægge = Sw. lägga = Goth. lagjan), lay, cause to lie, a causal verb, < liegan (pret. lay), lie; see lie¹. Lay is thus the causal verb of lie (pret. lay).

The two verbs, entirely distinct in AS., began to be confused in ME., and the admission of intrans. uses of the orig. trans. lay, the general freedom of change from intrans. to trans. uses of verbs, and the instability of E. diphthongs containing, as in lay and lie, an absorbed guttural, have made the distinction difficult to keep. Uneducated speakers very commonly, and in certain uses even educated speakers, use lay, v. and n., for lie; but rarely lie for lay.

I. trans. 1. To cause to lie or rest; put or place in a position or situation, or as a deposit or a burden; deposit; place; impose: as, to lay a thing down; to lay one's hands on a thing; to lay a submarine cable; to lay an embargo on something; to lay a tax on land.

You stand still lazing, and have nought to do?
Greene, Alphonsus, i.

II. trans. To waste in sloth; spend in idleness: generally with away: as, to laze away one's life: sometimes used reflexively. [Colloq.]

Endormir [F.]. . . . To laze it when he hath most need to looke about him. Cotgrave.

He that takes liberty to laze himself, and dull his spirits for lack of use, shall find the more he sleeps, the more he shall be drowsy. W. Whately, Redemption of Time (1634), p. 23.

laze (lāz), n. [cf. laze, v.] Laziness; inaction. Davies.

Thus folded in a hard and mournful laze, Distress'd sat he. Greene, Radagon's Sounet.

lazily (lā'zi-li), adv. In a lazy manner; sluggishly.

laziness (lā'zi-nes), n. The state or quality of being lazy; aversion or indisposition to action or exertion; indolence; sluggishness; habitual sloth.

lazuli (laz'ū-ji), n. Short for lapis lazuli (which see, under lapis).—Lazuli-finch, the Cyanospiza or Passerina amena, a beautiful bird of the western United States, resembling the indigo-bird, but having, in the male, brown and white on the under parts.

lazulite (laz'ū-lit), n. [cf. lazuli + -ite.] A mineral of a light- or indigo-blue color, crystallizing in the monoclinic system. It is a hydrous phosphate of aluminum, magnesium, and iron. Also called azurite (true azurite is the blue carbonate of copper), blue spar, and blue feldspar.

lazulite-blue (laz'ū-lit-blō), n. Same as the genuine ultramarine.

lazy (lā'zi), a. [Early mod. E. also lazier, laesie, laysy; also dial. lass; appar. an orig. dial. corruption (with added adj. suffix -y) of a form lase* or laishe* of ME. lasche, lache, < OF. lasche, loose, lax, sluggish, slow, lazy: see *lash*².] 1. Disinclined to action or exertion; naturally or habitually slothful; sluggish; indolent; averse to labor.

Lewdly complainest thou, laesis ladde,
Of Winters wracke for making thee saddle.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fail to work, but be lazy and spend victuals. Bacon.
2. Characterized by or characteristic of idleness or sluggishness; languid; tardy; slow; as, a lazy yawn; lazy movements; a lazy stream.

Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours. Milton, Time.

Lazy guy. See guy.—Lazy weight, scant weight. Hallswell.—Syn. Indolent, Inert, etc. (see idle); dilatory, slack.

lazy (lā'zi), v.; pret. and pp. lazier, ppr. lazing. [lazy, a.] I. intrans. To act lazily; laze; move idly, listlessly, or reluctantly. [Colloq.]
So we would put in the day, lazing around, listening to the stillness. S. L. Clemens, Huckleberry Finn.

II. trans. To waste or spend idly. [Colloq.]
We lazier the rest of the pleasant afternoon away. The Century, XXXI, 197.

lazy-back (lā'zi-bak), n. and a. I. n. 1. A high back-bar attached to a seat as a support for the back. It is sometimes made so as to be removable. [Colloq., U. S.]—2. An iron rest placed over the fire to support a frying-pan, etc. Wright.

II. a. Having a reclining back, as a chair.
A lazy-back chair makes a capital observing-seat. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX, 748.

lazy-bed (lā'zi-bed), n. A bed for growing potatoes, in which the potatoes are laid on the surface of the soil and covered with earth taken out from trenches on both sides. This mode of planting potatoes is now chiefly confined to Ireland, but was common in early Scottish husbandry. It is of practical use only for spade husbandry.

lazyboard (lā'zi-bōrd), n. A short board used by teamsters to ride on. It is placed on the left of the wagon-bed, between the front and rear wheels.

lazybones (lā'zi-bōnz), n. A lazy fellow; an idler. [Colloq.]

lazyboots (lā'zi-bōts), n. Same as lazybones. [Colloq.]

lazy-jack (lā'zi-jak), n. In mech. engin., a jack constructed on the same principle as a lazy-tongs, consisting of compound levers pivoted together. A screw and nut are generally used to operate and extend the jack in lifting weights. The instrument has nearly gone out of use, being almost universally superseded by the hydraulic jack.

lazy-pinion (lā'zi-pin'yon), n. A pinion not keyed to a shaft, but turning on a bearing and serving merely as a transmitter of motion between two other wheels or pinions without affecting their velocity-ratio. See idle-wheel.

lazy-tongs (lā'zi-tōngz), n. sing. and pl. A kind of tongs or pincers consisting of a number of pairs of levers pivoted together at the middle and hinged to one another at the ends, the extension of which, produced by bringing together the scissors-like handles, enables one without change of position to pick up an object at a considerable distance (whence the name). The same principle of construction has many applications, as in safety bridges or gates between cars, on ferry-boats, etc., formed of levers pivoted together at several points. It is used also in some forms of elevators, extension gas-lamps, etc. It was first described by Roberto Vallurio, who died about 1182.

Lazy-tongs.

And bad hym holde hym at home and eryen his leyes,
And alle that halpe hym to erie to sette or to sowe,
Or any other myster. Piers Plowman (B), vii. 5.
When two warlike Brigandines at sea,
With murdrons weapons arm'd to cruell fight,
Do meete together on the watry lea,
They stemme ech other with so fell despight. Spenser, F. Q., IV, ii. 16.

The French definite article masculine (including the old neuter), much used in Middle English in names of French type, as Johan le Long, William le Bon, etc. (many of which survive in modern English), as well as in modern French names. It occurs contracted and unrecognised in lingot and other words.

In September 1386 the walls of the friary [of the Augustine or Hermit friars, Warrington, Cheshire, England] witnessed a singular scene, for "Messieurs Jehan le Botiller, baron de Weryngton, Nichol le Vernoun, . . . sat three days to examine witness in the friary church."
Quoted in Baines's Hist. Lancashire, II, 224.

le² (lē), n. See le¹.

-le¹. [Formerly also and in some instances still -el; < ME. -le, -el, etc.; partly < AS. -ol, -ul, or -el, partly < OE. -el (< L. -ellus, etc.) or -le (< L. -allis, etc.), or -al, -el (< L. -allis), or other forms.] A suffix or termination of very diverse origin, and now usually without obvious significance, occurring in adjectives or nouns of native English origin, as in fiekle, mickle, brackle, brittle, etc., cockle, priekle, knuckle, etc., shackle, etc., or of other origin, as in battle¹, battle², bottle², buckle², mettle, etc. See the etymology of such words.

-le². [le, -el, with inf. suffix -len, -elen = D. -elen = G. -elen; ult. a var. of -er⁴, a freq. suffix. Cf. -le¹.] A suffix of frequentative, or originally frequentative, verbs, as babble, gabble, cackle, eraekle, humble¹, mumble, ramble, scramble, scribble, etc. It is equivalent to -er⁴, as in gibber, jabber, etc. It is more or less confused with similar suffixes of various origin, as in tremble, trouble, humble¹, etc.

lea¹ (lē), n. and a. [Formerly also lee, dial. lay, ley (in comp. in local names, -leigh, -ley, -ly); < ME. ley, lay, leye, leyge, < AS. leah (gen. leās, dat. leā), m., leah (gen. dat. leage), f., untilled land, a lea, meadow, pasture, = MLG. lo, loch, loge, lage, loye, LG. loge = Flem. loo (as in Waterloo) = OHG. loh, MHG. lōch, G. dial. loh, a low plain, a morass, = Lith. laukas, an open field, = L. lucus, a grove, wood (orig., according to etym., a glade, a 'clearing'), < lucere, to be light, lux, light; see luculent and light¹. Thus lucus, though said to be so called "a non lucendo," is regarded as a 'clearing,' really lucus a lucendo. See lucus a non lucendo.] I. n. 1. Open, untilled land, usually in grass, or pasture-land; a meadow or grassy plain; a stretch of level fields or commons.

A lady gaye,
Came ridand over a longe lee.
Thomas of Ersekourne (Child's Ballads, I, 98).
Two children in two neighbour villages
Playing mad pranks along the heathy leas.
Tennyson, Circumstance.

Hence—2. Any field; any level geographical surface.

And bad hym holde hym at home and eryen his leyes,
And alle that halpe hym to erie to sette or to sowe,
Or any other myster. Piers Plowman (B), vii. 5.
When two warlike Brigandines at sea,
With murdrons weapons arm'd to cruell fight,
Do meete together on the watry lea,
They stemme ech other with so fell despight. Spenser, F. Q., IV, ii. 16.

3t. Fallow land; lealand.

II. a. Untilled; fallow; said of land. Compare lealand, layland. [In this use chiefly prov. Eng.]

Mi londis of vertues ligger al lay.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.
The land it may lee.
Death of Percy Reed (Child's Ballads, VI, 141).
Let wife and land
Lie lay till I return.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Pilgrimage, iii. 3.

lea² (lē), n. [le, < ME. ley, < Icel. lō = Sw. lie = Dan. lee, a scythe.] A scythe. Catholicum Anglicum, p. 211.

lea³ (lē), n. [A var. of lay¹.] 1. Same as lay¹, S. E. H. Knight.—2. One of the sets of alternating threads into which the yarns of a loom are divided by the harness system so as to form the shed.

leach¹, n. and v. See leech¹.

leach² (lēch), v. t. [Also leech, leech (and leach); see leech¹, leech².] 1. To wash or drain by percolation of water; treat by downward drainage: as, to make lye by leaching ashes (the most familiar use of the word); the rains leach a gravelly soil.—2. To remove by percolation; drain away: as, to leach the alkali from wood-ashes.

leach² (lēch), n. [leach², v.] 1. A separation of lye, or alkali in solution, as from wood-ashes, by percolation of water.—2. The material used for leaching, as wood-ashes.—3. A deep tub with a spigot inserted in the bottom, used in making polish. It holds from 6 to 8 bushels of wood-ashes.

leach³, n. See leech³.
leach⁴ (lēch), n. [le, < ME. leche, < OF. lesche, F. lèche, a slice, shive.] A dish, of various kinds, served up in slices. It was sometimes a jelly flavored with spices.

Leach, . . . a kind of Jelly made of Cream, Isinglas, Sugar, Almonds, &c. Randle Holme.

leach⁴, v. t. [le, < ME. lechen, leschen, slice; from the noun.] To cut into slices; slice.

Seync bowes of wyde bores, with the braune lechyde.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I, 188.

leach⁵ (lēch), n. Same as leech³.

leach⁶ (lēch), n. Same as leash.

leach-craft, n. See leech-craft.

leacher¹, n. See leecher.

leacher² (lē'chér), n. A leach-tub or leaching-vat.

leacher³, leacherous¹, etc. Obsolete spellings of leecher, etc.

leaching-vat (lē'ching-vat), n. A leach-tub.

leach-line, n. See leech-line.

leachman, n. See leechman.

leach-trough (lēch'trôf), n. See the quotation.

At the salt works in Staffordshire, they take the corned salt from the rest of the brine with a foot or lute, and put it into barrows, the which being set in the leach-troughs, the salt drains itself dry, which draining they call leach-brine, and preserve it to be boiled again as the best and strongest brine. Kennett, MS. Lansd. 1033. (Hallswell.)

leach-tub (lēch'tub), n. A wooden vessel in which ashes are leached. It has the form of an inverted truncated cone, with a perforated false bottom which is covered with straw. In the true bottom is a tap for the removal of the liquor, which is received in a tank below. Also called leaching-rat.

leachy (lē'chi), a. [leach² + -y¹.] Liable to be leached: allowing water to percolate through, as gravelly or sandy soil. Also lechy.

lead¹ (lēd), v.; pret. and pp. led, ppr. leading. [lead, < ME. leiden (pret. ledde, ludde), < AS. lēdan (pret. lādde, pp. lāded, lād) (= OS. lēdjan = OFries. leda = D. leiden = MLG. leiden, lāden = OHG. leitān, MHG. leiten, G. leiten = Icel. leiðna = Sw. leda = Dan. lede), lead; a factitive verb, connected with lād (= Icel. leiðh, etc.), a way, course, journey (see lode¹), < lithan = OHG. līdan = Icel. liðna, go, = Dan. lide = Sw. lida, glide on, wear on; see lith³.] I. trans. 1. To go before as a guide; guide the steps or movements of; precede or accompany in order to show the way to; conduct: as, to lead the blind; a star led the three wise men to Bethlehem.

And zee schulle undirstonde that oure Lord Jesu, in that Nyghte that he was taken, he was lyd in to a Gardyn; and there he was first examyned righte scharlyp. Manderille, Travels, p. 13.

Moses . . . led the flock to the backside of the desert. Ex. iii. 1.

2. To be at the head of; direct or control the movements or actions of; command: as, to lead an army or an expedition; to lead a mutiny.

The kynge Arthur hath well be-sette the lordship that he hath yow yoven to lede and governe his peple. Mertin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 394.

Assemble thou
Of all those myriads which we lead the chief. Milton, P. L., v. 684.

Specifically, in music: (a) To conduct or direct, as a band, orchestra, or chorus. (b) To act as a principal performer in, as an orchestra or chorus: said of the principal first violin, of the principal soprano, etc.

3. To go before or in advance of; take the lead of or in; go or be first in: as, the gray horse leads them all; he leads his class in mathematics; to lead the dance.

A-queynte the weel with Prudence,
He ledeh alle vertues ont & inne.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 60.

For her I made the Song: the Dance with her I lead.
Prior, Solomon, ii.

And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the best.
Leigh Hunt, Abou Ben Adhem.

We sit in solemn rows on each side of the hall, and are apparently waiting for some one to lead us in prayer.
C. W. Stoddard, Mashallah, xviii.

4. To cause to go or act; draw on; induce; influence: as, to lead one astray; this leads me to refuse.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers. Shak., Rich. II., ii. 1. 241.

All before him was anxiety, uncertainty. He had cut himself adrift; he was on the great stream. Whither would he lead him?
Kingsley, Hypatia, I, 195.

5. To conduct in a way or course; draw or guide in a mode of acting or thinking: as, to lead a stream of water through a field for irrigation; to lead one's thoughts into new channels.

l. c. An abbreviation—(a) in printing, of lower case (that is, small letters, as opposed to capitals); (b) of the Latin loco citato, in the place cited: used to avoid repetition of a citation or reference already given.

le¹ (lē). [F. le, OF. le, lo = Sp. lo = It. lo, m., OF. F. Sp. lo, f., def. art.; cf. OF. F. il, he, = Sp. el = It. il, def. art.; < L. ille (acc. illum, neut. illud), OL. olle, ollus, he, that, used in LL. ML., and hence in Rom., as the def. art.]

6. To draw out; live through; pass: said of manner of life: as, to lead an idle life.

"Fieche suster," quod she, "as longe as ye caste yow to lede soche lyf, ye ought not to come in this place."
Merrin (E. E. T. S.), i. 9.

That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. 1 Tim. ii. 2.

7. To draw or drag into; cause to proceed in: as, he led his pursuers a hard chase.

You remember the . . . life he led his wife and daughter.
Dickens.

8. To act as a guide in; show by going before. And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way. Ex. xiii. 21.

He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.
Goldsmith, Des. VII., i. 170.

9. To drive, as horses.

The Sonnes sone, the rede,
That highte Phetoun, wolde lede
Algate his fader carte and gye.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 942.

10. To transport or carry, as in a cart or other conveyance. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

With him ther was a Ploughman, was his brother,
That hadde led of dong ful many a fother.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 530.

The hard frost . . . kept back the too early growth of autumn-sown wheat, and gave . . . [the farmers] the opportunity of leading manure.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xvi.

11. In card-playing, to commence a round or trick with: as, to lead a heart or a trump.—To lead apes in hell. See ape.—To lead astray, to draw into a wrong way or into error; seduce from truth or rectitude.—To lead by the nose, to cause to follow or comply submissively, as a bear is led by a ring in the nose.

Though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 832.

To lead captive, to draw or carry into captivity.—To lead on, to persuade to advance; induce; draw on.—To lead one a dance, to lead the dance. See dance.

II. intrans. 1. To go before as a guide; act as a guide; show the way by going along with or in advance; take the lead.

I will lead on softly. Gen. xxxiii. 14.

Lead, monster; we'll follow. Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 159.

2. To be in advance; be first; have precedence or power of direction: as, to lead in a race or in battle. Specifically, in music: (a) To take the principal part; conduct, as in an orchestra or chorus. (b) To enunciate the subject or theme of a thematic composition: said of one voice-part which begins alone: usually, in this sense, with off.

3. To serve for direction or guidance; have a direction or tendency; tend: as, this road leads to the river; gaming leads to other vices.

Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. Mat. vii. 13.

The ascent of steps
That to the decorated pillar lead.
Wordsworth, Excursion, vi.

4. In card-playing, to play the first card of a round or trick.—5. To be led; be guided, conducted, or turned in a given way.

As he [the king] was leading to the place of execution, one of his people wept. Penn., No Cross, No Crown, ii.

Weir men say of fish that they lead best when passing rapidly towards some distant point; and worst when they are moving slowly or uncertainly. Mass. Rep., 1872, p. 28.

Before being entered the dogs must be taught to lead quietly. Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 219.

To lead fair (naut.), said of running rigging when it is clear of the other ropes.—To lead in prayer, to offer prayer in an assembly, as a prayer-meeting; used with reference to leading the thoughts of others into a particular devotional channel.—To lead off, to lead the way or take the initiative in the doing of something.—To lead up to, to bring about or introduce by degrees or in a gradual way: as, these events led up to the establishment of a republic; he led up to his favorite topic.

lead¹ (léd), n. [= OFries. lede, lade = MD. leyde = MLG. leide, lêde = OHG. leita, leitit, MHG. leite, G. leite, lead; from the verb.] 1. The position of a guide or leader; guidance; direction; instruction; hence, the condition of being first or foremost; precedence: as, to be in the lead; to take the lead of a party; to have a clear lead in a game; to give one a lead in hunting.

I lost the run, and had to see Harriet Tristram go away with the best lead anyone has had to a fast thing. Trollope, Orley Farm.

The lawyers were, of course, in the lead, as the profession always is in all matters of public interest in our land. Tourgée, A Fool's Errand, p. 217.

2. A following.

Take fyve of the best knyghtes
That be in your lede.
Lyttell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, v. 108).

3. That which leads or guides; that which is followed, as an example, a clue, or a passage-way: as, to follow the lead of a speculator; to find a lead out of a difficulty. Specifically—(a) A passage-way; a channel; an open passage through ice.

During the first watch I went up into the crow's nest, to have a look at the leads of open water, and discovered the appearance of one to the southward.

R. M' Cormick, Arc. and Antarc. Voyages, I. 148.

(b) In mining, a lode. See lode, n. [Western U. S.]

4. The right of playing the first card in a round or trick; the suit or card so played.

All you have got to mind is to return your partner's lead.
Whyte Melville, Good for Nothing.

5. The course of a running rope from end to end: as, a clear lead.—6. In engin., the average distance required to be traveled to remove the earth of an excavation to form an embankment. It is equivalent to the removal of the whole quantity of the material from the center of gravity of the excavation to the center of gravity of the embankment.

7. In elect.: (a) The angle between the plane through the lines of contact of the brushes or collectors of a dynamo or electric motor with the commutator and the transverse plane bisecting the magnetic field. (b) A conductor conveying electricity from the source to the place where it is to be used.—8. In a steam-engine, an arrangement of the valve or valves and the ports of a cylinder by which the steam is admitted in front of the piston or allowed to escape from behind it a little before the end of the stroke. On the steam-side or inlet-ports it is also called outside lead; on that of the exhaust-ports it is called the inside lead or exhaust-lead.

9. In music: (a) The enunciation by one voice-part of the subject or theme of a thematic composition before the entrance of the other parts. (b) A one or short passage in one voice-part on which the entrance of others depends.—Lead of the crank, in a steam-engine, the excess above 90° in the angle made by the plane of one crank with the plane of another on the same shaft. This setting secures greater smoothness of motion by moderating the velocity of the piston at the end of the stroke. E. H. Knight.

lead² (led), n. and a. [K ME. leed, < AS. leād, lead, = OFries. lad = D. lood, lead, = MLG. lōt, lead, a weight, lode, a plummet, = MHG. lōt, G. loth = Sw. Dan. lod, a plummet, a lead, ball, bullet, a weight. The word occurs disguised in pilot, q. v. Another Tent. word for 'lead,' the metal, is OHG. blīo, MHG. blī, G. blei, MLG. bli, blig = Icel. blj = Sw. Dan. blj; the l is plumbum (see plumb).] I. n. 1. Chemical symbol, Pb; atomic weight, 206.9. One of the useful metals, remarkable for its softness and durability. It belongs to the class of white metals, but has a decided bluish-gray tint, expressed by the common term "lead-gray." The freshly cut surface is lustrous, but it soon becomes dull from the formation of a film of oxid. Lead is the softest metal in general use; it can be scratched by the finger-nail, and is easily cut with a knife. It is very malleable, and can be rolled into thin sheets; but it cannot be drawn into fine wire. Lead rarely occurs in the native form; as a general rule, and possibly in every instance, the particles of the metal thus found are associated with some ore of lead, or occur in such a manner as to indicate that they are of secondary origin. The most important localities of native lead are in Sweden, near Pajsberg, where this metal occurs in small filiform masses and scaly grains, associated with magnetite in dolomite, and also near Nordmark, where pieces several ounces in weight have been obtained. Native lead has also recently been found crystallized in various forms belonging to the isometric system. Its specific gravity is about 11.4. It fuses at about 617°; when heated before the blowpipe on charcoal, it is volatilized, leaving a yellow incrustation. The ores of lead are numerous and widely distributed, occurring in many countries in very considerable quantity. The most important of these ores is the sulphuret (galena), which contains 86½ per cent. of the metal. This ore is found in greater or less quantity in a very large number of metalliferous veins, especially such as produce gold and silver. Galena almost always contains at least a trace of silver, and in most regions the quantity of the precious metal is sufficient to make its separation profitable. (See Pattinson process and Parkes process, under process.) The carbonate of lead (cerusite) is also an important ore of this metal, and so is the sulphate (anglesite), but in less degree. These ores also usually contain silver in paying quantity, and the value of the precious metal is frequently greater than that of the lead itself. One of the chief uses of lead is for service-pipes in the supply of houses with water, a purpose for which the ductility and flexibility of this metal admirably adapt it. A serious drawback, however, is its liability to oxidation and the poisonous nature of the resulting combination, and to overcome this tendency lead pipes are often lined with tin. Another important use of lead is as the base of oil-painting, for which purpose it is used in the form of the carbonate. (See white lead, below.) Lead is also much used in the form of shot and bullets. The most important alloy of which lead forms a part is pewter.

2. A plummet or mass of lead attached to a graduated line, used in sounding at sea. It is usually in the shape of the frustum of a cone or pyramid. For depths of 20 fathoms or under, it has a weight of from 5 to 9 pounds, and is called a hand-lead. For depths from 20 to 60 fathoms, the lead weighs from 20 to 60 pounds, and is called a coasting-lead. For depths from 60 to 200 fathoms, a deep-sea lead is used, weighing from 75 to 120 pounds. A special apparatus, called a deep-sea sounding-machine, is used for depths above 200 fathoms. See deep-sea sounding-machine, under deep-sea.

3. In printing, a thin strip of type-metal (sometimes of brass), used to increase the space between lines of composed types. Leads are usually cast to fractional parts of the body pica. The thickness most used is six-to-pica, one thirty-sixth of an inch, but there are many sizes both above and below this. To make matter still more conspicuous, double leads (two leads together) are often used, and sometimes treble leads.

There is a newspaper in another city which . . . avoids double leads, capitals, pictures, and all forms of typographical hysteria. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 819.

4. A small stick of black-lead or plumbago used in pencils.—5. pl. Sheets or plates of lead used for covering roofs: sometimes used as a singular for a flat roof covered with lead.

He looketh down on his brethren as if he stood on the top of a leads, and not on the same ground they do. Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, V. 13.

The tempest crackles on the leads.
Tennyson, Sir Galahad.

"On to the leads; will you come and see the view from thence?" I followed still, up a very narrow staircase to the attics, and thence by a ladder and through a trap-door to the roof of the hall. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xi.

6. A pipe of lead; a leader.

And let me (good Lord) be like the Lead
Which to som Citie from som Conduit-head
Brings holsum water; yet (self-wanting sense)
It self receives no drop of comfort thence.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., Eden.

7. In stained-glass work, etc., one of the comes or ribbons of lead, grooved on both sides, which serve to retain the glass by the edges.—8. In knitting, a tin or lead socket in which a needle is fixed before being fitted to the frame.—Black lead. See black-lead.—Blue lead. (a) A miners' name for galena. (b) In the manufacture of white lead, lead which has not become perfectly converted into the carbonate, and therefore retains more or less of its blue color.—Chocolate lead. See chocolate.—Corneous lead. Same as phosgenite.—Drift-lead, a heavy lead hung overboard when a ship is lying at anchor, to show if she drifts or drags.—Glazers' turned lead. Same as *came*³, 2.—Green lead ore. See pyromorphite.—Lead-float file. See *file*¹.—Lead-shaving machine, a series of rotary knives so combined as to reduce lead to shavings for the manufacture of white lead.—Leads of Venice, places of confinement situated immediately under the leads (roof) of the ducal palace in Venice, memorable for the political prisoners confined there in the time of the Venetian republic.—Milled lead. Same as sheet-lead (which see, below).—Mock lead. Same as blende.—Red lead, a pigment formed by the exposure of litharge to the action of air at a temperature of 560°, under which conditions it absorbs oxygen. It is used for a variety of purposes. When mixed with mastic and linseed-oil, it is used as a cement for the flanges of steam-pipes, but it enters the market chiefly as a pigment, as, when mixed with either water or linseed-oil, it covers extremely well.—Red lead ore. Same as crocoite.—Sheet-lead, a thin plate of lead made by passing a flat ingot repeatedly through a rolling-mill until the requisite thinness has been attained. Called in England milled lead.—Sugar of lead, or lead acetate, a crystalline salt prepared by dissolving lead or litharge in vinegar or pyrolicious acid. It has a sweetish taste, and in large doses is a violent irritant poison. It is used in medicine both internally and externally, and extensively in the arts.—To arm a lead. See *arm*².—To heave or cast the lead, to cast the deep-sea lead or hand-lead for the purpose of taking soundings.

I sall caste leede and loke the space,
Howe depe the watir is like a dele.

York Plays, p. 51.

White lead, a mixture of the carbonate and the hydrated oxid of lead in somewhat varying proportions, approximating to 75 per cent. of the former and 25 per cent. of the latter. It is prepared as follows: Metallic lead is cast into perforated disks 7 inches in diameter and ¼ inch thick, technically called buckles. These are packed into earthenware pots 15 inches high, and to each pot is added a small amount of acetic acid. The pots are then piled into bins 40 feet square, and the whole covered with spent tan-bark and left alone for nearly three months. During this time the temperature rises, steam is given off, and a rather complex chemical decomposition takes place, by which the metallic lead buckles become converted into the white carbonate. But the quantity of lead converted into white lead seldom amounts to more than 65 per cent. The bins are unloaded and the contents of the pots thrown into a revolving screen, which separates the white lead from the unconverted metallic lead, this latter being remelted and put through the process again. The white lead is ground to a fine powder, and then made into a paste with 10 per cent. of linseed-oil, forming the paint known as white lead in oil. This method of converting metallic lead into white lead is known as the "Dutch process." Other methods tending toward greater quickness and economy have also been used.—Yellow lead ore. See wulfenite.

II. a. made or composed of lead; consisting more or less of lead.—Lead flat, a level roof covered with sheet-lead resting on boarding and joists. E. H. Knight.—Lead lights, a form of casement-window having small panes set in leaden cames, which are attached to cross-bars called saddle-bars. E. H. Knight.—Syn. See lead.
lead² (led), v. t. [K ME. leden, leeden (= D. looden = MLG. loden = G. lothen = Dan. lodde = Sw. loda, sound with the flat; from the noun.) 1. To cover with lead; fasten or fit with lead; join by means of lead: as, to lead a roof; to lead stained glass, as in a window.

The Cloysters about it [the palace], leaded above, and paved with stone, the roof supported with columns of marble. Sandys, Travels, p. 25.

2. In printing, to insert leads between the lines of, as type.—3. In ccram., to give metallic gloss to by means of an ore of lead ground fine and strewn over the surface.—4. To smooth and polish (the bore of a rifled gun) by the application of a leaden lap.

When once rifled, the barrel cannot—as in the Henry, Ratchet, and other riflings—be leaded or otherwise regulated, except with the rifling machine.

W. F. Greener, The Gun, p. 146.

To lead out, in printing, to insert leads between the lines of (composed types).—To lead up, in stained-glass work, to join or assemble (the different pieces) by means of lead ribbons or cames.

lead³, n. [Also lead; < ME. leede; perhaps < Gael. luchd, a pot, kettle.] A cauldron; a copper kettle.

His heede That stemed as a forneys of a leede. Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 202.

Mow haulm to burn,
To serve thy turn,
To bake thy bread,
To burn under lead.

Tusser, Husbandry, August's Abstract.

lead-arming (led'är'ming), n. A lump of tallow, soap, grease, or other similar substance pressed into the lower end of a sounding-lead for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the bottom from the particles adhering to the greasy substance.

lead-ash (led'ash), n. The slag of lead.
leadback (led'bak), n. The American dunlin, ox-bird, or purre. [Shinnecock Bay, L. I.] lead-bath (led'bath), n. A furnace for exposing ores of gold or silver mechanically to the action of melted lead.

The powdered ores unite with the lead to form an alloy, and the precious metals are afterward extracted from the alloy by various processes.

lead-colic (led'kol'ik), n. See colic.

lead-color (led'kul'ör), n. A dull bluish-gray color, approximating to the color of lead.

lead-colored (led'kul'ör), a. Having the color of lead; of a dull-grayish color: as, lead-colored clouds.

lead-cutter (led'kut'er), n. A machine made to cut to any length the leads used by printers. Many forms are in use, but all have a flat table, an adjustable gage, and a chisel-faced cutter that is brought down by means of a lever.

lead-eater (led'öt'er), n. India-rubber. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

leaded (led'ed), a. [*lead*² + -ed.] 1. Separated or spaced by the insertion of thin strips of type-metal between the lines; said of composed types.—2. Fitted or furnished with lead. Especially—(a) Covered with sheet-lead, as a roof. (b) Set in a frame of lead; joined by means of bars or ribbons of lead, as stained-glass work.—Leaded sash, the sash of a stained-glass or other window in which the panes are held by bars or ribbons of lead.

leaden (led'n), a. [ME. leden, < AS. leiden (= D. looden), of lead, < lead, lead: see *lead*² and -en.] 1. Made or consisting of lead: as, a leaden ball; a leaden coffin.

What says this leaden casket? Shak., M. of V., ii. 7. 15.
To me thy leaden Rod resign,
To charm the Centinel
On Mount Citheron.

Lead-bath.

Congreve, Semele, iii. 1.

2. Like lead in any particular. (a) Inertly heavy; as, the leaden weight of a helpless person. (b) Heavy and slow: as, a leaden pace. (c) Dull; sluggish; without spirit.

If he be leaden, ley-cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shak., Rich. III., iii. 1. 176.

Base, leaden ears that glory in your birth.

Marlowe, Edward II., ii. 2.

(d) Of the color of lead; dull-colored; hence, gloomy: as, a leaden sky.

[Leaden is often compounded with participial adjectives: as, leaden-winged time; a leaden-paced messenger.

This may serve to shew the Difference betwixt the two Nations, the leaden-heel'd Pace of the one, and the quicksilver'd Motions of the other. Hovell, Letters, l. iv. 21.

O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with death!

Thomson, Castle of Indolence, ii.]

Leaden bulls. See *bull*².—Syn. Lead, Leaden. Lead as an adjective is not used figuratively; leaden is used both literally and figuratively: as, a lead or leaden image; a leaden sky. A similar distinction exists between wood and wooden, gold and golden, etc.: as, a wood partition; wooden walls; wooden immobility; a gold watch; golden clouds, or hopes, or prospects. The form in-ven is generally preferable rhythmically; hence its retention and extension in poetic use.

lead-encephalopathy (led'en-sef-a-lop'a-thi), n. A morbid cerebral condition produced by chronic lead-poisoning.

leaden-gray (led'n-grä), a. and n. Same as lead-gray.

leader¹ (lê'dër), n. [ME. leder, ledere, < AS. lædere (= OFries. ledera, ledere = D. leider = MLG. leider, leder = OHG. leitari, MHG. leitære, leiter, G. leiter = Dan. leder = Sw. ledare), a leader, < lædan, lead: see *lead*¹.] 1. One who leads, guides, conducts, directs, or controls; a director or conductor; a chief or commander.

They be blind leaders of the blind. Mat. xv. 14.
I have given him for . . . a leader and commander of the people. Isa. lv. 4.

A resolute leader might have brought it [the war] to a close in a month. Macaulay, Hallam's Const. 111st.

2. One who is first or most prominent in any relation; one who takes precedence by virtue of superior qualification or influence; a recognized principal or superior: as, leaders of society; a leader of the bar.

Bi wear of richeless, for he wole make diffence,
For he is leader of al synne.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 60.

Queen's Counsel are usually termed Leaders, & they sit in front of the other Barristers, whom they are said to "lead" in any particular case in which both are engaged. Slater, Guide to Legal Prof., p. 17.

Judges, mayors, . . . leaders in science, clergymen better than famous, . . . were represented in that meeting. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, p. 123.

3. In the Meth. Epis. Ch., one who has charge of a "class," which he meets at stated times, and over which he exercises a quasi-pastoral supervision. See class, n., 3 (b).—4. In music: (a) A conductor or director. (b) The principal first-violin player in an orchestra (concert-master), the principal cornettist in a band, or the principal soprano in a chorus. Formerly the leader of an orchestra was also the conductor, but the duties of leading and conducting are now separated in large orchestras.

5. That which leads or conducts; something that guides the course of a thing, or conducts to it. (a) In mining, the more or less well-defined vein-like mass of ore which the miner follows in his work; the indication which the miner follows when working an irregular metalliferous deposit. This is sometimes a mere crack, sometimes a fissure with vein-stone or even with ore, and sometimes a well-defined fissure-vein. The word is used chiefly where there is some complexity in the phenomena, as where the rock on each side of the fissure is more or less mineralized, so that the fissure or leader forms only a part of the metalliferous deposit. (b) A pipe for the conveyance of water from a roof or the upper part of a house to the ground. (c) A row of dots or hyphens which lead the eye of a reader from words or figures at one end of a line to words or figures at the other end. (d) A block or piece of wood in which holes are cut to serve as guides for ropes. (e) A kind of wrapped quick-match to lead fire rapidly from one part of a piece of fireworks to another. (f) A furrow extending from the eye to the skirt of a millstone. (g) In fishing, a piece of silkworm gut or fine cord at the end of the reel-line, several feet long, to which the droppers or bobbers are attached at proper intervals. Also called casting-line. (h) A structure interwoven with brush or with netting, or formed of stone, for leading fish into a pound, weir, or heart- seine. The fish following the shore meet the leader, and turn and follow it to its termination. Leaders are most frequently used where there is a long extent of shallow water which ebbs off at low tide.

The pounds of some of the Connecticut fishermen have net-leaders of from 700 to 1,300 feet, set on poles 25 or 30 feet long, driven into the sand. Massachusetts Fisheries Report, 1863, p. 11.

(i) In surveying, the foremost of the two chain-carriers. (j) A ring or gripper used for leading cattle, passed through the septum of the nose.

6. That which precedes; something that has a leading or foremost place, whether in actual position or in importance. Specifically—(a) One of the leading or front horses in a team of four or more, as distinguished from a wheeler, or one placed next the carriage.

St. Foix takes a post-chaise
With, for "wheelers," two boys, and, for "leaders," two greys.

(b) The principal wheel in a set of machinery. (c) A principal editorial article in a newspaper; one of the longer articles in a newspaper appearing as its own utterances or expressions of editorial views, whether written by the ostensible editor or by leader-writers or contributors.

Mr. Bryant was the first of our journalists to adopt the English practice of leaders, which has since become the universal habit of our journalism. D. J. Hill, Bryant, p. 96.

7. A sinew; a tendon: as, the leaders of the fingers or toes. [Technical].—8. Something offered as a special attraction to customers; a leading "bargain." [Trade cant.]

A new rival may inflict severe loss through overestimating the business field which he enters; through cutting the price of a staple below cost, and making it what is called a leader. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 622.

9. In bot., the terminal shoot of an excurrent trunk, commonly forming the apex of a cone-shaped tree, as in the fir and the larch.—Cuckoo's leader, the wryneck.—Follow my leader.

See follow.—Syn. 1 and 2. Commander, Head, etc. See chief.

leader² (led'ër), n. [ME. ledere, ledare; < *lead*² + -er.] A plumber.

leader-boy (lê'dër-boi), n. A boy who guides bullocks. See fore-looper. [South Africa.]

leader-furrow (lê'dër-fur'ö), n. See furrow.

leader-hook (lê'dër-hük), n. A hold-fast hook to support a rain-water leader. Its tang is driven into the wall.

leadership (lê'dër-ship), n. [*leader*¹ + -ship.] The office of a leader; guidance; control.

leader-writer (lê'dër-ri'tër), n. A member of the editorial staff of a newspaper who writes leaders or editorial articles.

lead-glance (led'gläns), n. Lead ore; galena. lead-glaze (led'glüz), n. A glaze for ceramic ware produced by the use of lead, applied throughout Europe to the coarser kinds of pottery for domestic use. Ware covered with this glaze was usually coarse and brittle, and a coating was needed to make it available for holding liquids; but the glaze was injurious in the case of such contents as would partly dissolve it, and hence pottery so coated was superseded, especially by salt-glazed ware.

lead-gray (led'grä), a. and n. I. a. Colored like lead.

II. n. A color resembling that of lead. Also leaden-gray.

leadhillite (led'hil-it), n. [Leadhills, a locality in Lanarkshire, Scotland, + *-ite*².] A sulphato-carbonate of lead occurring in transparent white to yellow or greenish crystals.

leading¹ (lê'ding), n. [ME. ledying; verbal n. of *lead*¹, v.] 1. The act of conducting or guiding; conduct; leadership; command.

Hir fader, welche in Romane
The ledynge of the chivalrie
In gouernance hath vndertake.

Gouern, Conf. Amant, vii.

2. Ability to lead; commanding quality or capacity.

The situation of the Whig Party is very critical indeed, and I really think it becomes necessary for your Lordship and all other men of great leading and property in the country to come up to town and to concert the measures to be taken in so critical a moment.

C. J. Foz, Letter, July 1, 1732.

3. A directing influence or guidance; especially, a spiritual indication of the proper course of action in any case: a term used by the Friends or Quakers.

Ann Millet, a young person who began to have leadings at the age of four years, who never cared to play, never laughed, and always waited to be directed before she even washed her hands.

M. C. Lee, A Quaker Girl of Nantucket, p. 8.

leading² (lê'ding), p. a. [Pr. of *lead*¹, v.] 1. Guiding; conducting; preceding; hence, serving as a precedent.

He left his mother a countess by patent, which was a new leading example. Sir H. Fotton.

2. Attracting; drawing: as, a leading article among shopkeepers (that is, something offered as a special inducement to customers, for its attractiveness or its cheapness, or both).

—3. Chief; principal; capital; most influential: as, a leading motive in action; a leading man in a party.

The constitutional changes made by Solon were in leading respects towards industrial organization. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 488.

Leading article. Same as *leader*¹, 6 (c).
He would hold men's buttons, and discourse to them the leading article out of that paper.

Thackeray, Adventures of Philip.

Leading axle. See axle.—Leading business (theat.), the setting of principal parts or rôles in plays.—Leading chord, in music, the chord of the dominant: so called because it leads naturally into that of the tonic.—Leading column (milit.), the first column that advances from the right, left, or center of a company, battalion, or army.—Leading file, the first two men who advance from the right, left, or center of a company or a battalion.—Leading guide, the guide to whose movements a column of soldiers must conform in marching.—Leading lights. See *light*¹.—Leading man, leading lady, the chief performers in a theatrical company; the man and woman who enact the parts of hero and heroine.—Leading marks, objects on shore used for guidance on entering or leaving port.—Leading melody, in music, the melody which controls the construction of a piece at any point. In plain music it is usually the soprano part, but in the dramatic music it may be any part or all the parts in turn.—Leading motive [German leitmotiv], in dramatic music, a principal motive or theme; a theme, usually of but few tones, by which a personage, situation, thought, or emotion is indicated, and which recurs (sometimes in a modified form) whenever the personage, situation, thought, or emotion appears or is suggested. The principle of the leading motive was recognized in the middle of the eighteenth century, but was not elaborately applied until the later works of Richard Wagner, especially in those of the Nibelungen Trilogy, in "Tristan and Isolde," etc.—Leading note, leading tone, in music, the seventh tone of the major scale (and of certain forms of the minor scale), commonly called 6 (by the tonic-sol-fa-sol 6); the subtonic: so called because it lies but one half-step below the tonic or key-note, and (in ascending passages) naturally leads into it. The leading tone is characteristic of the modern as contrasted with the medieval modes, in all but one of which the seventh tone was a whole step below the tonic; hence it is sometimes called the characteristic tone. — Leading principle of inference. See inference. — Leading question. See question. — Leading wind (naut.), a wind abeam or quartering.

leading² (led'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lead², v.] 1. Lead-work; the leads, as of a house; articles of lead collectively.

The doors are glazed with a design made of leading and opalescent glass. Art Age, V. 47.

2. Milit., the clogging of the grooves of a rifle by lead from the bullets.

leading-block (lē'ding-blok), n. A block for guiding a rope or purchase, or holding it in a given position without impeding its motion.

leading-hose (lē'ding-hōz), n. The hose from which the water of a fire-engine is discharged.

leading-in (led'ing-in'), n. The act or process of putting together the parts of a stained-glass window having lead eames.

leadingly (lē'ding-li), adv. In a leading manner; by leading.

leading-rod (led'ing-rōd), n. A rod used in drawboring and polishing the bores of rifle-barrels. E. H. Knight.

leading-screw (lē'ding-skrō), n. Same as lead-screw.

leading-spring (lē'ding-spring), n. In English locomotives, one of the springs fixed on the leading axle-box to bear the weight above. E. H. Knight.

leading-staff (lē'ding-stáf), n. Milit., the staff or baton of a field-marshal. [Rare.]

After this action I preferred was,
And chosen city-captain at Mile-End,
With hat and feather, and with leading-staff.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, v. 3.

leading-strings (lē'ding-stringz), n. pl. 1. Strings by which children are supported when beginning to walk.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, or swim without bladders? Swift.

Hence—2. Restrictions imposed upon freedom of action; intrusive care or custody; restraining guidance.

Leaving you, within the tethering of certain leading-strings, to gather what advantages you can. Ruskin, Elem. of Drawing, iii.

To be in leading-strings, to be in a state of infancy or dependence; to be a puppet in the hands of others.

leading-wheel (lē'ding-hwēl), n. In locomotives, one of the wheels which are placed before the driving-wheels.

leading-wires (lē'ding-wīrz), n. pl. In elect., same as leads. See lead¹, 7 (b).

lead-lap (led'láp), n. In gem-cutting, same as roughing-mill and lead-mill.

leadless (led'les), a. [lead² + -less.] Having no lead; not charged with a bullet. [Rare.]

Little's leadless pistol met his eye.
Byron, Eug. Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

lead-line (led'lin), n. 1. The line attached to a sounding-lead, used in measuring the depth of water. See lead², 2. The hand-lead line is marked at one fathom with a toggle, at 2 and 12 fathoms with two strips of leather, at 3 and 13 with three strips, at 5 and 15 with a white rag, at 7 and 17 with a red rag, at 10 with a piece of leather with one hole in it, and at 20 with a piece of leather having two holes. Coasting-lines and deep-sea lines are marked alike: namely, at 10 fathoms with a bit of line knotted once, at 20 with a line having two knots, etc., each intermediate 5 fathoms being marked by a bit of line without a knot; at 100 fathoms is placed a bit of red, at 200 a bit of white, and at 300 a bit of blue bunting.

2. A heavy leaded or weighted line attached to the bottom of a net, as a seine, and used to sink it.—Lead-line drawing, in stained-glass work, same as cut-line drawing (which see, under drawing).

lead-luster (led'lus'tēr), n. Oxid of lead; a lead glaze given to some wares after burning.

leadman (led'man), n. [lead¹ + man. Cf. lodeman.] One who leads in anything, as in a dance.

Such a light and mettled dance Saw you never,
And by leadmen for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle stones. B. Jonson.

lead-mill (led'mil), n. In gem-cutting, a flat wheel of lead charged with emery and water, which is used in grinding all gems except those below 8.5 in hardness.

lead-mule (led'mūl), n. A mule that goes in the lead, as of a mule-train.

Our driver had named the lead-mules Bettie and Jane.
E. B. Custer, Boots and Saddles, p. 66.

lead-nail (led'nāl), n. 1. A small, round-headed copper-alloy nail, used for fastening sheet-lead on roofs.—2. Naut., a scupper-nail.

lead-ocher (led'ō'kēr), n. See massicot.

lead-paralysis (led'pā-rāl'i-sis), n. Paralysis due to chronic lead-poisoning.

lead-pencil (led'pen'sil), n. An instrument for making marks or lines, or for writing or drawing, made by inclosing a slip of plumbago or graphite (which is commonly called black-lead) in a small (generally cylindrical) casing of wood.

lead-plant (led'plānt), n. A shrubby leguminous plant, Amorpha canescens, found from Michigan and Wisconsin southward, reported to indicate the presence of lead-ore. See Amorpha.

lead-plaster (led'plās'tēr), n. An adhesive plaster made by boiling together lead oxid, olive-oil, and water, the emplastrum plumbi of the pharmacopœia. Also called diachylon.

lead-poisoning (led'poi'zōn-ing), n. Poisoning by the introduction into the body of some preparation of lead, as sugar of lead, white lead, etc. Chronic lead-poisoning may exhibit one or more of the following features: anemia, pains in the limbs, lead-colic, lead-paralysis, lead-encephalopathy, nephritis, etc. Also called plumbism.

lead-pot (led'pōt), n. A crucible or pot for melting lead. E. H. Knight.

lead-screw (led'skrō), n. In meeh., the main screw of a lathe, which gives the feed-motion to the slide-rest.

lead-sinkers (led'sing'kērz), n. pl. In a knitting-machine, a series of plates attached to a sinker-bar, by which they are depressed all together in order to form a loop between every two needles. They alternate with the jack-sinkers.

leadsman¹ (lēdz'man), n. [ME. lodesman; a var. of lodesman, q. v.] One who leads the way.

I will be your ledes man,
And lede you the way.
Lyell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 108).

leadsman² (lēdz'man), n. Naut., a seaman who heaves the lead.

lead-soap (led'sōp), n. An insoluble oleate, palmitate, or stearate of lead, or a mixture of these salts. It is known in pharmacy as lead-plaster.

lead-spar (led'spār), n. Corusite.

lead-tracery (led'trā'sēr-i), n. The lead sashes or ribbons, collectively, in any combination of glass, as in a window, formed with leaden eames.

lead-tree (led'trē), n. A leguminous tree, Leucaena glauca, related to the acacias. It is native in tropical America, and has been naturalized in Africa and Asia. It is widely cultivated as an ornamental tree in warm climates.

lead-vitriol (led'vit'ri-ol), n. Same as anglesite.

lead-water (led'wā'tēr), n. Aqueous solution of subacetate of lead, employed in medicine as an external application. It is sedative and astringent. It is the liquor plumbi subacetatis dilutius of the pharmacopœia.

lead-works (led'wērks), n. sing. or pl. A place where lead is extracted from the ore.

leadwort (led'wört), n. [lead² + wort¹.] 1. An herbaceous plant of southern Europe, Plumbago Europæa.—2. By extension, any plant of the genus Plumbago, of the order Plumbagineæ.

leaf (lēf), n.; pl. leaves (lēvz). [ME. leaf, lef (pl. leves), < AS. leaf (pl. leaf) = OS. lōbh = OFries. laf = D. loof = MLG. lōf = OHG. louf, loup, MHG. loup, G. laub = Icel. lauf = Sw. löf = Dan. löv = Goth. laufs, a leaf. Cf. Lith. lāpas = Russ. lepeste, a leaf, Gr. λέπος, λεπίς, a scale (see lepis). For the L. and Gr. words for 'leaf,' see foil¹. Hence ult. lobby, lodge; in comp. ME. leafsel.] 1. An expanded, usually green, organ of a plant, of transient duration, produced laterally from a stem or branch, and, with others, arranged upon the stem in a definite and symmetrical order. In the most complete sense, a leaf consists of a blade or lamina, the broad, flat portion; a footstalk, leafstalk, or petiole, the linear portion connecting the blade with the stem; and a pair of appendages, the stipules, at the base of the petiole; but often the petiole, and still more often the stipules, are wanting. In any case, leaf very frequently denotes merely the blade, especially with descriptives: as, a cordate, an ovate, a lanceolate leaf, etc. Leaves are simple or compound, according as they have one or several blades. They are distinguished also by the arrangement of their veins. (See nerivation.) Physiologically, the normal function of leaves is assimilation—that is, the transformation of inorganic into organic matter, which takes place only in the green parts of the plant. But leaves may be converted to various other uses—for example, into a, unifoliate leaf of orange (Citrus Aurantium); b, simple leaf of chestnut (Castanea vesca).

league¹ (lēg), n. [< ME. lege, < OF. F. ligue = Sp. Pg. liga = It. lega, < ML. liga, lega, a league or confederacy, < L. ligare, bind: see ligament.] 1. A compact or covenant between persons for the maintenance of joint interests or mutual service; hence, union; close affinity; friendship.

There is such a league between my good man and he!
Shak., M. W. of W., III. 2. 25.

I myself am in such hearty league
With solitary thoughts, that pensive language Charms my attention. Ford, Lady's Trial, iv. 1.
Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league.
Milton, P. L., iv. 339.

Specifically—2. A political or military confederation; a covenanted alliance or coalition, as of persons or parties in a state, or more commonly of the ruling powers of different states, for the promotion of common objects or interests; a compact for mutual aid and support in public policy or war: as, the Hanseatic League; the Holy League in France; the league of Schmalkald.

Howbeit, because we pilgrymes were not, as he sayd, comprysed in the sayd lege, he wolde not therfore promys nor warant vs any auctry, but we to stande at oure aduocature.
Sir R. Guyfforde, Pylgrymage, p. 69.

To conclude,
Without the king's will or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.
Shak., Hen. VIII., III. 2. 323.

How fair his [William's] Friendship, and his Leagues how just,
Whom ev'ry Nation counts, whom all Religions trust!
Prior, Carmen Seculare (1700), st. 21.

3. A combination of different associations or bodies of persons for the promotion of common purposes: as, a base-ball league.—Achean League,   tolian League, Hanseatic League, Holy League. See the adjectives.—Land League, in Ireland, a combination of Irish tenant farmers and others, organized by Charles Stewart Parnell in October and November, 1879, under the name of the "Irish National Land League," with the object of procuring reduction of rents, refusing to pay rents if such reduction was not granted, and, finally, of effecting a sweeping change in the land laws, by which peasant proprietors were to be substituted for landlords. The league developed great strength, and became the chief factor in the political movement for home rule in Ireland, also led by Mr. Parnell.—Latin League. See Latin.—Primrose League, in Great Britain, a league or combination of persons pledged to principles of conservatism as represented by Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-81), and opposed to the "revolutionary tendencies of Radicalism." The object of the league is declared to be "the maintenance of religion, the constitution of the realm, and of the imperial ascendancy of Great Britain." The scheme of the organization was first discussed at the Carlton Club, in October, 1883, and the actual league made its first public appearance in a grand banquet at Freemasons' Tavern in London a few weeks later. The organization of the league is by "habitations" or clubs; these obey the instructions of the Grand Council, and annually send delegates to the Grand Habitation, which is held in London on or near the 19th of April, the anniversary of the death of Lord Beaconsfield. A noteworthy feature is the enrolment of women, or "dames," who take an active part in all the business of the association, having an executive committee and a fund of their own. The name and symbol of the league are derived from Beaconsfield's favorite flower.—Solemn League and Covenant. See covenant.—To be in league with, to be confederated with; have a compact with: usually with a sinister meaning: as, to be in league with rogues.—Syn. Confederacy, Coalition, etc. (see alliance), society, federation, association, fraternity.

league¹ (lēg), v.; pret. and pp. leagued, ppr. leaguings. [< league¹, n.] I. intrans. To form a league; join in friendship or interest; combine for mutual support; confederate.

Thus sundry motives, more than I can name, league² (lēg), n. [< ME. lege, legge, leghe, < OF. legue (F. lieue) = Fr. lega, legua = Cat.

legua = Sp. Pg. legua, legoa = It. lega, < ML. lega, leuga, leuca, LL. leuca = LGr. λ  γα, NGr. λ  γα, a Gallic mile (see below), = AS. l  we, a league. Of Celtic origin; cf. Bret. le  , leu, lev, a league. The Gallic leig, Ir. leige, are from   .] An itinerary unit not now in English use, except as a marine league. (See below.) The league as a unit of length originated in ancient Gaul, where it was equal to 1/10 Roman mile, or 1.4 statute miles, improperly termed the Gallic mile. Afterward it was 2,000 paces, and in the middle ages it was in England 2 miles, or nearly 3 statute miles. It is a conventional, not a legal measure. A land-league is sometimes said to be 3 statute miles. The common league of France was 2,764 statute miles; the French posting-league was 2,422 statute miles; the Spanish league was 4,214 statute miles; the Spanish judicial league was 2,634 statute miles; the Flanders league was 3.9 statute miles; the Brabant league was the marine league. The league is still in use in parts of the United States acquired from Mexico, where it is held to be about 2.63 English miles, and a square league 4,428.4 acres. The league is much used in South America. In the greater part of the Argentine Republic, as in Uruguay before 1864, it is equal to 6,000 varas, which, however, are of different lengths in different provinces; and the so-called Argentine league of 5,000 varas exists only in Santiago Del Estero. The postal league, however, varies from 4,000 to 5,000 varas; and in Tucuman the league is sometimes 4,980, sometimes 3,320 varas. The old league of Cuba was 4,906 varas. In Buenos Ayres the league is 5,200 meters, in Ri  a 5,035.20 meters, in Colombia 5,000 meters, in Chili 4,513.892 meters, and in Paraguay 4,193 meters.

And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub, Praising the lean and sallow abstinence!

Milton, Comus, l. 709.

5. Among printers, unprofitable; consuming extra time or labor. Lean work is work which takes more time than other work paid for at the same rate. Lean type is type which is so thin as to require an unusual number of letters to fill a certain space. The standard widths (as declared by the typographical unions of the United States) of the full alphabet of 26 lower-case letters are the spaces occupied by 12 ems or squares of its own body for each size from pica to bourgeois; 13 ems for brevier and minion, 14 for nonpareil, 15 for agate, 16 for pica, and 17 for diamond. Types whose alphabets do not reach these measures are lean or lean-faced.—Lean bow (naul). See bow³.—Lean type, lean work. See def. 5.—Syn. 1. Spare, lank, gaunt, skinny, poor, emaciated.

II. n. 1. That part of flesh which consists of muscle without fat.

leap-year (lēp'yēr), n. [< ME. lepe-gere (not in AS.) = Icel. hlaupt-ār], leap-year (cf. D. schrikkeljaar, MD. schrickeljaer, lit. 'leap-year' (< MD. schrieken, leap forward, start, be startled, be in fear, D. schrikken, be in fear, + jaer, D. jaar, year; so schrikkeldag, the odd day in leap-year, schrikkelmaand, February); Dan. skud-aar, Sw. skottår, lit. 'shoot-year'; < *leap*¹, n., + year. The G. name is schaltjahr, lit. 'intercalary year' (< schalten, insert, intercalate, + jahr, year); L. (LL.) bisextilis annus (> It. anno bisestile, Pg. anno bissexto, Sp. año bisiesto, F. année bissextile), a year containing a second sixth day (sc. before the calends of March) (see bissextile).] A year containing 366 days, or one day more than an ordinary year; a bissextile year. See bissextile. The exact reason of the name is unknown; but it probably arose from the fact that any date in such a year after the added day (February 29th) "leaps over" the day of the week on which it would fall in ordinary years: thus, if March 1st falls on Monday in one year, it will fall on Tuesday in the next if that is an ordinary year of 365 days, but on Wednesday if it is a leap-year.

leap¹ (lēp), v. [*Early mod. Born with the blood, not learnable.
Tennyson, Balin and Balan.

learned (lēr'ned), p. a. [Prop. pp. of learn, v.]

1. Possessed of the learning of schools; well furnished with literary and scientific knowledge; erudite: as, a learned man.

Men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing.
Locke.

It is very difficult to be learned; it seems as if people were worn out on the way to great thoughts, and can never enjoy them because they are too tired.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, I. 398.

2. Well acquainted; having much experience; skilful: often with in: as, learned in art.

Not learned, save in gracious household ways.
Tennyson, Princess, vii.

3. Pertaining to or manifesting learning; exhibiting the effect of instruction or learning; scholastic: as, learned accomplishments; a learned treatise.

How learned a thing it is to be aware of the humblest enemy!
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

I set apart [for study] an hour or two each day, and thus repaid in some degree the loss of the learned education my father once intended for me.

Franklin, Autobiog., p. 126.

There comes thus to be a separation of the originally unitary speech into two parts: a learned dialect, which is the old common language preserved, and a popular dialect, which is its altered descendant.

Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., IX.

=Syn. 1 and 3. Learned, Scholarly, erudite, deep-read. These words agree in representing the possession of a knowledge obtained by careful and protracted study, especially in books. They differ in that learned expresses depth and fullness in the knowledge, while scholarly expresses accuracy: as, a learned and scholarly treatise upon the use of the dative case. Learned expresses only the result of study; scholarly may express the result or the spirit: as, scholarly tastes. See ignorant.

learnedly (lēr'ned-li), adv. In a learned manner; with learning or erudition; with skill: as, to discuss a question learnedly.

learnedness (lēr'ned-nes), n. The state of being learned; erudition.

The act of acquiring knowledge.—2. Systematic knowledge; the information gained from books and instruction; education in general: as, a branch of learning; a low state of learning.

The routes of learninge most bytter we deme;
The fruites at last moste pleasant doth seme.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 340.

A little learning is a dangerous thing.
Pope, Essay on Criticism, l. 215.

3. Specifically, profound or extensive literary and scientific culture; erudition: as, a man of learning.

What shall become of that commonwealth or church in the end which hath not the eye of learning to beautify, guide, and direct it?
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

No power of combining, arranging, discerning,
Digested the masses he learned into learning.
Lowell, Fable for Critics.

4. That which is learned by study of or application to a particular subject; special knowledge or skill: as, to be deeply versed in the learning of an art or a profession; military or mercantile learning.

Puts to him all the learnings that his time Could make him the receiver of.
Shak., Cymbeline, I. 1. 43.

I once did hold it, as our statistes do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 35.

The New Learning, the development in England, in the sixteenth century, of the Italian Renaissance. It was led by Colet, Erasmus, Warham, and More.

2. To take a lease of, or to tako, as lands, etc., by a lease: as, he leased the farm from the proprietor. = Syn. Let, Rent, etc. See hire¹.

lease² (lēz), n. [*< ME. *lese, < AF. lese, lees, leez, OF. laiz, lays, laiz, leis, les, leez, leez, m. (AL. reflex lessa), a lease, also (F. legs), a thing left by will, a legacy; cf. OF. laisse, lesse, f., a present; from the verb. Cf. lease⁵, leash, of the same ult. origin.] 1. A contract transferring a right to the possession and enjoyment of real property for life or for a definite period of time or at will, usually made in consideration of a periodical compensation called rent, in modern times usually payable in money, but sometimes in a share of the produce, and in former times frequently in services. The grantor or landlord is called the lessor, the grantee the lessee. The act of the grantor is called a demise; the right of the grantee is called the term; his holding under it is called a tenancy. The right of the lessor to have possession again at the end of the term, or sooner in case of forfeiture, is called the reversion. If the grantor has only a term and grants the whole of it, the contract is not technically a lease, but even if in the form of a lease, is deemed only an assignment. If the grantor of a term retains any reversion, even for a single day, the contract is a lease. A contract not transferring a right of possession, but merely contemplating that such right shall be transferred in the future, is not a lease, but an agreement for a lease. A contract transferring such a right to commence in enjoyment at a future day—as, for instance, one executed in February to give possession in May—is a lease; but the right of the lessee for the intervening period before the term is an interesse termini. The word lease is sometimes loosely applied to a letting of personal property.

2. The written instrument by which a leasehold estate is created. The word is also loosely applied to oral contracts of letting, which, however, are made void by the statute of frauds unless for a term not exceeding one year.

One air gave both their lease of breath. Lovell, To Holmes on his Birthday.

3. The duration of tenure by lease; a term of leasing; hence, the terminable time or period of anything: as, to take property on a long lease; a short lease of life.

In this laziness she [the soul] sleeps out her lease, her term of life, in this death, in this grave. Donne, Sermons, xvii.

His life is but a three days' lease. Lord Maxwell's Goodnight (Child's Ballads, VI. 168).

Custodian lease. See custodiam.—Emphyteutic lease. Same as bail à longues années (which see, under bail).—Improving lease. See improving, n.—Lease and release, a form of conveyance, now disused, but in common use in England and its American colonies in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, devised to avoid the statute of enrolments, which then required conveyances to be recorded, by taking advantage of the rule that a tenant in possession could take a release without any such act of notoriety.

lease³, a. and n. [< ME. lees, les, leas, loose, false, < AS. leas, loose, false: see loose, a., which has taken the place of the more orig. leasc (ME. lees).] 1. a. False; lying; deceptive.

leat¹ (lēst), adv. superl. [< ME. lest, last, < AS. læst, contr. of læst, læscst, lærest, adv., superl. of læs, less: see less¹.] In the smallest or lowest degree; in a degree below all others: as, to reward those who leat deserve it.

With what I most enjoy contented leat. Shak., Sonnets, xxix.

leat², conj. An obsolete spelling of *lest*¹.

leatways (lēst'wāz), adv. At least: an obsolete or colloquial form of leatwise.

There being . . . no two birds in the hand worth one in the bush, as is well known—leatways in a contrary sense, which the meaning is the same. Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, xxxvii.

At leatways, at least.

At leat weies, I finde this opinion confirmed by a prettie deulse or embleme that Laelianus allegeth he saw. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 118.

leatwise (lēst'wīz), adv. [< leat¹ + -wise.] At least: formerly used with at, with the same force. [Now only colloq.]

I have from Time to Time employ'd divers of my best Friends to get my Liberty, at leatwise leave to go abroad upon Bail. Howell, Letters, II. 61.

leasy (lē'zi), a. [< lease³, a., + -y.] Counterfeit; fallacious; misleading. [Rare.]

For studying theretie to make everie thing straight and easie, in smoothing and playning all things to much, never leaveth, whiles the sense itselfe be lefte both lowse and leate. Acham, The Scholmaster, II.

leat¹, leat² (lēt), n. [Appar., like lade², lode¹, ult. connected with AS. lædan, lead: see lead¹.] 1. A meeting of cross-roads. Halliwell.—2. A watercourse or a trench for conveying water to engine- or mill-wheels. Pryce, 1778. [Cornwall and Devonshire, Eng.] See the quotations.

Plymouth Leat. This artificial brook is taken out of the river Mew, towards its source at the foot of Sheepston Tor in a wild mountain dell. Leat, Late, or Lake, as it is sometimes pronounced, is perhaps a corruption of lead or conductor, being applied, I believe, to any artificial channel for conducting water.

Marshall, Rural Economy of W. of Eng., II. 269.

Drake is connected with the modern life of Plymouth by his construction of the leat, or water-course through which the town is still supplied from the river Meavy, Worth, Hist. Devonshire (Elliot Stock, 1886), p. 210.

I have a project to bring down a leat of fair water from the hill-tops right into Plymouth town.

Kingsley, Westward Ho, xlv.

leat² (lēt), v. i. [Cf. leak.] To leak; pour. Halliwel, [Prov. Eng.]

leath¹ (lēth), a. A dialectal variant of lithe.

leath² (lēth), a. A dialectal variant of loath.

leather (lēth'ēr), n. and a. [Early mod. E. lether, < ME. lether, < AS. lether (only in comp.)

= OFries. lether, leder, līder, leer = D. leder, leer = MLG. leder, LG. leder, tier = OHG. MHG. G. leder = Icel. lethr = Dan. leder, lær

= Sw. läder, leather; not found native outside of Teut. The W. lether, Bret. leer, ler, are of E. or LG. origin.] I. n. 1. The tanned, tawed, or otherwise dressed skin of an animal; dressed hides or skins collectively. The peculiar character of leather is due to the chemical combination of tannin in the process of tanning, or of tannin and vegetable extractive matter (or else of some mineral or earthy base), with gelatin as contained in animal skin; its physical characteristics, such as flexibility, tensile strength, color, and durability, are more or less modified by the processes subsequent to the chemical, and included in the various operations of currying and dressing. In commercial and popular usage leather does not include skins dressed with the hair or fur on; such skins are usually distinguished by compounding the word skin with the name of the animal from which they are taken: as, sealskin, bearskin, otter-skin, etc. In the untanned state skins valued for their fur, hair, or wool, and destined to be tawed and dressed for furriers' and analogous uses, are called pelts or peltry. In England the term pelts is applied to all untanned skins. The term skin has also certain applications relating to leather which seem to follow no rule, but are sanctioned by general usage: thus, leathers made from the skins of kids, dogs, sheep, pigs, and calves, and in general from the skins of all small domestic and of many wild animals, are distinguished by the names of the animals: as, dogskin, sheepskin, pigskin, calfskin, buckskin, or deerskin. Buffalo leather is an exception to this usage. (See buff, 2.) In general, leather made from skins of adult bovine domestic animals is called cowhide, and that made from skins of horses is called horsehide. The tanned skins of large animals, either wild or domestic, are distinguished by the word hide with the name of the animal from which the skin was taken prefixed, except when the skin has the fur or hair left upon it: as, rhinoceros-hide, hippopotamus-hide, buffalo-hide (tanned with hair removed); leopard-skin, buffalo-skin (tanned or tawed with hair or fur on). Leather made from the skins of alligators and aquatic animals is, however, generally called skin with the name of the animal prefixed: as, alligator-skin, shark-skin, etc. (See also shagreen.) The outer side of the skin both before and after tanning is called the grain side, or simply the grain; the opposite side is called the lesh side.

2. Human skin. [Ironical or ludicrous.] His body, active as his mind. Retaining sound in limb and wind Except some leather lost behind. Swift, To the Earl of Peterborough.

3. A round piece of tanned hide on the end of a fish-hook, designed to keep the bait from sliding up on the line.—4. The loose hanging part of a dog's ear.

The ears of the dog [the Irish water-spaniel] should be long, and so broad in the leather that they will meet across the nose. Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 425.

Alum leather, tawed leather.—American leather, a kind of varnished or enameled cloth prepared in imitation of leather, used for covering chairs, sofas, etc.—Avignon leather, embossed leather, colored and gilded, used for wall-decoration and for covering furniture: made at Avignon in the seventeenth century, and in all respects similar to that made for the same purpose in Spain.—Basan leather, bark-dyed sheepskin, used in making slippers, etc.—Boiled leather. See cuir-bouilli.—Buff-leather. See buff, 2.—Bullock-leather. Same as cowhide.—Chamois leather. See chamois, 2.—Chrome-leather, leather in which bichromate of potassa solution is used as a steep, the bichromate being by reaction with protosulphate of iron subsequently reduced in the tissue to sesquioxide of chromium.—Cordovan leather. Same as cordwain.—Danish leather, leather prepared by tanning sheep-, goat-, kid-, and lamb-skins with willow-bark. It is strong, supple, and bright-colored, and is used chiefly for gloves.—Enameled leather, leather usually split and coated on one side with varnish, giving it a surface less lustrous than that of patent leather.—Fair leather, leather not artificially colored.—Grained leather. Same as grain-leather.—Harness-leather, bark-tanned leather dressed specially for harness-making. Instead of the ordinary dubbing, the hardest tallow is used for the stuffing, and a great deal of labor is expended upon it with the stockstone and slicker to produce the desired smooth finish on the grain side.—Hogs' leather. Same as hog-skin.—Hungarian leather, a white leather originally brought from Hungary, prepared by a peculiar process similar to tawing, after which it is softened by the application of oil and heat.—Japanned leather. Same as patent leather.—Kip-leather, leather made from the skins of half-grown cattle.—Lace-leather. See whang-leather.—Lacquered leather. Same as patent leather.—Leather appliqué, decorative work made by sewing pieces of kid or other thin leather of different colors on a surface, as of cloth, and completing the design by borders, scrolls, etc., either of cord or of embroidery-stitching.—Leather-punching machine, a machine for punching leather, in which the action of both the punch and the die is automatic. A cam-wheel and winch actuate the die-stock and the punch, the cam-wheel having a spring attachment which compensates for varying thicknesses of the leather. The leather is fed by hand to the machine.—Leather-splitting machine, a machine for dividing leather into two thicknesses. See split leather.—Leather-stripping machine, a machine by which binding-leather is marked with stripes for shoe-binding.—Leather-stripping machine, a machine for cutting sides of leather into strips of uniform width, from which soles and heels are afterward punched. E. H. Knight.—Leather-washer tool, cutter, or machine, a device for cutting washers from leather. One form resembles the ordinary carpenter's brace and annular bit, having two cutters adjustable in relation with the center of the bit. Leather washers are often cut with circular hollow punches.—Morocco leather. See morocco.—Oiled leather, leather prepared by any process in which oil is an important ingredient.—Oil goat-leather, oiled goatskin.—Pannonia leather. Same as leather-cloth.—Patent leather, leather having a finely varnished surface, prepared from thick leather specially tanned for the purpose. The varnish (technically called sweetmeat) is applied in coats with intermediate drying in a steam-heated oven, and smoothing between the applications. Lined-oil and coloring materials, which may be black or white, etc., are the chief ingredients of the varnish. Also japanned leather, lacquered leather.—Pebble-grained goat-leather, goatskin grained in an irregular manner, as though numerous small pebbles of different sizes had been pressed upon its surface.—Russet leather. (a) Leather finished except coloring and polishing. (b) Leather finished for use without artificial coloring, as that of which shoes are made for use in hot weather. Hence—(c) Leather slightly colored, tinged red or yellowish-brown, for use in the same way.—Russia leather, a fine leather prepared in Russia, and imitated elsewhere, by very careful willow-bark tanning, dyeing with sanders-wood, and soaking in birch-oil. It is of a brownish-red color, and has a peculiar and characteristic odor.—Spanish leather, russet and other uncolored leather of the weight and quality used for boots.—Split leather, leather split by a machine. Two thicknesses are thus obtained, either of which may be used, which are better adapted for some uses than the full thickness. The inner layer, of very inferior quality, is used for trunk-covers and similar purposes, and is sometimes finished and used for cheap boots and shoes. Occasionally, however, splitting is done only to secure an even thickness in the outer part, when the operation is more properly called skiving.—Transparent leather, raw hide treated with alum and glycerin, and thus rendered more or less translucent.—Twisted leather, oiled leather twisted from strips into a cord-like form for straps or bands, used with grooved pulleys and for other purposes.—Vegetable leather, a material composed of india-rubber spread upon linen according to a patent process, very tough, and capable of being made of any thickness by additional layers of linen covered and cemented with the india-rubber. It is made in long rolls. Ure, Dict.—Whang-leather, tough leather used for cutting into narrow strips, such as laces, crackers for whips, and small straps. Also called lace-leather.—White leather, tawed leather: so called because the natural color is not darkened by the process, as is the case with tanned leather.

II. a. Consisting of leather; leathern: as, a leather glove.

The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 13.

Leather armor, armor made of leather rendered first flexible and easily shaped and afterward hard by soaking in hot water, or boiling, pressing, and beating. (Compare cuir-bouilli.) Such armor was much used for defense in addition to the hauberk, greaves, arm-guards, etc., being worn over the link-mail. Helmets also were often made of this material.—Leather belting, leather first shaved to an even thickness, and then cut into strips of definite width which are chamfered off and riveted and cemented together at the ends to form one long piece. The piece thus formed is prepared for market by winding it into a coil like a ribbon. It is used for the straps or belts of pulleys, etc., in machinery.

leather (lēth'ēr), v. [Cf. leather, n.] I. trans. 1. To furnish with leather; apply leather to; form into leather; tan.

Then, if you bring a liver not entirely leathered and lungs not over half consumed.

S. Bowles, Our New West, p. 444.

Taking a green seal skin, we put a foot on it and cut around it, sew up the heel, and run a string round the toe, which draws it up, and tie it on the instep. By walking it becomes leathered and soft to the foot.

Fishes of U. S., v. ii. 435.

2. To beat or thrash with or as with a thong of leather. [Colloq.]

If you think I could carry my point, I would so whinge and leather my lambkin.

Foote, Mayor of Garrat, 1.

I gave Spouncer a black eye, I know—that's what he got by wanting to leather me.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, p. 34.

Leave off, and for another summons wait.

Roscommon, Translated Verse, l. 309.

So soon as we have dined, we will down again to the little house: where I will begin, at the place I left off, about fly-fishing.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 251.

leave¹ (lêv), n. [*leave*¹, v.] A leaving; something left or remaining.

Then he's taen up the little boy [from the side of his dead mother].

Rowed him in his gown sleeve;
Said, "Tho' your father's to my loss,
Your mother 'a to me leave."

Birth of Robin Hood (Child's Ballads, V. 395).

leave² (lêv), n. [ME. leve, leaf, < AS. leaf, permission, = D. -lof in urlof, permission, = MHG. loube, G. laube, also -laub in ur-laub, verlaub, permission, = Icel. lof (also lof), permission, = Dan. lov = Sw. lof, permission, a secondary noun, in relation with loaf, dear, gelifan, believe; see leaf, belief, believe, leave.] 1. Liberty granted to do something, or for some specific action or course of conduct; permission; allowance; license.

Your commandment to kepe to kare forthe y caste me,
My lorde, with your leue, no lenger y lette yowe.

York Plays, p. 274.

In this banishment, I must take leave to say you are unjust.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, i. 1.

O! Liberty is a fine thing, Flippanta; it's a great Help in Conversation to have leave to say what one will.

Vanbrugh, Confederacy, i.

Specifically—2. Liberty to depart; permission to be absent: as, to take leave. See below.

Hath he set me any day
Agene that ihc me grethi may,
And nyme tyme of mine keneamen,
And myne friend that with me been?

King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.

Furloughed men returned in large numbers, and before their leaves had terminated.
N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 93.

Absent with leave, absent without leave. See absent.—By leave, or by leave of court, in law, having sanction from the court or a judge for the taking of a proceeding; sometimes required to be had in advance to prevent vexatious proceedings, as in the case of a leave to sue in a recent judgment of the same court; or for the better protection of the person asking it, as in the case of a receiver about to bring a suit who will not be charged with costs in case of a failure if he obtains leave to sue.—Leave of absence. See absence.—On leave. See furlough.—To break leave (naut.). See break.—To catch leave. See catch.—To take French leave. See French.—To take leave. (a) To receive (assume) permission: as, I take leave to consider the matter settled. Especially—(b) Originally, to receive formal permission, as from a superior, to depart; now, to part with some expression of farewell; bid farewell or adieu.

And Paul . . . took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria.
Acts xviii. 18.

Hah! old Rowley! egad, you are just come in time to take leave of your old acquaintance.

Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 1.

= Syn. Leave, Liberty, License. These words imply that the permission granted may be used or not. Leave is the lightest, is generally personal, and is used on familiar occasions. Liberty is more often connected with more important matters; it indicates full freedom, and perhaps that obstacles are completely cleared from the path. License, primarily the state of being permitted by law, may retain this meaning (as, license to sell intoxicating drinks), or it may go so far as to mean that unlawful or undue advantage is taken of legal permission or social forbearance: as, liberty easily degenerates into license.

leave² (lêv), v. t.; pret. and pp. left, ppr. leaving. [ME. leven, < AS. lifjan, lifan, permit, also in comp. alifjan, gelifjan, permit (= OHG. ir-louben, ar-louben, ar-lauban, er-laupan, er-louben, MHG. er-louben, G. er-lauben = Icel. leyfa = Goth. us-laubjan, permit), < leaf, permission; see *leave*², n.] To give leave to; permit; allow; let; grant.

God lete it be my best

To telle it the.
Chaucer, Troilus, l. 597.

[The Middle English form leve (that is, as usually written, leve) is often confounded in manuscripts and early printed editions with lene, to grant, lend.

He [God] knoweth what is covenable to every wyht and leueth [var. leneth] hem that he wot that is covenable to hem.
Chaucer, Boethius, iv. prose 6.]

Whether Esau were a vassal I leave the reader to judge.

Locke.

[The verb *leave*², permit, allow, is generally confused with *leave*¹, permit to remain, quit, etc., from which, however, it differs in construction. *Leave*² is now generally followed by an indirect object of the person, and an infinitive with to: as, I leave you to decide. In vulgar speech leave is often used for let without to: as, leave me be; leave me go.]

leave³ (lêv), v. i.; pret. and pp. leaved, ppr. leaving. [*leaf*¹, n.] Same as leaf.

And after all an army strong she leav'd,

To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd.
Spenser, F. Q., II. x. 31.

leaved (lêvd), a. Having a leaf or leaves, in any sense of that word; made with leaves or folds: used in composition: as, a two-leaved gate. Also leafed.

This ruddy shine issued from the great dining-room, whose two-leaved door stood open, and showed a genial fire in the grate.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

A double hill ran up his furrowy forka
Beyond the thick-leaved platans of the vale.

Tennyson, Princcas, iii.

leaveless¹ (lêv'les), a. [*leave*², n., + -less.] Without leave. [Rare.]

leaven² (lêv'n), n. [Formerly also leven, levin; < ME. leuain, leuain, < OF. leuain, F. leuain = Pr. leuain, < ML. leuamen (also, in reflection of the OF., levanum; also levanimentum), leaven, < L. levamen, that which raises, an alleviation, < levare, raise: see *levy*¹.] 1. A substance that produces or is designed to produce fermentation, especially in dough; specifically, a mass of fermenting dough, which, mixed with a larger quantity of dough or paste, produces fermentation in it and renders it light.

He is the leuene of the bred,
Whiche soureth alle the paste aboute.

Gower.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

Mat. xiii. 33.

2. Something that resembles leaven in its effects, as some secret or impalpable influence working a general change, especially a change for the worse.

Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

So then, Posthumus,

Will lay the leaven on all proper men;
Goody and gallant shall be false and perjured,
From thy great fail.

Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 64.

leaven² (lêv'n), v. t. [*leaven*², n.] 1. To excite fermentation in; raise and make light, as dough or paste.

A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

1 Cor. v. 6.

2. To imbue; work upon by some invisible or powerful influence.

Beware, ye that are magistrates, their sin doth leaven you all.

Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

lecythi, n. Plural of lecythus.

Lecythidaceae (lĕ'si-thi-dā'sĕ-ĕ), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1845), < Lecythis (-id-) + -aceae.] In Lindley's later system, an order of plants under his "alliance" Myrtales, typified by the genus Lecythis, nearly equivalent to the present tribe Lecythideae.

Lecythideae (lĕ-si-thid'ĕ-ĕ), n. pl. [NL. (Richard, 1825), < Lecythis (-id-) + -eae.] A tribe of myrtaceous plants, typified by the genus Lecythis. It embraces 10 genera and about 135 species, chiefly tropical American trees. It was regarded by Lindley (1833) as an order, by Endlicher and others as a suborder.

Lecythis (lĕ'si-this), n. [NL., so called in allusion to the shape of the seed-vessels, < LL. lecythus, < Gr. λῆκυθος, an oil-vase.] A genus of South American trees of the order Myrtaceae, tribe Lecythideae. It is distinguished by the woody and operculate subglobose fruit, and the thick and fleshy entire embryo. About 65 species are known, trees of large size, 80 feet or more in height. The Sapucaia-nuts of the market are the seeds of L. Zabucaya, those of L. Ollaria being sometimes called by the same name. The seed-vessels of several species are known as monkey-pots, and are sometimes used in turnery. The thin layers of the bark of L. Ollaria are used by the Indians, under the name of kakarali, as wrappers for cigarettes. See Sapucaia-nut and kakarali.

lecythoid (lĕ'si-thoid), a. [Gr. λῆκυθος, an oil-vase, + eidōs, shape.] Resembling a lecythus in any way. Sometimes lekythoid.

lecythus (lĕ'si-thus), n.; pl. lecythi (-thi). [LL. lecythus, < Gr. λῆκυθος, an oil-vase.] In archeol. a small oil- or perfume-vase of ancient Greece, of tall and graceful proportions and narrow neck, used in the toilet.

Vases of this form abound, decorated in the usual styles with black or red figures. In Attica a particular class of the lecythus was used, especially in funeral rites. The neck and the foot of these Attic lecythi are covered with a brilliant black varnish, and the intervening part has a clear white ground, upon which are drawn with a brown outline figures and designs, often of remarkable delicacy and elegance, which, unlike nearly all other examples of Greek vase-painting, are frequently filled out with bright and naturalistic colors. Also lekythos.

Attic Lecythis.

led¹ (led). Preterit and past participle of lead¹.

led¹ (led), p. a. Under leading or control: as, a led captain, friend, horse (see phrases below): specifically applied to a landed possession not occupied by the owner or by the person who rents it, or a district ruled over by deputy: as, a led farm, etc.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4.

4†. A commission-agent; a name formerly given to a Londoner who bought coals of the country colliers at so much a sack, and made his chief profit by using smaller sacks, making pretense he was a country collier. This was termed legering. Nares.

II. † a. 1. Lying in a certain place; laid; laid up; stationary; fixed.

For humours to lie leidyger they are seen Off in a tavern, and a bowling-green.

Randolph, Poems.

It happened that a stage-player borrowed a rusty musket, which had been long leiger in his shop.

Fuller, Worthies, London.

2. Resident, as an ambassador.

You have dealt discreetly, to obtain the presence
Of all the grave leiger ambassadors
To hear Victoria's trial.

Webster, White Devil.

Return not thou, but leiger stay behind,
And move the Greekish prince to send us aid.

Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, l. 70.

ledger², a. See leger².

ledger-bait (lej'ér-bät), n. A bait fixed or made to remain in one place, used in fishing.

You may fish for a Pike either with a ledger or a walking bait; and you are to note that I call that a Ledger-bait which is fixed or made to rest in one certain place when you shall be absent from it; and I call that a Walking-bait which you take with you, and have ever in motion.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 135.

ledger-blade (lej'ér-bläd), n. In cloth-shearing machines, the fixed straight-edged blade which co-acts with a spiral blade or blades on a revolving cylinder, upon the principle of a shears, and which trims off so much of the nap from cloth as to reduce it to a uniform length and give an even surface to the fabric.

ledger-book (lej'ér-bük), n. [Formerly also leger-book, ligier-book; < ledger¹ + book.] A book that lies or is kept in a fixed place. Specifically—(a) A monastic cartulary. Hallivell. (b) A book of accounts—now usually ledger. See ledger¹, n., 2.

I find in the said ligier booke a note of the sayd Fymys, of all such goods as he left.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 98.

This ledger-book lies in the brain behind,
Like Janus eye, which in his poll was set.

Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, xxi.

ledging (lej'ing), n. [ledge¹ + -ing¹.] A ledge; also, ledges collectively. [Rare.]

ledgment (lej'ment), n. [ledge¹ + -ment.] In arch.: (a) A course of horizontal moldings, as the base-moldings of a building. (b) The development of the surface of any solid on a plane, so that the dimensions of its different sides may readily be obtained. Also ledgement, and formerly liggement, legement.

ledgment-table (lej'ment-tä'bl), n. In arch., the projecting part of a plinth. Compare earth-table.

ledgy (lej'i), a. [ledge¹ + -y¹.] Abounding in ledges.

Ledidæ (led'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Leda + -idæ.] A family of dimyarian bivalve mollusks.

Beaked Nutshell (Leda borealis).

The mantle-margin is freely open; the siphonal tubes are elongate, retractile, and more or less united; the gills are narrow and plume-like; the labial palps are appendiculate and elongate; the foot is compressed and deeply grooved; the shell is pearly within and oblong; the hinge has numerous transverse teeth; and the ligament is either external or internal. The Ledidæ are called beaked nutshells. About 80 species are known as inhabitants of the cold and temperate seas.

ledon-gum (lê'don-gum), n. [Gr. λήδων, < Pers. lādān, an Oriental shrub, + E. gum: see ladanum.] The ladanum derived from Cistus Ledon.

Ledum (lê'dum), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < Gr. λήδων, ladanum: see ladanum.] A genus of Ericaceous plants of the tribe Rhodorceae. It is characterized by a 5-toothed calyx and a 5-celled pod which contains many small thin seeds having a loose coat. The plants are low shrubs with white flowers, and entire, more or less fringed leaves. There are about 4 or 5 species, inhabiting the colder and arctic regions of the northern hemisphere, commonly known as Labrador tea. The leaves of L. latifolium are said to have been used in the colonies for tea during the war of independence. L. palustre, called marsh-tea and wild rosemary, was formerly used in northern Europe in malt liquors, and is said to be turned to account in Russia for tanning. The genus also occurs in a fossil state.—Ledum-oil, oil of Ledum, an essential oil distilled from L. palustre.

lee¹ (lê), n. and a. [ME. lee, le, shelter, < AS. hlêo, a contr. form of hleôic, a covering, shelter, > ME. lew, E. dial. lew, shelter: see lee¹. In the naut. sense lee (like D. lij = G. lee) is of Scand. origin: leel. hlê = Dan. le = Sw. lij, lee (of a ship); but cf. leeward in the 2d prou., as if spelled leeward. The adj. in def. 2 is peculiar to Sc. (also spelled lei, lie), and may be of diff. origin.] I. n. 1. Shelter.

Thenne he lurkka & laytes where watz te best.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), iii. 277.

2. The quarter toward which the wind blows, as opposed to that from which it proceeds; also, the shelter afforded by an object interposed which keeps off the wind; almost exclusively a nautical term.

Though sorely buffeted by ev'ry sea,
Our hull unbroken long may try a lee.
Falconer, Shipwreck, II.

Away the good ship flies, and leaves
Old England on the lee.
A. Cunningham, A Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea.

To lay or bring (a ship) by the lee. See bring.—Under the lee (naut.), on that side which is sheltered from the wind; on the side opposite to that against which the wind blows; in a position protected from the wind; under shelter: as, under the lee of a ship or of the land.

Swiftly they glided along, close under the lee of the island.
Longfellow, Evangeline, II. 2.

II. a. 1. Naut., of or pertaining to the part or side toward which the wind blows, or which is sheltered from the wind: opposed to weather: as, the lee side of a vessel.

Cachit hom with cables & castyng of ancores,
And logget hom to lunge in that le hauny.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 4675.

2. Lonely. [Scotcl.].—Lee lurch. See lurch¹.—Lee shore, the shore under the lee of a ship, or that toward which the wind blows.—Lee tide, a tide running in the same direction as the wind is blowing.

lee², n. An obsolete form of lee¹.

lee³ (lê), v. and n. A dialectal (Scotcl.) form of lie².

lee⁴ (lê), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of lye³.

lee⁵ (lê), n. [Early mod. E. lye (in pl. lyes), < ME. lie, pl. lies, < OF. F. lie = Pg. lia, < ML. lia, pl. liu, lees, the sediment in wine; origin unknown.] The grosser part of any liquor which has settled on the bottom of a vessel; dregs; sediment: as, the lees of wine: usually in the plural, lees, which is sometimes treated as a singular.

With tarrere or gymiet perce ye vpward the pipe ashore,
And so shalls ye not cawse the lees vp to ryse, y warne ye euer more.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 121.

I will drink
Life to the lees.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

lee-board (lê'bôrd), n. [= G. leeboard = leel. hlê-bordli; as lee¹ + board.] One of two long flat pieces of wood attached one on each side of a flat-bottomed vessel (as a Dutch galiot) by a bolt on which it traverses. When the vessel is close-hauled the board on the lee side is let down, reaching below the keel, and when the ship is listed over by the wind it resists the tendency to drift too fast to leeward.

Dutch Galiot, with Lee-boards.

lee-bow (lê'bou), v. t. [lee bow, the lee side of the bow.] 1. Naut., to run ahead and get underneath the lee bow of: as, to lee-bow a vessel while fishing. Hence—2. To take advantage of in any way: as, to lee-bow one in trade. [Colloq.]

leech¹ (lēch), n. [Also leach; < ME. leech, leche, < AS. læcc (rarely, and irreg., læra) (= OFries. leka, letza, leisca = OHG. lāhhi, lāchi = Dan. læge = Goth. lēkeis), a physician (cf. leel. lak-nir, Sw. läkare, a physician, from the associated verbs); perhaps < AS. læc, a medicine, lit. 'something given' (cf. dose, of same sense), a particular use of læc, a gift, present, offering, sacrifice, also a battle, struggle, < læcan, play, dance (see lake²); but læc, a medicine, may be of diff. origin. Cf. Ir. laig, a physician, O.Bulg. lekŭ, medicine, lekari, a physician, etc. In another view, not at all probable, the word læcc is supposed to have been orig. associated directly with the notion of 'daucing,' with ref. to the magical formulas of primitive leechcraft. Hence leech², n.] A physician; a medical practitioner; a professor of the art of healing. [Now chiefly poetical.]

For whose liste have helyngs of his leech,
To hym behoveth first unwry his wounde.

Chaucer, Troilus, l. 857.

Make war breed peace, make peace stint war, make each Prescribe to other as each other's leech.

Shak., T. of A., v. 4. 84.

leech¹ (lēch), r. t. [ME. leechen, leechen = Dan. læge = Sw. läka, heal; also, with formative -n, ME. lechnien, < AS. læcnian, læcman = leel. lækna = Goth. leiknōn, heal; from the noun, AS. læcc, etc., a physician: see leech¹, n.] To treat with medicaments; heal; doctor.

Lame men he leechede with lungen of bestes.

Piers Plowman (C), ix. 189.

Let these leech his wounds for whose sake he encountere them.

Scott.

leech² (lēch), n. [ME. leche, < AS. læcc (= MD. læcke), a leech (the worm so named), a particular use (not found in other languages) of leech¹, with ref. to the medicinal value of these worms: see leech¹.] 1. An aquatic, more or less parasitic, and blood-sucking worm; a suctorial or discephorous annelid of the order Hirudinea. There are several families, many genera, and numerous species of these worms. Most of them live in fresh-water ponds and streams, some in moist herbage, and a few in the sea. The body is segmented as in other annelids, but the cross-ridges on the surface are only superficial, and do not correspond to the anatomical segmentation. There is a sucker at each end of the body, that at the head end being armed a, mouth; b, b, sacculation of alimentary canal; c, anus; d, terminal sucker; e, central ganglia; f, f, chain of postesophageal ganglia; g, g, segmental organs.

with biting jaws. The body is usually flattened, broadest toward the tail, but tapering to each end; the color is generally dark, variously mottled, striped, or dotted with lighter or brighter color. The ordinary medicinal leech belongs to a genus known as Hirudo or Sanguinaria, in which there are three jaws in the form of small white serrated teeth which inflict the peculiar tripartite leech-bite. The common brown, speckled, or English leech is H. or S. medicinalis (officinalis), of which the Hungarian green or official leech, H. or S. officinalis, is a variety. The European horse-leech is Harmogis sanguisorba. Another species, Avalostoma gabo, is also called horse-leech. Some leeches attain a length of 2½ feet, as Macrobdella valdiviana. Macrobdella decora is an American leech. Ichthyobdella punctata is a leech found on the whitefish in the Great Lakes. Leeches are used in medicine to extract blood by sucking it.

2. Figuratively, one who, as it were, sucks the blood or steals the substance of his victim, or persistently holds on for sordid gain.—Artificial leech, or mechanical leech, a small cupping instrument used for drawing blood.

leech² (lēch), r. t. [leech², n.] To apply leeches to, for the purpose of bleeding.

leech³ (lēch), n. [Also leach; not found in ME.; < leel. lik, a leech-line, = Dan. lig = Sw. lik, a bolt-rope, = MD. lyken, a bolt-rope; further origin obscure.] Naut., the perpendicular or sloping edge of a sail. In fore-and-aft sails only the after edge is called the leech, the forward edge being called the luff.

leech⁴, r. and n. See leach².

leechcraft (lēch'kräft), n. [Also leechcraft; < ME. leche-craft, < AS. læcc-craft, the art of medicine, a medicine, < læcc, a leech, physician, + craft, craft.] 1. The art of healing. [Archaic.]

We study speech, but others we persuade;
We leech-craft learn, but others cure with it.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, Int.

2†. Medical attendance.

My leche craft and fesyk, and rewardys to them that have kept me and condyt me to London, hath cost me sythe Estern Day more than v li.
Paston Letters, III. 7.

leechdom (lēch'dum), n. [ME. lechedom, < AS. læccdom (= OHG. lāchintuom, lāhitoam, lāhtuam, lāhtōm, MHG. lāchenduom, lāchentuom = leel. lakidōmr = Dan. lægedom), medicine, a medicine, < læcc, physician, leech, + dōm, law, jurisdiction: see leech¹ and -dom.] 1. Medicine.—2. A medicine; a medical formula. [Obsolete or archaic in both uses.]

Some of these charms are of Eastern origin, many are found in Greek and Latin writers, many are Scandinavian, and one, at least, is given as Gaelic. They are leechdoms, and not witchcraft, at least in name; and from their frequent use of Holy Writ they evidently had priestly sanction.
N. and Q., 7th ser., III. 278.

leech-eater (lēch'ē'tēr), n. A kind of plover found in Egypt, either Hoplopterus spinosus or Pluvianellus aegyptius.

leecher (lē'chēr), n. [leech², v., + -er¹.] One who applies leeches in the treatment of disease; one who lets blood.

leech-fee (lēch'fē), n. A physician's fee. [Rare.]

leech-gaiters (lēch'gā'tērz), n. pl. Closely woven gaiters worn as a protection from land-leeches in Ceylon.

The coffee planters, who live among these pests, are obliged to envelop their legs in leech-gaiters.
Sir J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, p. 303.

leeching (lē'ching), n. [< ME. lechyng, lechyng, < AS. lætung, usually lætung, lænung, leeching, < lænician, lænan, leech: see leech¹, v.] Medical treatment.

He sangurd with leeching long tyme after.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10223.

leech-line (lēch'lin), n. A rope fastened to the leech of a square sail, by which the sail is hauled close up to the yard. Also teach-line.

leechman (lēch'man), n. [Also teachman; < ME. lechman; < leech¹ + man.] A physician; a leech.

Off have I scene an easie soone-curde ill,
By times process, surpass the leechman's skill.
Remedy of Love, a Poem, 1602, B2, apud Capell. (Nares.)

leech-rope (lēch'rōp), n. That part of the bolt-rope of a sail which is sewed to the leeches.

lee-clue (lē'klō), v. t. [< lee¹ + clue, v.] To clue up the lee side of (a sail).

leed¹, v. An obsolete form of lead¹.

leed², n. and v. An obsolete form of lead².

leed³, n. An obsolete form of lead³.

leedet, n. See leed³.

leef¹, n. An obsolete spelling of leaf.

leef², a. An obsolete spelling of leaf.

leefang (lē'fang), n. [Appar. < lee¹ + fang.]

Naut., a rope passed through the clue of a jib, to hold it amidships while lacing on the bonnet.
